The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark finding it expedient to extend the time within which may be exchanged the ratifications of the treaty providing for the cession to the United States of the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix in the West Indies, signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Washington on January 24, 1902, have for that purpose appointed their respective plenipotentiaries as follows:

The President of the United States of America, John Hay, Secretary of State of the United States, and

His Majesty the King of Denmark, M. Constantine Brun, Commander of Dannebrog and decorated with the cross of the same order, His Majesty's Chamberlain and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington.

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following amendatory article.

Sole Article

The time fixed by Article VII of the Treaty of January 24, 1902, between the United States and Denmark providing for the cession to the United States of the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix in the West Indies, within which the ratifications of the said Treaty shall be exchanged, is hereby prolonged for a period of twelve months from July 24, 1902.

DEAR MR. BRUN: I enclose a memorandum as to the matter we conversed about some days ago.

[Inclosure—Memorandum]

In case of judgments rendered by the Courts in the Danish West Indies and from which appeals shall have been taken to the Supreme Court of Denmark before the cession of the Islands to the United States, the Department is of the opinion that the latter court could not, in the absence of a treaty authorizing it, exercise jurisdiction to enforce its judgment within the United States as foreign territory; nor in such circumstances could the United States Courts enforce whatever judgment might be rendered by said Appellate Court.

In all cases where no such appeal was taken to the Danish Supreme Court, before the cession, it would not lie after the cession either to said Court or to any of the United States Courts, until the Congress has enacted appropriate legislation authorizing it. But the Congress does customarily pass such laws in such cases.

Treaty ceding Danish West Indies unexpectedly failed ratification Landstthing to-day tie vote, 32 to 32, one not voting.

No. 280

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, October 28, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cablegram of the 22d instant, as follows: [Printed ante]

As reported in my Nos. 270 and 274, dated Aug. 18 and Sept. 6 last, respectively, the autumn elections to the Landstthing resulted in a victory for the Government, in conjunction with the Independent Group. When the Rigsdag convened on the 6th instant, the fusion, or Government forces organized the Landstthing by electing as President of that body one of the Independents who was opposed to the sale of the Danish West Indies. Mr. Hansen, the successful candidate received 33 votes; Prof. Matzen, the former President, 26; and three votes were blank. The presiding officer having no vote, the numerical strength of the friends and the enemies of the treaty was not affected by this election. Immediately after the September elections, ratification of the treaty of cession seemed to be assured. Such, at least, appeared to be the prevailing opinion, shared even by the opposition press, judging from its silence or the changed tone of its comments on the subject.

The Ministry realized that there was a possibility of defeat; but the reports they received inclined them to take a hopeful view of the situation. The Upper House of the Rigsdag is composed of 66 members. In case all were present, 33 votes would be necessary for securing the required constitutional consent to the treaty. The Government had 32 votes pledged; the Opposition was supposed to have 29. The remaining four were new members, who had been elected as Independents. Three of these were known to be friendly to the Ministry and are expected to cooperate with it in important matters of legislation. One of them had up to the time of his election favored the sale of the Danish West Indies, and owed his success at the polls to that fact—so it is claimed. After he had been chosen by the electors, he stated publicly that he had favored ceding the islands to the United States, but now that he was to have a voice in passing upon the question in the Rigsdag, he would defer his decision until he had investigated the matter more closely. A few days before the vote was taken, he declared privately that he would oppose ratification, and he so voted. Nothing could influence him to do otherwise. It transpired that another of the four who personally favors the sale had pledged his vote against the treaty in order to secure the necessary number of electors from the Right to obtain a seat in the Rigsdag. Still another, who represents a district in southern Jutland, was subjected to such pressure from his constituents, who sympathize strongly with Schleswig, and with whom he declared himself in accord, that he was inclined to vote against the treaty. He was, however, with considerable difficulty, prevailed upon to abstain from voting. The fourth one stated in the course of the debate on the first reading of the treaty that he had heretofore favored the sale, but had been won over to the view that the islands ought to be retained by Denmark for patriotic as well as commercial reasons. The treaty was submitted to the Landsting by the Minister of Foreign Affairs Oct. 8. He recommended ratification dependent upon a subsequent plebiscite in the islands. The matter was made a special order for Oct. 15 and 22, on which latter date the final vote was taken, with the result given above. The Right won its victory over the Government principally by superior organization and party discipline. They took special delight in embarrassing the Left which had forced their Ministry to resign a year ago last July. Four of the negative votes were cast by members of former Ministries that had committed themselves to a transfer of the islands to the United States, one of them being Mr. Schested who as Minister of Foreign Affairs neglected no opportunity to further the negotiations for the sale. Another member who yielded all other considerations to party loyalty had been a member of the committee that was formed a few years ago for the purpose of creating sentiment in America favorable to acquisition. Two adherents of the party, Thygesen and Raben—respectively 96 and 87 years of age—had been seriously ill for some time and were not expected to appear in the Rigsdag during the present session. They were, however, brought to the capital from their distant homes in Jutland,—and by careful nursing and medical attendance mustered sufficient strength to attend and answer the roll call on this occasion. It is doubtful if they will be seen in their seats again.

By means of public agitation, work on the part of influential private and official persons, tenders of financial support for improving economic conditions in the islands, etc., the patriotic feelings of many of the good Danes were aroused to a high pitch, especially in Copenhagen; and the fact that the King and other members of the Court were at heart opposed to the sale did not help to smoothen the path for the treaty.

The Ministry worked most energetically to secure the sanction of the Rigsdag; and was greatly disappointed at its failure to do so.

Not till Oct. 17 did the last one of the newly elected Independents declare his intention to vote with the Opposition. And even then it was thought that a majority for ratification would be obtained by the inability of one of the sick members mentioned above to attend, or by some member of the Right abstaining from casting his vote * * *.

Immediately after the adjournment of the Landsting on the 22d, a Cabinet council was held, at which a statement was agreed upon to be given out to the public, to the effect that the Ministry had no intention of resigning on account of the the action of the Upper Branch of the Rigsdag, and that it purposed appointing a commission to investigate into conditions in the islands, with a view to embodying into law such measures of reform as may be found advisable and practicable. Those who had made tenders of financial support for a new steamship line between Copenhagen and St. Thomas and for organizing a plantation company in the islands were asked to submit definite plans to the Minister of Finance and to take early steps towards redeeming their money pledges.

The day following the rejection of the treaty, the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the leader of the Government party in the Folkething delivered speeches in that body, upbraiding the Opposition in the Landsting for having defeated a convention concluded in good faith with a friendly Power, and throwing the responsibility for such action, with all that it implies, on the party of the Right. They wished it clearly understood that no one had any right to expect that the Government would assume additional burdens in connection with the administration of the islands. Such official utterances were demanded by the Folkething, which was practically unanimous for ratification, and whose members expressed their indignation freely over the turn matters had taken in the Landsting. On the 27th instant, a committee of the gentlemen interested in establishing a steamship line between Copenhagen and St. Thomas sent out a circular stating that a company for that purpose would be organized, with H. R. H. Prince Valdemar as Honorary President, and inviting the public to subscribe for stock, four million Kroner of which was to be issued.

A plantation company is also to be formed, for the purpose of improving the agricultural conditions in the islands. The Ministry is skeptical as to the beneficial results expected from these ventures.

Mr. Deuntzer has said to me that in his opinion the United States will eventually acquire the Danish West Indies. He thinks that the reaction in favor of a sale will be so strong that after a few years Denmark will be compelled to ask us to relieve her of these possessions.

He requests me to say to my Government that he regrets very deeply his inability to secure the sanction of the Rigsdag to a treaty that he had concluded, in full confidence that it would receive the approval of the legislative branch of the Government.

You will find enclosed herewith clippings from various newspapers bearing on the subject of this dispatch.¹³ I have translated such parts of the Danish comments as I think will be of interest to you.

¹³From the Paris editor of the New York Herald, October 23, 1902, from The Times (London), October 22, 1902, and two articles from Dannebrog, October 23, 1902.

I forward, under separate cover, copies of the Rigsdagstidende containing full reports of the proceedings in the Landsting on the treaty, together with the speeches in the Folkething mentioned above.

No. 282

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, November 3, 1902.

SIR: Referring to my No. 280, dated the 28th ultimo, I give below a translation of the essential parts of the speech delivered by Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs Deuntzer in the Folkething, Oct. 23, on the rejection of the treaty ceding the Danish West Indies to the United States.

It has been painful for me to participate in the debates which have taken place in the other House on this subject. As that branch is not represented in this chamber, I shall refrain from alluding to it in strong or disparaging terms. I commit no indiscretion, however, in confessing that the whole manner in which the subject was treated in that body has not only surprised me but has grieved me deeply. I hold, without reference to details, that whatever differences of opinion may originally have existed with respect to the proper action to be taken in this matter, such a point had been reached with the conclusion of the treaty, approved by those factors in both Houses whose advice it was practicable to procure, that all internal differences should have been dropped, and we should have had the feeling of acting on a matter which concerned a foreign Government, and in which the other party to the treaty could not be expected to distinguish between the Ministry with its adherents on one side and its political opponents on the other. A foreign country is compelled to look upon the Danes as a nation which in the present case entered upon negotiations, which it zealously carried on for many years, under different Ministries, finally concluding a treaty, but which in the end would not stand by its word. And it witnesses the pitiful spectacle that the Folkething decides the case by an overwhelming majority, in favor of friendly international relations; while the other House rejects the treaty by a tie vote, which under the rules kills it. This is to me the worst side of the affair. Whether it will result in political complications I dare not venture to say; and I beg your honorable body to note that I have not in debate uttered a single word in this or in the other House that I can not stand by or which is not absolutely true. Neither have I at any time referred to international relations, expressed the least apprehension on that point, or suggested possible dangers in that direction. I have refrained from doing so intentionally, being convinced that every man who has a desire to take an active part in the politics of his country must realize that even if certain means and methods are permissible in domestic politics, the situation is different when a foreign country is involved. Duty demands unity of action in such a case. That duty has not been fulfilled in the present instance; and here is the result. * * * It is a work which has been prosecuted for forty years, well-nigh uninterruptedly, which was taken up by three successive Ministries of the Right; and there is little doubt that if a Ministry of that party were now in power the matter would long ago have reached a different solution from the present one. It is not a question belonging to the Left. On the contrary, the structure that they have destroyed is of their own building; and their own efforts now lie shattered at their feet. * * * It can not be demanded that the Ministry, and especially not that I, shall bear any responsibility for the improvement or welfare of these islands. * * * I do not believe that anything can be done that will prove of actual benefit to them; nor do I believe that the legislative branch of the Government will give its consent to sacrifices of any importance.

II. INFORMAL DISCUSSIONS

Consul Payne to the Third Assistant Secretary of State

No. 69

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
ST. THOMAS, D. W. I., June 5, 1905.

SIR: The Hamburg American Steamship Company, which has the largest and best equipped station, here, seems to [be] gradually absorbing every possible shipping and transporting interest in this port and harbor. Within the last few months, it has, to all appearances, absorbed a Danish Ship Company known as the West India Company, Limited. This was accomplished through the East Asiatic Company. The Hamburg American Company has a coal dock, and warehouse capacity far exceeding any other in this port, in addition to this, there is being constructed a coal dock of large capacity by the East Asiatic Company. This work was begun by the West India Company, Limited and was turned over to the East Asiatic Co. by the West India Co., together with its ships and other interests. The management and control of the ships was then placed in the hands of the Hamburg American Company by the East Asiatic Company while the new coal wharf remains, nominally, in the hands of the East Asiatic Company. The general impression is that the Hamburg American Company which, is of course German, is interested in this wharf enterprise also. Another thing which seems exceedingly strange, is the appointment of Captain Sönderhoff, a German, and as I am informed not even a burgher here, a Crown member of the colonial council, the peculiarity of this appointment is more apparent when it is remembered that he, Sönderhoff, is Consul of the German Empire, and in that capacity represents every interest of that Government, and is also superintendent of the Hamburg American Company here, and was appointed to the position of Crown member of the colonial council by King Christian of Denmark. This colonial council together with the colonial governor has charge of the administration of the government of this island and the Island of St. Jans. So that Captain Sönderhoff, a German citizen and, representing his Government here and also the superintendent of the great Hamburg American Steamship Company's interests, is made a part of the Danish Government in the Danish West Indies. All of these things together with the fulsome favors constantly shown the German naval people during the long stays made here each year by their warships, cause one to wonder what next. I send herewith enclosed a marked copy of a newspaper^s published here in which an article appears, containing views which will probably give additional light upon matters referred to in this despatch.

The reference made in the article to German acquisition of foothold under a "Danish make-believe" simply expresses views had here, in, probably, a more pronounced form than in St. Lucia.

SIR: At an informal conference to-day with Count Raben-Levetzau, Minister for Foreign Affairs, mention was casually made of the unratified treaty between Denmark and the United States touching the purchase of the Danish West India Islands.

He had lately seen a news item on the subject published first in New York and copied in some of the European capitals including this * * *. He said he had told the Crown Prince that of course there was no truth in the matter and I assured him that nothing whatever had come to me on the subject. He pointed out the mistake made by Denmark in failing to ratify the treaty and said the ownership was a continual financial burden to Denmark without any corresponding advantage—except the sentimental one of having a port in the south for its war vessels.

From other sources I learn that the opinion of Count Raben-Levetzau is quite general and that the number so thinking is larger than when the subject was imminent. Of course, I have not been here sufficiently long to be informed except superficially.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches Nos. 5 and 6, of June 30 and July 3 last, respectively, concerning the unratified treaty for the purchase of the Danish West Indies by the United States and a report that the question will come up again at the next session of Congress.

In reply I have to inform you that the statement is not only without foundation, but made in ignorance of the procedure followed in this country in regard to treaties. The Congress, composed of the Senate and House of Representatives, is a purely legislative body having no part in the negotiation of treaties. That is an executive function of the President, by and with the advice of the Senate alone, and in this advisory capacity the Senate's action is executive, not legislative. The Senate has already performed its constitutional duty in the matter of the treaty for the cession of the Danish West Indies, by advising and consenting to the ratification thereof on February 17, 1901. That action of the Senate was final so far as that body was concerned, not being open to revision or reversal. The treaty lapsed through its rejection by Denmark, and the extended time fixed for the exchange of ratifications having passed, it is dead.

In making this informal inquiry you will bear in mind that it is more or less tentative on our part, as the President is not advised whether the Senate would consent to a new treaty.

SIR: Referring to your despatch of the 19th ultimo, numbered 5 and marked confidential, I have to advise that I had a further conference with Count Raben-Levetzau, Foreign Minister on the third instant, but have delayed my despatch pending the ascertainment of certain facts which it seems to me in this connection may have an important bearing.

I called Count Raben's attention to our former reference to the subject of the Danish Islands and said in substance that I was not advised as to the temper of my Government in respect to a cession of the islands, but that if the Danish Government now desired to renew the negotiations I would be most willing to make it known to you. He replied that while his own views had not changed, he did not believe the time opportune to bring forward the subject—that it was too soon after the defeat of a treaty concerning the same matter.

He further told me that he had quite recently discussed the subject with the Crown Prince and found him quite opposed to the plan. Upon taking my leave he remarked that while he had not at that time anything further to say to me—that later he might have.

In the course of our talk—à propos of nothing in particular—he asked my opinion as to when the Panama Canal would be finished. As the question of the islands had been already referred to, I was impressed with the idea that in his mind the completed canal might affect the value of this possession.

When the late treaty was being considered here the King was unfriendly to a sale, but I am assured that he was loyal to his Ministry and exerted no personal influence to defeat the project. * * *

I am not able to say that at this moment anything further can be done to affect what no doubt would appear to our Government a worthy purpose, but I may venture to suggest that in case an opportunity presents itself to reopen the subject, a certain degree of promptness upon our part would be wise. There is a phase of the subject, however, which may be considered as disquieting.

In the harbor of St. Thomas lies Water Island—a parcel of land about one mile by two in area. It is said that this island forms no part of the Government possession and was purchased within the past few months from private ownership, by the West India Company. This company was organized here for the West India trade, primarily, to and from the Danish Islands, and now has three steam vessels of five thousand tons each in this service. The company found that the Hamburg American Company already had such a footing at St. Thomas that it was compelled to forego certain activities for business, and I am now assured that quite recently the two companies had become consolidated.

The fact that the West India Company had thus far been doing business at a loss lends colour to the rumor. Each company has owned its separate dock and up to this time it is said, no special use has been made of Water Island above referred to. Whether the island passed by the consolidation I have not yet been able to learn. The Hamburg American Company, I am told, has the favor of the German Emperor and it is said that Mr. Ballin, the President of the corporation, enjoys in an especial degree the Emperor's personal friendship.

I am also informed that on the occasion of the German Emperor's late visit here he sent for and conversed for some time with Mr. Andersen of this city, one of the managers of the West India Company. Possibly the representative of our Government at St. Thomas can furnish from the records or otherwise more exact information. Permit me to observe that if my information above outlined is in the main correct, the vested interests of so powerful a factor as the Hamburg American Company may prove an obstacle to the successful acquisition of these islands by our Government.

I have just chanced to find in the Chicago Tribune of the 4th instant a discussion of the same subject which is so interesting and important that I beg to enclose the clipping herewith,⁸ although you may already have seen it.

We may fairly assume that the Danish Minister in Washington is familiar with this publication and that perhaps it has already been sent forward to the Minister of Foreign Affairs here.

In view of the outline of truth contained in the article its publication will no doubt be considered unfortunate. Nothing new has occurred in connection with the subject since my former despatch.

S. J. O'BRIEN

No. 33

SIR: Referring to my No. 31 of yesterday. I have heretofore hesitated to betray too much curiosity in respect to Water Island in the St. Thomas harbor.

The publication in the Chicago Tribune sent you in my No. 31 of yesterday seemed to make important more detailed information.

⁸ Not printed.

I have just come from an interview with Admiral Richelieu, president of the West India Company, a corporation owning four steamers in the service between here and St. Thomas, and other ports in the West Indies and Gulf of Mexico.

I asked him if there was any community of interest or ownership between the West India Company and the Hamburg American Line. He replied that there was none.

That when the West India Company began its service two or three years ago the Hamburg Line reduced its rates with the intention of driving the West India Company out of business.

Finding that this could not be accomplished the two companies made an arrangement in respect to freight and passenger rates, but that otherwise they are wholly independent of each other.

I then inquired as to the ownership of Water Island and was informed that it was purchased from private hands, and that it is now owned by the West India Company.

He then informed me that in time the intention was to develop this island for storage and perhaps dock purposes, and that it provided a really better harbor than St. Thomas proper. That there was between seven and eight fathoms of water directly up to the island and that it was well protected from storm and sea.

I then inquired whether the business of his company was so successful as to justify the continuance and he replied that while no great amount of money had yet been made, yet he thought it was more than paying its way at this time; that the business was constantly increasing, and that without doubt his company would continue in the service.

As the Hamburg American Company has a large fleet (more than forty ships I believe) already in the West India trade, it would have no use for the ships of the West India Company, and it may be fairly assumed that for the time being the latter company will continue its operations and its present ownership.

Of course there is no assurance as to the future and a purchase of the stock of the West India Company would carry with it I assume, the island in question.

[From the Hamburger Nachrichten of October 18, 1905]

New York, October 7. A great excitement has once more taken possession of the imperialistic circles of the Republic, as though the United States were threatened by a frightful danger. The American Consul C. H. Payne on the Danish West Indian Island St. Thomas has reported to Washington that the Hamburg-

American Line desires to lay out a coaling station near the island. It has bought or rented from the Danish Government its approach to a reef, which has enough room for a pile of coal. In order to attach an exaggerated importance to the affair, it is stated that the island selected for the coaling station is the key to the Danish West Indies, and besides the American Government is disturbed by the fact that the "Hamburg-American Line receives a subsidy from the German Government, that their steamers may be changed into auxiliary cruisers in time of war and that therefore its coaling stations would doubtless be used as a basis from whence to conduct hostile operations." At the same time a demand is made to the Washington Government to protest immediately and prevent this dangerous plan. As a ground for this demand an enormous strategic importance is ascribed to the small island. It "controls" not only the entire Danish West Indian group of islands, but also the passage to the Panama Canal. Only in the German-American and in part of the Democratic press is it pointed out that up to now no one has for a moment considered Water Island as the key to St. Thomas, or even to the Panama Canal, that it is too ridiculous too consider that German warships could seize the coaling station of a private German company without warning. If there should ever be war between Germany and the United States, the latter could then easily take possession of the unfortified and unprotected coaling station, and if they were not capable of this undertaking, then their fleet would soon be entirely destroyed. The German Government has nothing to do with the buying or renting of land by the Hamburg-American Line and it should be remembered that the German Government did not lift a finger when the United States endeavored to purchase the islands from Denmark.

These considerations however, are only expounded by the smallest portion and least influential of the American press. The great mass of the Republican papers have blustered forth in, although harmless, yet none the less pointed excitement, which again proves what small an impression the effort for American friendship has made in the United States. But this event also shows to what dangerous foolishness the new application of the Monroe Doctrine leads. The United States quietly permits Great Britain to flank its Atlantic and Gulf coasts, to lay out everywhere fortified harbors, to hold strong garrisons in the Bermudas and other places, and its men-of-war to secure as many protection places as possible. Nevertheless, the Panama Canal does not appear to them for that reason to be threatened, although the Britons could attack not only from their countless West Indian islands, but also from the Mosquito coasts and from the mouths of the Orinoco. On the contrary the American patriots burst out in incomprehensible anger when Germany, whose war fleet is scarcely a quarter as large as the British, would also like to secure a landing place in the Western Hemisphere.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence from this Legation relative to the alleged sale of Water Island, situated at the entrance to the harbor of St. Thomas, Danish West Indies, to a German steamship company, supposed to be acting in the interest of the German Government, I have the honor to inform the Department that this matter has been carefully watched by the foreign representatives here and that I have frequently been questioned on the subject by my colleagues.

The Italian Government especially seems to have taken an extraordinary amount of interest in this affair. Several weeks ago, the Italian Chargé d'Affaires read me part of an instruction from his Government, directing him to report fully on the subject and stating that the Italian Ambassador at Washington had reported that this alleged sale has caused some excitement and annoyance in the United States. The Italian Chargé subsequently had an interview on the same subject with Mr. O'Brien. Several days later he informed me that the Italian Ambassador at Berlin had been assured by the German Government that the steamship company was in no way acting as its agent in this business and that further the alleged sale had not yet taken place. To show the importance attached to the whole affair by the Italian Government, the Italian Chargé told me that the above information was conveyed to him by means of a cipher telegram.

SIR: I have the honor to confirm my cipher telegram of this date, reading as follows:

Ministry of Finance informs me that it will shortly propose to the Rigsdag to increase import tariff in the Danish West Indies probably to six per cent value.

Several days ago I was informed from a reliable source that a change in the tariff of the Danish West Indies was contemplated and immediately proceeded to the Foreign Office, where I saw Mr. Krag, Director of the Ministry. While admitting that he had heard something about a contemplated change, this gentleman could not give me any definite information and I decided to see the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in the absence of the Minister, I had an interview with the Assistant Minister who stated that his Ministry was at present drafting a bill in the premises, that the details of which had not been settled, owing to the peculiar tariff now in force in the West Indies, but that it would probably increase the tariff in each of the islands to six per cent ad valorem. He further stated that the bill would be sent to the Rigsdag during the present month and that he expected favorable action before the Christmas recess. Later in the day I presented myself at the weekly reception of the Minister of Foreign Affairs and casually mentioned that I had heard a change in the West Indian tariff was contemplated. He replied that he had heard nothing about it. * * * I did not think it necessary to further question him on the matter.

The gradual economic and industrial decay of the Danish West Indies, in spite of subsidized steamship lines and other bounties, since the failure of the ratification of their sale to the United States, has become alarming. In addition their principal export, sugar, which went almost exclusively to the United States, has been almost entirely ruined by the Cuban reciprocity treaty.¹⁴ The port of St. Thomas has gradually fallen from its position as the principal harbor of the West Indies, while storms and bad management have greatly hindered its rum and other minor industries. In order to lighten the burden of taxation, which under the existing conditions are becoming intolerable, and to pay for some contemplated improvements in public works, the colonial council, sitting recently at St. Thomas, unanimously decided to send a petition to the Minister of Finance here for the increase in the customs tariff. The tariff in force at St. Thomas is, apparently now three per cent ad valorem, while at St. Croix it is on another even smaller basis.

There is no doubt that the Rigsdag will approve almost any increase in the West Indian tariff. The Danish people have at least come to realize that something must be done to improve the desperate conditions in their West Indian colonies.

SIR: Referring to my despatch No. 50 of the 1st instant, relative to a change in the tariff of the Danish West Indies, I have now the honor to report that in the Folkething yesterday Finance Minister Lassen introduced a bill for an increase in the said tariff. At the same time several other reform bills referring to the West Indies were proposed by the Government, the most important of which aim at the direct representation of the islands in the Danish Rigsdag, the reduction of the powers of the Governor and the practical autonomy of the islands. A bill for improvements in the harbor of St. Thomas was also proposed.

In the course of his speech, Mr. Lassen stated that during the last five years the deficit in the West India budget had amounted to an average of 445,000 Kroner per year. By the aid of the increase in the tariff he hopes that this deficit will be reduced to about 270,000 Kroner, which sum can be provided, he believes, from the receipts of the West India lottery, which during its two years existence has shown a profit to the Government of 122,000 Kroner and 150,000 per year respectively.

All of these bills were laid on the table, but their discussion will be begun next week. These measures were well received by the members of the Folkething and are to-day favorably criticized in most of the newspapers.

As soon as I can secure a copy of the tariff bill, I shall have it translated and sent to the Department.

SIR: In continuation of my despatch number 57, of the 16th instant, relative to the proposed change in the tariff of the Danish West Indies, I have now the honor to enclose a copy of the bill presented to the Folkething on the 15th instant, together with an English translation.⁸

⁸Not printed.

As I predicted in my despatch number 50, of the 1st instant, it is proposed to increase the tariff in the Islands of St. Thomas and St. Jan to six per cent ad valorem. The specific tariff now in force at St. Croix is not to be changed for the present.

An export duty of five per cent ad valorem is to be assessed on all sugars exported from St. Thomas and St. Jan, but this tax will not produce much revenue, as little or no sugar is raised at St. Thomas. St. Croix, on the other hand, is totally dependent on its sugar export and is not to be taxed.

SIR: I beg to enclose herewith a copy of my letter to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, dated January 15 last, and a translation of his reply dated the 28th instant. As I am now leaving here, I thought perhaps the Department would be pleased to have copies of this correspondence for future reference.

That I had no late instructions to bring up the subject was quite true, and under the circumstances I preferred to be without them. I had in mind that if nothing came of the matter, the United States Government could not be charged with undue anxiety to make the purchase.

The subject had been referred to between Count Raben-Levetzau and myself on different occasions, and the letter which I wrote him was the result of a mutual understanding. He has since made reference to the delay by saying that the time was not opportune to press the matter in the Ministry, and finally he gave me to understand that public sentiment in the Upper House, he was quite sure, would not be friendly to a sale.

Inasmuch as I was leaving, I asked him to reply so that the subject might be closed.

The Danish people have renewed to some extent, their hope that these islands may be in the near future, at least self-sustaining. Their hopes are based on the idea that cotton raising will be found a profitable enterprise.

Minister O'Brien to the Minister of Foreign Affairs

No. 91

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, January 15, 1907.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to our informal conversation of two days ago, in respect to the Danish West India Islands.

I recalled that three years ago, a large majority of the people of Denmark seemed to favor a sale of the property to my Government, and that while the treaty which was prepared in obedience to that sentiment failed of ratification on the part of your country, the reasons for this failure were perhaps no longer prevailing; that the Congress of the United States was in session, but must adjourn without day on March 4, next, not to again convene until December 1 following. In case, therefore, it was the desire of our respective Governments to again enter upon a negotiation in respect to a possible sale, the time was ripe to do so.

Denmark has enjoyed the undisturbed ownership of these islands for a great many years, yet the history of that period so far as I can learn, has failed to indicate any special value to the mother country—whether considered from a financial point of view or otherwise. Like possessions, controlled by other nations, have proved a great advantage by furnishing homes and prosperity to certain of their adventurous citizens desiring to live outside the domain of their fatherland. I understand that those of your countrymen who have undertaken to utilize these islands in a similar way have not been encouraged by the results. It is doubtful, therefore, whether the soil, the climate, the markets and other local conditions are suitable for such an enterprise. I suppose it may also be conceded that these possessions are in no sense a protection of your country's commerce; and finally that the chief reason for their further retention must be based upon sentiment alone. Such a reason is highly commendable, and yet when the history of your country's ownership is one of recurring deficits, where the islands are situated in a remote locality, and in a long series of years have proved themselves lacking in industrial and commercial value—it is easy to understand that the people may weary of the ownership, and in a time not far remote, even if not at the present, may wish to realize their value in the form of an asset of greater practical worth.

You are not unmindful of the disturbed conditions in Cuba, resulting in the plain duty on the part of the Government of the United States to interpose a certain control for the protection of life and property in the interest of all concerned. This control is now a subsisting thing, but what the future relations may be cannot now be determined—indeed it is unlikely that the time has yet arrived for adopting a settled policy. Nevertheless you have no doubt witnessed with interest the agitation in both countries touching a continuance of the authority now in force, or possibly something even more far reaching.

Having in mind these possibilities, you will no doubt be led to consider whether my Government in certain contingencies would take any further interest in the ownership of the Danish islands, or look upon them as a desirable possession. It is easy to understand that if the occupation of Cuba should result in permanency and your Government should then decide to sell, it might be difficult to find a purchaser.

The proximity of these islands to the United States, and the nearby market which my country would afford for whatever the islands might produce, are sufficient reasons for considering an ownership to be desirable—reasons which do not exist in the case of your country. It has seemed to me, therefore, not only that a purchase and sale would be to the advantage of both peoples, but that the time is most opportune for carrying the transaction into effect.

In closing, permit me to add that I am wholly without instructions from my Government on this subject, and I am not advised whether a purchase would now even be considered. What I have said therefore, is upon my own initiative. In speaking of the matter I have been tempted by the circumstance that the failure of the late treaty being chargeable to your Government, a certain embarrassment might exist on your part in respect to again bringing forward the subject. I therefore regard it as quite harmless to say that if the Danish Government again desires to undertake negotiations, I shall find genuine pleasure in making your wishes known.

Be pleased [etc.]

MR. MINISTER: By the note which I had the honor to receive from you dated January 15th last, you have called to my attention the conditions which in your judgment militate in favor of a return to the negotiations for the cession to the United States of the Danish Antilles, in case the Government of the King and yours—as to which you have no instructions—should desire to take that course.

You have been good enough in the meantime to say that you will be glad to send forward for consideration any suggestions which the Danish Government may wish brought to the attention of the Government of the United States.

As you have expressed a desire to have at this time an answer in writing, I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the King under existing circumstances, has no intention to again bring up the question referred to in your note.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, May 30, 1907.

SIR: Referring to my No. 173 of yesterday, on the subject of the Danish Islands.

I have to-day had an interview with the Foreign Minister in which I asked him whether the tone of his note was due to a wish to say something before I should leave or to the fact I lacked authority to negotiate.

His reply was that had I not been going, he might not at this moment have written, but that the answer would have been the same even if given later.

He added that so far as the Ministry was concerned, they would no doubt favor a cession, but that the Government was lacking in a majority to obtain legislative sanction—that a treaty to that effect would not be ratified. He further said that the King and Queen, and doubtless all of the royal family, would actively oppose the transaction.

He inquired as to whether Germany was taking any active interest in the matter. I said that I had no knowledge beyond a rumor that the Hamburg-American Line had purchased an island in St. Thomas Harbor. He said he doubted whether this was true, although possibly some arrangement had been made—perhaps a lease; that politically, the islands were of no value to Denmark, and that they were also lacking in value to the United States except to strengthen their holdings in that latitude; and that he had no doubt in case our Government should ask it, some privilege short of ownership, but which would answer our purpose quite as well, might be granted.

Not wishing to commit our Government by as much even as a suggestion, I did not pursue this phase of the subject, and therefore am not clear as to just what he had in mind—perhaps he had no definite plan himself.

He added that, while for the moment, nothing could be accomplished, he thought that the time was not far distant when public sentiment would favor a sale.

Meantime, he wished me to understand that in case of need, the Danish Government would be found friendly to the United States in respect to any suitable use of these possessions.

I have given as great latitude to what was said by the Minister as his language will bear.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: * * * There is nothing new here. The agricultural party is determined to oppose any great expenditure for defence, as it holds that it would be useless to bankrupt the country in order to keep Copenhagen out of the hands of an enemy for a day or two. From the point of view of exports, Denmark's affairs have improved during the year, but most of the business men here are living on borrowed money,—mostly drawn from Germany. Financial affairs are in a deplorable condition. If things continue this way we may perhaps receive a suggestion that the United States buy the Danish Antilles. The great obstacle to this is the touchiness of some of the conservatives, who think that we are a great and arrogant power, which would even try to force them to sell part of their heritage because Denmark is small and weak. * * *

Another obstacle is that neither party would like to see the money from the islands put into the hands of the opposing influence. We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by being extremely agreeable to Denmark. The great landowners, having much power, look on us with certain suspicion as people who have an eye on their property. Nothing has had a better effect in Europe than our Government's treatment of Cuba and the Philippines, * * *.

* * * I am quite sure that a time will come when it will be expedient, if our Government continues to hold it advisable, to open the question of the Danish Antilles. I am doing my best to pave the way for this. If I should receive leave of absence in September I would take over with me to the United States Captain Cold, late Governor of the Danish Antilles. This will be his first visit to the United States. He is now Superintendent and Director of the Scandinavian-American Line and the principal aide of Admiral de Richelieu, who is, by all odds, the most important man in Denmark at present. If, however, it is not advisable that I should receive leave in September I shall give Captain Cold a letter to the Secretary of State and a little note to you. He has much information upon the subject and, to the proper people, is very frank in his statements.

*Minister Egan to the Secretary of State*AMERICAN LEGATION, Copenhagen, August 9, 1909.

SIR: I take the liberty of making to you a confidential communication on the present state of Danish politics and finances, principally as concerning the future of the West India Islands. I do not presume for a moment to forestall in any way the intentions of the United States Government concerning these islands, but as I think the opportunity of acquiring them may some day arise, I feel it my duty, unless I am otherwise directed by you, to pave the way gently as far as possible toward that acquirement. I had hoped to be able to pay a visit to the United States, sailing on September 7th, principally because Director Cold, until recently Governor of the Danish West Indies, is sailing at the same time. As I am quite sure that, owing to the change of secretaries here, the Department will scarcely grant me leave to sail at that time I am most desirous that ex-Governor Cold shall have the opportunity to meet yourself or somebody of importance in the State Department. As this is his first visit to the United States and he is a person of high standing here, I am frankly most desirous that he should not receive the impression that the United States is an arrogant Power, determined because of that power to acquire some of the few remaining possessions of this little country. Therefore I shall take the liberty of giving ex-Governor Cold a letter of introduction to you. I should naturally have preferred to present him personally to the President and yourself and also to have attended the luncheon of the Chamber of Commerce in New York with him; but as this seems out of the question I shall commit him to your amiability.

On Saturday, Admiral de Richelieu called on me to say privately that he had been called on by the King to advise as to the formation of a Ministry and that in case of the combination he had in view failing, he would probably be expected to assume publicly the responsibility for the new Ministry, which would mean that he would be the Premier. He is at present, by all odds, the most important man in Denmark. Although a conservative as to socialism, he is the only man outside the socialists themselves who has any influence with them. His plan was to unite Count Friis, who is an advocate of the land defence, and therefore looked on as having English sympathies, and Christensen, who, opposing the land defence, is looked on as having German sympathies. This of course is the popular view. Neither Friis nor Christensen has any special English or German sympathy. This combination would neutralize Christensen's influence in Jutland where he has a great following among the peasants and where Count Friis has large landed estates. If Count Holstein-Ledreborg could be added to the Ministry, Holstein-Ledreborg having a great reputation here and regarding constitutionalism as meaning the Government of the Kingdom by three influences—the King being mediator between the two houses of Parliament—a very strong Cabinet would be made. So far, Richelieu has not succeeded and it looks to-day as if he should be obliged to accept, against his will, the premiership. Richelieu has done very much to assist Denmark in the financial difficulties of the last year; he tells me that at present the financial condition is deplorable, but he is very optimistic as to the ultimate result. And now I come to the relation of all this with the question of the Danish West Indies. If the present financial difficulties continue, the Danish Government will have to get money somewhere. Iceland is beginning to give trouble and there will no doubt soon be an attack on Danish monopoly in Greenland. De Richelieu is very progressive and I think has no prejudices whatever against the sale of the islands. Now and then one hears the announcement made that the Government here will make an exchange with Germany, giving the Danish Antilles for the former Danish possessions in Schleswig-Holstein. This, of course, is absurd but it is sometimes uttered by reactionaries in apparent good faith. The country people, the peasants, meaning the farmers, are simply interested in low taxes and good prices for butter, milk, and what cattle is exported. The sale of the islands would not be unpopular in the Lower House. The landed proprietors in the Upper House have certain national prejudices against depriving Denmark of any of its possessions. The loss of Schleswig-Holstein still embitters them. And then, too, they have the greatest desire in the world to grip every piece of land; but the financial condition counts with them as it does with everybody here. Those members of the haute bourgeoisie who hotly objected to the sale of the islands are beginning to cool in their enthusiasm. The people who stand foremost against such a sale are, I think, some of the members of the Royal family, but even this opposition would not count in the face of a financial necessity. I do not mean to suggest that any movement should be made on the part of the United States to acquire the islands at present; in this time of crisis it would fall dead; people have other things to think about; but the press is becoming more and more favorable to the United States. The interchange of professors, the celebration at Aarhus and all the amenities recently affected here have raised us in the estimation of the Danes, who are very sensitive, as the people of all small nations are, and their temperament must be considered. If it were not for this crisis it is probable that a tremendous discussion would have arisen in the press on the question of sending a war vessel to the Hudson-Fulton celebration. As it is, only the fear of spending money and the fact that the Valkyren would need to be thoroughly overhauled at great expense, prevented the Ministry of two weeks ago, there is no Ministry now, from sending a representative. De Richelieu is, however, very much in favor of sending the Valkyren. He is a great admirer of the United States and as I think you know, the principal influence in the councils of the Scandinavian-American Line.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: * * * Naturally, it is interesting to know how the present condition of the Treasury may affect the question of the sale of the Danish Antilles. The late Ministry would have been inclined to talk about the subject in rather a Platonic manner, having no majority behind them. The Radicals and the Socialists would be glad to get rid of the islands which still continue to be a source of great expense, but the Conservatives and some of the Moderates still cherish the hope that an exchange, for part of their beloved Schleswig may still be arranged. I have talked with all classes on the subject. H. M. the King would submit to any plan for the sale of the Danish Antilles that the majority might approve. H. M. the Queen is devoted to the welfare of the colored people in the islands; she, I think, fears for their safety, if they should come under the jurisdiction of the United States. The conservative landowners look on the possible sale of the islands as a national disgrace. "Denmark," they say, "can not afford to part with a single mile of territory; it would be a loss of prestige; but we might exchange." In strictly informal conversation, one points out, in vain, that Denmark has Iceland and the untouched resources of Greenland. The smaller landowners and those of the city people who are of the Moderates would not allow their representatives to vote for the sale of the islands unless the money was to be applied by the party to which they belong. The Conservatives, as I said, are against any sale; the opinion of the majority of the Left-Moderate party, at present in power, would depend on the financial needs of the moment, with allowance for opposition because of national pride.

Three of the Centre groups amalgamated in one Left party, thus securing precisely one-half of the seats in the Folkething—i. e., 57 out of 114. As many of these Left were elected with the help of the votes of the Right, and, on the other hand, some of the 13 members of the Right were elected with the assistance of the Left, there is an alliance between Right and Left; these two parties together in the Folkething command about 70 votes against the 44 votes of the Radical and Socialist groups.

The high esteem in which the United States is now held—there is scarcely a Danish family of the middle classes that has not a representative in our country—would count much in favor of the sale. The reaction against the sale which followed the failure to sell in 1902 has lost its violence; (though, since the rumored conflicts caused by the racial feeling aroused by the Jeffries-Johnson fight at Reno, several distinguished persons have uttered renewed fears that the jealousy of American whites might almost enslave the blacks in St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix). Major-General C. H. Arendrup, formerly Governor of the Danish West Indies, expressed great horror the other day, at the preparations made by Denmark in 1902 "to sell thousands of human souls." "But they voted," I said. "Ah, my dear Mr. Minister, these poor blacks do not know their own minds from one day to another." Captain Cold, very recently Governor of the islands, is less fervent in his desire to keep the islands. "In case of war," he said, "you would take them, anyhow." He admits that the islands will never pay Denmark, in fact, they must always be a loss, but I think that he, like his chief, Admiral de Richelieu, imagines that an exchange by which Denmark may receive a part of the German territory wrested from Denmark in 1863, may be possible. And yet he is one of the most practical men in Denmark, and both he and de Richelieu have the best feeling towards the United States; they have many times shown this.

The basis of this exchange is always the cession of Greenland. Denmark would cheerfully give up Greenland and even Iceland, which alternately threatens "to go it alone" or to join itself to Norway, for a part of Schleswig.

As soon as I can collect the information, I shall send you a lengthy report on the conditions of the Danish West Indies as seen from Denmark. The time is not yet ripe to raise the question of the cession of the Danish West Indies; yet, as soon as the Panama Canal is completed, it will be raised by somebody in Denmark, though it is apparently forgotten now; any insinuation or suggestion from me, repeated in the press, would immediately raise it, and raise it futilely. I invariably avoid the subject when it is discussed seriously, or assume that the "exchange" so often mentioned is a desire, on the part of the Danes, to secure one of the Philippines. H. M. the Queen of Denmark once sounded me on this subject, and took it as a great joke when I said that my country would be glad to settle all the bills for the expense of the Danish West Indies, if Denmark would undertake the financing of the Philippines. "You think that you have too many islands then," she said, much relieved.

Minister Egan to the Assistant Secretary of State

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, September 20, 1910.

SIR: I am about to send to the Department what seems to me a very important and very audacious suggestion. It is a résumé and synthesis of propositions made, not hastily but very seriously, to me by persons of importance here. It would mean, if carried into effect, the acquisition on our part of both Greenland and the Danish West Indies. The West Indies do not, as you will observe, appear in the propositions which I have gathered for you, but they might be made to appear. Greenland is, as you know, a Danish monopoly. It has never been exploited, although the Norwegians are clever enough to see its possibilities, as they already see what might be done with a lesser opportunity in Iceland.

Greenland is looked on by the Danes very much as our people formerly looked on Alaska. The Government here is so much occupied with internal economic and political differences in Denmark that it gives very little attention to the development of the resources of Greenland, which is practically terra incognita.

The position of Germany in the Far East will soon, it seems to me, become untenable. I say this, with all due respect to the better information and the result of experience always at hand in the Department. It appears that if the Russian-Japanese-Chinese combination grows, we shall badly need an ally in the Philippine Islands.

The Russians, outside the court and the bureaucracy, insist that their alliance with Japan is only a matter of self-defense. They say that American and English feeling has not been with them and their only safety is to make terms with their late opponent, Japan. The synthesis which I am preparing for you implies nothing less than a cession of Mindanao to Denmark, for which Denmark will give us Greenland and (after certain pourparlers) the Danish West Indies.

You may ask whether I consider this proposition feasible or not. I can only answer, that I have been so much engaged in discovering what is really in men's minds over here that I have become, perhaps, a little too concentrated to take that broad view which is a habit with you, who are constantly facing many great questions and therefore it would be unreasonable for me to make an answer, that would imply a larger experience than I have.

I hold myself responsible for the analysis of the German Far East condition, but I offer the report, which I shall send you on Thursday, as only a synthesis of existing tendencies. I assure you that it represents the desires and the opinion of some of the best minds in Denmark, and some of them most highly placed. I write this, as I have said, in advance, that in the midst of so many important preoccupations, you may single out the coming synthesis of suggestions for particular attention.

I shall ask for a month's leave of absence, with permission to visit America, in March or April, 1911, when, if the synthesis is considered at all by the Secretary of State, I shall be very glad to throw any light in my power upon the conditions that surround it.

If one carefully considers what has taken place in the Far East, since the treaty of Portsmouth was concluded between Russia and Japan in 1907, then one can not avoid seeing that Russia has entirely altered her policy in the East, and her aim seems now to be, in conjunction with Japan, and probably also later on with China, to try to monopolize the political, financial and mercantile affairs of the Far East.

The three agreements which have been concluded between Russia and Japan since the Portsmouth treaty was signed, can not be misunderstood; they abandon the whole of Korea, a country half the size of Japan, to Japan, to be absorbed and digested, at leisure, and by them Manchuria is to all intents and purposes arranged to be the happy hunting ground of both nations until such time when they, without great and aggressive opposition from China, as the owner of Manchuria, and from America and other nations, with vested rights and interest in "the open door policy" in Manchuria, can agree upon a plan of partition of the spoil.

If China has agreed to this partition of Manchuria, as she doubtless in time must, unless support is given her, then her time will have come to be accepted into the triple alliance of the East, viz.: Russia, Japan and China; Tonquin is at present "protected" by France, but it will surely prove impossible for France to keep it, when Japan consents to give China free hands there as compensation for Manchuria. On the whole, there can be no doubt, but that the present position of France in the Far East soon will become impossible, for she has not the surplus population, and her sons have not the colonizing qualities which are absolutely necessary should her stay there be lengthened. The ancient, and, in their way, highly cultivated kingdoms in the East, which France, without any provocation, despoiled and oppressed through greater force and superior armament, will one day rise against her, as Japan already has risen against contempt and abuse, and they will be backed by a continent.

As to England, the ally of Japan, her present position seems most difficult. She has by her support of Japan, during the war with Russia, helped to raise the yellow race from its long lethargy and made it aware of its own power, and she now stands perplexed and amazed at the result she has helped to achieve. The yellow spectre is out of the box, and can not be conjured into it again; it now threatens to turn against its liberators and supporters.

On the other hand the enormous and important trade of England in Korea, in Manchuria and partly in China, is threatened, so that British merchants already are warning their Government against the danger there lies in the action of its allies to the trade and shipping of Great Britain in one of the most important markets of the world.

On the other hand, Japan is the ally of England, and England rules the Empire of India, containing about 250 millions inhabitants, proud, clever and brave people, as yet peacefully governed by England; but the yellow spirit is also in them evidently awakening, and they may become troublesome. Should they one day rise against England, as they have risen before, and should England require assistance to maintain her supremacy, then Japan is by treaty bound to send her excellent army to the assistance of her ally,—an assistance which may become of vital importance to England, both physically and morally; physically through the fighting power of the Japanese soldier, and morally by India's knowing that the yellow race is keeping her in her fetters. Placed in this dilemma, the position of England seems difficult, for she can not give strong support to her trade and shipping in the north-east of Asia, without crossing the plans of her ally, and that would naturally cause ill feeling; whilst the interest of England in India demands that the good feelings of Japan are preserved. It is, however, not difficult to foresee that in the meantime the power of India will prevail. There remains then only one great European Power whose interest in east Asia runs parallel with those of America, and that is Germany. America and Germany are both great and industrial countries with a rapidly increasing population, and for both countries it is of the utmost importance that the immense market of eastern Asia shall not be closed to their manufactures, or in any way be interfered with, and neither of them could for a moment tolerate a policy which eventually would exclude them from the market of Korea and Manchuria, and weaken them in the other markets of east Asia.

America's position in the Far East has been immensely strengthened by the acquisition of the Hawaii Islands and of the Philippines; possessions which are expensive, but which are absolutely necessary for America, in order that she through all time may be able to maintain her position as the "Great Power" on the Pacific, and in order that she may be able to secure for her industries, which become of more and more importance to her as her population increases, their due share of the great market in east Asia.

Germany has, as already mentioned, great interests at stake in east Asia, and these are threatened as those of the United States, but Germany has not, as she is situated now, the same prospect of being able to protect them in the long run as the United States has. The only foothold which Germany has in east Asia, where her ships and people can now seek protection is Kiao Chou in the north-east corner of China. The place is valuable enough under present circumstances but the territory is very small and is rented from China under a yearly lease. The time, however, will come when the "lease" will expire and the China of that time may refuse to renew the lease, and what then? In a very short time China will become a very important military power and to defend Kiao Chou against her, surrounded as it is on all sides by Chinese territory, would require enormous preparations and fortifications and soldiers out of all proportion to the size of the place. And still it is an absolute necessity for Germany to have a place in the Far East where she can safeguard her vital interests in the East, and where her people and ships can rely upon finding shelter and protection in time of trouble; but for these purposes her colonies in New Guinea and her other islands are too distant.

It seems that the interests of America and Germany are the same in eastern Asia, where neither of them wish to encroach on the territory of the natives, but where both of them wish to keep the "open door" and the "fair faced policy" in force. It seems only natural that, if these two countries came to an understanding with regard to the protection of their common interests, back to back, they would represent a force great and powerful enough to secure quiet and peaceful developments of affairs in east Asia.

Some few years ago England gave back to China, of her own accord, and to the great satisfaction of China, the harbor of Waihaiwai, which England had rented from China for use as a naval station, in the same way as Germany holds Kiao Chou.

If Germany were to do the same before her lease expires and give Kiao Chou back to China, it would surely do much to establish confidence and create the most friendly relations between Germany and China and it will save Germany much trouble and immense expense in the future.

But in order for Germany to be able to do this, it would be necessary for her to acquire another place, where she, with advantage and security could establish herself and where she could remain in undisturbed and undisputed possession.

For this purpose the southern group of the Philippines, consisting of the Islands of Mindanao, Palauan and some small islands south of these, would seem to be eminently suitable. These islands are about 35,000 English square miles in area and very fertile and prosperous. They have good harbors and a central position in east Asia, and they would form a most excellent basis for a strong German position in the East, not too far away for mutual support from the great naval station which America is establishing at Manila.

Being islands and large enough to support themselves, the southern group of the Philippines would be easy of defence and of administration, and as they have never belonged to any of the sovereign natives of Asia, neither China nor Japan, nor any other Asiatic Power has any claim on them. If the southern group of the Philippines therefore could be acquired in a friendly way, from the present possessors of them, they could be held in security and safety forever by Germany as her station in the East.

The southern group of the Philippines, as well as the rest of the Philippines, however, are in the possession of the United States of America.

If, however, the United States should be of the opinion that it would be to her own interest and in the interest of the peace of the East and in the Pacific, that Germany should work hand in hand with her in east Asia, the following proposal could, perhaps, be acceptable to both countries and form a basis for an arrangement, whereby the interest of America as well as of Germany would be benefited, and whereby also, all tension, friction and unfriendly feeling between Germany and Denmark, consequent upon the last war, could be brought to a satisfactory and permanent conclusion.

The proposal is:

1. That Denmark should surrender to the United States of America all her enormous possessions in Greenland, estimated to be more than 800,000 English square miles in area.

2. The United States of America should in return give over to Denmark the southern group of the Philippines, consisting of the Islands of Mindanao, Palauan and the small islands south of these.

3. Denmark should then surrender to Germany all her rights to the southern group of the Philippines as she received them from America.

4. Germany should then in return for the southern group of the Philippines, give back to Denmark that part of the province of Schleswig which lies north of a line along the middle of "Slien," along Dannevirke to "Trenen," following that river to where it joins "Eideren" and then following that river to the point where it flows into the North Sea.

That part of the province of Schleswig to be given back to Denmark would comprise about 2,400 English square miles, or only about $\frac{1}{4}$ part of the area of the islands of the southern group of the Philippines to be surrendered to Germany by Denmark.

The possession of Denmark in Greenland to be ceded to the United States would exceed more than 30 times the area of the islands of the southern group of the Philippines, that is to say, that Denmark would in exchange for the above-mentioned part of the province of Schleswig, give territory in Greenland of over 300 times larger an area.

Or, in other words, Denmark would, in exchange for a part of Schleswig, only 2,400 English square miles in area, give to America territory in Greenland as large as about one-fourth of the total area of the United States of America, or a territory as large as the whole of Mexico, or about $2\frac{1}{2}$ times the size of Alaska.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, December 6, 1910.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the tendency towards the sale of the Danish West Indies is growing here. The present party, Moderate, seems in for a longer lease of power than any other party can hope for, or has recently had. The financial condition of the Government is bad; no party dares to tax spirits or beer. Even the total abstainers are against this, consequently, to get money for old age pensions, etc., and for the carrying out of the defence program, will be difficult.

A curious circular has been sent out from an unknown source, urging a confederacy of all the islands near the coast of the United States. It simply indicates, as was suggested in my despatch No. 324, dated July 15, 1910, in regard to the exchange of Greenland, etc., that these islands are much in men's minds here.

A few days ago I had a long conversation with Mr. Moses Melchior, who is financially interested in the Danish West Indies. He is highly respected here; he wants to sell, in order that the Santa Cruz cotton may be developed, and that the tariff may be lowered. I told Mr. Melchior that I should like to have the frank opinion of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Neergaard, on the subject of the sale of the islands. I know Mr. Neergaard very well, but I know also that, if I asked him this question, the matter would probably reach the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who is very careful about etiquette.

Yesterday Mr. Melchior came with the Minister of Finance's answer to my suggested question:

I. To offer to sell the islands now might injure Denmark's chance of getting a loan of about 90,000,000 kroner, which is badly needed.

II. The King is against the sale.

III. If a proposition were made to the United States, a breakdown in the negotiation would ruin the present Government.

I am certain that His Majesty would not oppose the wishes of a majority in the Rigsdag.

Mr. Rudolf Schou, one of the officials of the Government, who was violently against the sale, said that, provided the amour-propre of Denmark was saved, by a treaty which might appear to give Denmark some commercial advantages, he thought, most of the traditional Conservatives would be in favor of the sale.

It would be useless to approach the subject at the Foreign Office here until public opinion is more formed.

Minister Egan to the Secretary of State

No. 444

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, July 21, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a report on the present condition of the Danish West India Islands, as seen from the point of view of Danish statisticians. To this is prefixed a short historical sketch, containing nothing new, written merely for the convenience of the reader.

As to the present condition of public opinion here: there is a growing party, particularly among the business men, in favor of sale of the islands to the United States. I have been approached by several of them on the subject. In spite of the discovery of the possibilities of the Sea Island cotton, which discovery lessened interest in the possible sale of the islands by increasing the hope of profit from them, practical men of less conservative opinions regard the retention of the islands by Denmark as a useless sacrifice to the idea of national honor. The majority of the voters is indifferent, as nothing but an increase of taxes would arouse this majority, the farmers, to express a desire for the sale. The country is rich, but the Government is poor. Still, the present Government would not raise the question of the sale to replenish the Treasury unless public opinion was very strongly expressed in favor of it. Against the sale would be a large number of important landowners, like Count Danneskjöld-Samse (1) and Count Frijs, Frijsenborg (2) who would not consent even at the last resort to the sale, unless on our part we would offer some salve to the pride of the Danes, who feel that they have already lost too much land.

Greenland and Iceland do not count with the Danes as part of Denmark. The first, which is a monopoly, they regard as practically waste territory, and the second as the home of a very turbulent population, which would secede from Denmark to-morrow, if it could. As I have already indicated to the Department, there is another group, not undistinguished which still clings to the hope that the Danish Antilles may be made the basis of a bargain, Greenland, as a means of barter, failing, for the restoration of Schleswig to Denmark. Among these I may mention, confidentially, Vice-Admiral de Richelieu (3).

The newspapers seldom touch on the subject, and, so far as has been in my power, I have discouraged any mention of it. Some of the Danish business men have suggested that a project of sale may be proposed after the Panama Canal is completed, as the fine harbor of St. Thomas will then become much more valuable both to the United States and to Denmark, consequently the Danish Government might demand a higher price. From my conversation with Count Ahlefeldt-Laurvig (4), Minister of Foreign Affairs, it is plain that no proposition will be made to us by the present Government unless public sentiment is expressed very strongly. Fifteen millions of dollars is the possible price sometimes mentioned to me, coupled with the suggestion that something might be arranged in the contract that would not give the transaction the air of a crude bargain. This suggestion has not emanated from any member of the present Government.

If it were worth while, sentiment might be worked up here in favor of the sale, but the conservative, pro-military press, the organs under court and Government influence, would be violently contra. How far the business interests would mitigate the opposition, I am not prepared as yet to say. The main question, in my mind: Is it worth while? And, if worth while, is it opportune?

In the first place: Are the islands worth $15,000,000? They ought, it is true, not be so expensive to manage, as they might be put under the same government as Porto Rico. And this is a price suggested by the optimists. In the second place: The sentiment in favor of the sale of the islands here is founded on the idea that we are now anxious to acquire them, in view of the prospective opening of the Panama Canal. My attitude is, and has always been since my sojourn in Denmark, that a reasonable proposition might be made to our Government, but that it would have to be very reasonable to be considered at all; that the harbor of St. Thomas would by no means be so very useful to us either as a strategic point or as a coaling station, and that there is no desire on the part of our Government to "corner" the market in islands. If the expenses of maintaining the army, the navy and the defences, coupled with those of the old age pensions, etc., keep up, Danish public opinion, in time, will probably force a proposition for the sale of these islands to the United States.

Yesterday, I had a conversation with Count Holstein-Ledreborg (5), who was Prime Minister in 1909, on this subject. He is one of the cleverest, most independent, liberal and irascible politicians in Denmark. "Your country will have the islands, in time," he said, "but, with the trouble we are having, in the Faroes, in Iceland, and in the general conditions of politics, the time for opening the question is emphatically not now." I consider the words of Count Holstein-Ledreborg, who is out of politics, and, though much of a recluse, particularly friendly to me, as expressing the situation at present.

I append a brief biographical sketch of the gentlemen mentioned in this dispatch.⁸

THE DANISH WEST INDIA ISLANDS

There are three small islands of the Virgin group of the Antilles in the possession of Denmark, St. Thomas, St. John and Santa Cruz.

Thirty-eight miles distant from Porto Rico, this group of islands lies between the 17th and the 18th degrees north latitude and 64 degrees west longitude. St. Thomas is in the track of all vessels from Europe and the East Indies bound for the north coast of South America.

Erik Smith took possession of St. Thomas on behalf of the Danish Crown on the 30th day of March, 1666, and save for a few years at the beginning of the 19th century it has since been in continuous Danish possession. St. John was taken over in 1684, Santa Cruz, first discovered by Columbus on November 14, 1493, was successively in the hands of the Dutch and the English. Later on these were driven out by the Spaniards who in turn made way for the French. In 1651 the Knights of Malta became owners of the island, by purchase, though by 1727 we see it once again in possession of the French, but for a short period only. In 1753 King Christian VI of Denmark bought Santa Cruz for 750,000 French livres.

St. Thomas, which owing to its geographical location and excellent harbor facilities commands a position of extreme importance, is an island thirteen miles long with a width of about four miles, maintaining a population of 12,000. The city of Charlotte Amalie, situated on one of the finest natural harbors in the world, has long been the rendezvous-focus of the commerce of the West Indies. The bay on which the town lies is almost circular, the entrance of which can be so fortified as to exclude all possibility of capture, because the island is surrounded by craggy reefs and there is no other landing place. Though of late years the traffic has fallen off somewhat, yet all of the most important German, French and English mail companies maintain coaling stations there.

St. John, with an area of 42 square miles, has only a trifling population; its main export being bay rum.

Santa Cruz, the most important of the islands, is about 9 miles east and west, by 1 to 5 miles north and south. The northern part of the island is intersected by a range of hills while the southern is low and level. The shores are surrounded by coral reefs, except in the northwest where great water depth is to be found close to the land.

The climate is tropical and subject to little variation, less than three degrees difference between the warmest month, August, and the coldest, February. The trade winds are constant the whole year, except during the hurricane months of the fall.

The population of this island is 9,683 souls, according to the latest available census. Christiansted numbering 5,499, whilst Fredriksted has 3,685, the remainder living in the rural districts.

Sugar is the staple product, and of 51,980 acres available for cultivation, 16,478 are in sugar, a small portion in cotton, and the remainder chiefly pasture land.

The Civil War showed that one of the greatest handicaps to the United States was the lack of a harbor of refuge and a naval base in the West Indies. And, though since that time a foothold has been secured, yet no harbor of any great strategic value is now in the possession of the United States which can be compared with St. Thomas.

In January 1865 Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, recognizing the extreme importance and value of safeguarding the interest of the United States, opened negotiations with General Raasløf, the Danish Chargé in Washington. After several unofficial conferences it became known that Denmark had no desire to sell her colonies. For a time the negotiations were dropped and not until December 1865 was the matter taken up again. For a new Ministry, less opposed to the sale, had come into power in Copenhagen.

Mr. Seward himself visited St. Thomas, and being convinced of the necessity of the purchase, made an offer to take over two of the three islands in behalf of the United States for the sum of five millions, $5,000,000. General Raasløf did not push the matter actively and things dragged on until January 1867 and nothing as yet had been accomplished. Instructions were given to Mr. Yeamans, at that time American Minister in Copenhagen to push the sale. Not before May though was an answer obtained declining the offer of the United States and making a new proposal of 15 millions for the three islands, or 10 millions for St. Thomas and St. John, adding that the transfer must be sanctioned by a vote of the population of the islands. The United States answered this by an offer of $7,500,000 in gold, but objecting to the vote of the islanders. Mr. Seward's second offer was refused, but a new proposition of $11,250,000 for three or $7,500,000 for two islands and the vote of the people was proposed.

When the second offer of the United States was rejected the American Minister in Copenhagen, who was conducting the negotiations, was instructed that negotiations were to be dropped. Yet in July a cable was sent by the State Department to accept St. Thomas and St. John but opposing the vote. In October of the same year the Secretary of State cabled as follows: "Close, conceding the vote." On October 24, 1867, the treaty was finally signed by the Danish Minister and the American, on behalf of the United States. The vote of the islanders still remained; an earthquake at this time delayed matters until January 1868, when a vote favoring the annexation was passed. Then the Danish Rigsdag ratified the treaty and King affixed his signature.

In America a political struggle was going on between President Johnson and the Senate, the time limit for ratification passed and was extended without any further action being taken. The treaty was finally rejected after an unfavorable report by the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

In 1892, the Honorable John W. Foster, then Secretary of State, reopened negotiations for the acquisition of the islands, which met with favor in the eyes of the Danish Government. Matters were taking a favorable turn, and at last the long pending question seemed near settlement. But President Harrison's administration was drawing to a close, and the negotiations were suspended.

In 1902 an investigation was conducted by a committee of the House of Representatives of the United States to examine into the truth of the allegations and charges of one Walter Christmas in his secret confidential report to the Danish Government as to the methods pursued by himself and assistants, and contracts entered into by him for the purpose of bribing or attempting to bribe members of the United States Congress to vote or to assist in procuring the proposal, adoption or ratification of a treaty for the sale of the Danish West Indies.

The investigation conducted by examination of persons charged with being connected with the alleged bribery by Captain Christmas, it was found that none of the charges could be substantiated and the report was consequently discredited. A complete record of the proceedings was published by the committee under the title of: House of Representatives, Report No. 2749, [57th Congress, 1st Session] Purchase of Danish Islands.

IMPORTANT FACTS ABOUT THE DANISH WEST INDIES

The area and its uses.—The estimated area of the Danish West Indies is 3,589 square kilometres (138 sq. miles) of which St. Thomas and the adjacent small islands occupy 86.17 sq. km., St. John with surrounding smaller islands 54.40 sq. km., Santa Cruz, Buck Island, Green Cay and Protestant Cay 218.33 sq. km.

As to the use made of the land the below table shows the following division:

Districts	Total area	For sugar plantations	For other culture	Waste land of no use
	Acres	Acres	Acres	Acres
St. Thomas	16, 082. 25	4. 00	2, 364. 65	13, 714. 23
St. John	13, 211. 25	7. 50	622. 75	12, 581. 00
Santa Cruz	51, 426. 82	15, 067. 91	31, 614. 66	4, 744. 25
Total area for the Danish West Indies	80, 720. 65	15, 079. 41	34, 601. 76	31, 601. 48

The above table indicates that the sugar culture practically is confined to the island of Santa Cruz. The area under the heading "For other culture" comprises principally the areas used as pastures, but also those used for cotton and sisal plantations, and for fruit and vegetable culture. Under this heading, as regards St. Thomas and St. John, only the area actually used is included, while under the heading "Waste land" is included uncultivated, bush or forest covered land, regardless of its suitability for cultivation. As to Santa Cruz, the heading "For other culture" means all land suitable for cultivation, not taxed as land suitable for sugar cane. "Waste land" as to this island, means barren land unsuitable for tillage.

In 1909 about 3,000 acres were used for cotton plantations, the main portion of which were located on Santa Cruz. Sisal plantations occupy about 100 acres, partly on St. Thomas and partly on Santa Cruz. The area used for fruit and vegetable culture is but a small one, and no figures can be given as to its extent, but it is hardly more than 150 to 200 acres. On St. Thomas there are defined areas used as gardens and orchards. On Santa Cruz vegetables are also raised, principally sweet potatoes, yams and onions, generally on the "banks" between the sugar canes, before these grow up, or on the fallow land, which is counted in with the area used for sugar plantations. Small areas, used for the cultivation of cocoanut-palms, are found on all of the islands, likewise small cacao plantations, on the northern side of Santa Cruz, but so far they have given insignificant returns. Further there are small plantations of oranges, lemons, bananas, pine-apples and coffee, and in St. John, baytrees. There have been times when Santa Cruz cotton, owing to its particular intrinsic value, has sold in the Liverpool market for three times the price of New Orleans cotton. Sisal culture has the advantage over that of cotton, as the former can do without rain. The returns of fruit raising have so far been of consequence to the local market only, with the exception of the baytree culture, which supply the raw material for bay rum manufacture, carried on chiefly in St. Thomas and St. John.

The forest and brush land produces but very little wood of general utility, though some of it is used for fence posts. In St. John only hardwood and bay-trees are found in quantities worthy of mention. In some places are found such fruit trees as mango, guavaberry or guava, etc., which partly subsist from culture in times gone by. From the bush land fuel is gathered, generally in the shape of small branches; charcoal is also produced in a primitive way.

Population.—The population of the islands is very much mixed. Some have come voluntarily, others have been brought as slaves, from Africa. Slavery was abolished July 4, 1848.

Three races of mankind meet here, representatives of many nations, and several different languages are spoken in the islands. Many social changes have taken place before we behold the product of to-day, the present population.

The present population according to the latest census taken, that of 1901, was 30,527, against about 38,000 in 1860. Classified according to race, there are: the white, the black and the mixture of both. According to a report issued by the Statistical Bureau of Denmark, there are about 600 whites, or 3%, in the island of Santa Cruz. In St. Thomas the percentage of whites is a trifle larger, while in St. John there is but one white family. The proportion of black to the mixed cannot be ascertained, but on good authority it is stated, that the mixed constitute about 25% of the entire population. Of the white population 427 were born in Denmark.

Steamship connections with Europe.—Steamers run every fortnight from Southampton, via Barbados, once a month from Havre or Bordeaux; four to five times from Hamburg, but most of these steamers are common freighters; freight steamers also ply between Liverpool and the Danish West Indies. But the best and cheapest connection between the mother country and the islands, for passenger traffic at least, is the new Danish West India line of steamers, which, touching at English ports, make the run in eleven or twelve days, thereby distancing all other lines as to time. The passenger rate from Copenhagen to St. Thomas is: first class $96.00. Daily expenses of the traveler in the islands may be estimated at from $2.50 to $5.00 per day, with extra for cab hire, etc.

Topography and Climate.—While St. Thomas and St. John, with adjacent smaller islands, undoubtedly belong to the Virgin Islands, it is doubted by some whether Santa Cruz belongs to that group. It should thus be noted that while the straits between the Virgin Islands are somewhat shallow, frequently not more than 20 fathoms, Santa Cruz is divided from the other islands by a sea more than 12,000 ft. in depth. There is a great difference, too, in other ways.

St. Thomas and St. John are very mountainous; the highest mountain in St. Thomas soars more than 1,500 ft. above sea level, and that of St. John nearly 1,300 ft. Santa Cruz is rather mountainous, too, but there the more level land is rather extensive. The highest point in this island is Mt. Eagle, about 1,150 ft. in height.

While the islands can not be said to be volcanic, they are, nevertheless, not free from earthquakes, which, generally, however, are of such a mild character that they cause little damage.

The islands being located between 17° and 19° north latitude, the climate is consequently wholly tropical, the heat being tempered by the refreshing north-east trade-wind, which during the larger part of the year brings the islands relief and coolness. The mean temperature of the year is 26.5 degrees C., evenly divided through the year. The coldest months are December, January and February. The difference between the hottest month, September, with a mean temperature of 25.6 degrees C., is thus only a little more than 3 degrees over that of the coldest months. The same evenness as to temperature applies also to that of day and night, which hardly ever varies more than 5 degrees.

The islands have no definite rainy season, as absolute drought may sometimes prevail for an uncertain, lengthy time. According to observations, taken during a long series of years, the first months of the years are the driest, with February as the climax. October is generally the month of heaviest rainfall. Dry periods are not infrequent, and during these the sugar plantations sustain much injury.

The Sugar Plantations.—About one-third of the area of Santa Cruz, about 15,000 acres, is used for sugar cane cultivation. Of the other two-thirds a small part is used for pastures, while a larger portion is not made use of at all. The sugar cane land runs from the city of Christiansted to the city of Frederiksted, extending through a broad belt, bordered by the sea to the south and by the sea and the Northwest Mountains to the north. Several varieties of sugar cane are cultivated. As by-products of the sugar industry may be mentioned syrup (malas) and rum. Some years ago a central sugar boiling plant was established in Santa Cruz. This factory has become an important factor in keeping sugar culture in many places where it would otherwise have become extinct. The institution has thus created a class of small planters, negroes and mulattos, who cultivate a small piece of land and sell their sugar canes to the central factory. Formerly sugar cultivation could not be carried on without also owning a refinery.

In former years the sugar cane would grow well year after year, but the soil is now, after many years of reckless use, so poor, that it at intervals of a few years, has to be left fallow and carefully manured. This manner of overstraining the land was brought about by the high price of sugar, once prevalent; now the competition of beet sugar has rendered cane sugar culture far less profitable than in those days. It should not be understood that cane sugar cultivation in the Danish West Indies is unprofitable, on the contrary, it has in several instances been demonstrated, that by proper and rational methods of cultivation, especially the use of suitable artificial fertilizers, (chiefly salt of potassium), and by a more up-to-date treatment of the soil, by which the working expenses are considerably reduced, very good returns may be obtained; this being the case with some of the west coast plantations. Men who know, advise that cane sugar culture ought to be encouraged in the islands, but the methods of cultivation should be improved according to modern principles. The cultivation of other products, such as cotton, tobacco and cocoanuts could also, according to the opinion of some authorities, be carried on with profitable results in the islands. Sandy land, otherwise of small, if any value, might be used for the culture of cocoanuts. In years gone by tobacco-raising was one of the most important pursuits.

The negroes around the city of St. Thomas raise fruit and vegetables, which are nearly all sold in the town market.

Labor and Wages.—The emancipation of the negroes, July 4, 1848, was a hard blow to the plantation owners. From that time on they had to pay the labor they formerly commanded for nothing. The mere support of the negroes had cost them but a trifle, and the indemnification paid them by the Government was but a poor offset for the loss of the ownership of the slaves. Since that year the importance of Santa Cruz has declined, and as the increased beet sugar production in Europe caused a fall in prices of sugar, the profit from sugar culture was so small that many of the planters gave it up and used their land as pastures for cattle. The much needed rest that was thus given the soil improved it and rendered it capable of better yield, whether used as cane sugar plantations or for other culture.

The larger number of the negroes may be said to find their employment on the sugar plantations. When a negro is being employed by a planter a bargain is generally closed for several years, two negroes and one white man act as witnesses. The negro being employed receives at once a sum of money from his employer, and is given quarters in the negro village that belongs to each plantation. Married negroes are allowed 3 rooms, unmarried 1. They are permitted to keep pigs and poultry, and they are given the use of a small piece of land where they may raise fruit and vegetables. On the plantations they have opportunity to purchase cornmeal, dried codfish, etc.

The wages, per day, range, in general, for a negro from 20 to 30 cents, the laborer to furnish his own board. Boys and men of poorer qualifications for work receive less. They all have free medical attendance.

The hours are, in general, from 6 a. m. to 1 p. m. and 3 to 5 p. m. At six o'clock each negro receives a small quantity of rum. During the harvesting season, however, the work begins at 4 and lasts until 10 p. m. Saturday they are free from work on the plantation and may use the day for cultivating their small gardens. In many cases, however, the negro does not make good use of his free day, instead spending the wages for the past week, which he receives early Saturday morning, for liquors, etc.

The Trade.—The islands import annually goods worth about $1,500,000, of which the United States furnish more than one-half, the United Kingdom about one-fourth; while the imports from the mother country amount to only about $140,000. The exports are valued at about $750,000, of which more than 80 per cent go to the United States. Principal items of import are: Breadstuffs and provisions, manufactures of iron and steel, boots and shoes, from the United States, electrical goods, cotton goods, machinery, iron and steel, soap, spirits and woollens, from the United Kingdom. The principal items of exports from the Danish West Indies are: Sugar (nearly 50 per cent of the total export), bay rum, beeswax, hides, skins and cotton.

While many vessels call at St. Thomas and purchase supplies, there is still a large amount of work to be done before the city will be able to regain its position as one of the great commercial centers of the archipelago that it once held, and which to a large extent has been transferred to the city of Barbados. In this respect great expectations are linked to the opening of the Panama Canal, for the reason that St. Thomas both has a better harbor, which is undergoing great improvements, than Barbados or any other place in the neighborhood, and also possesses a salubrious and pleasant climate, and should thus make a most suitable coaling and general supply station for vessels.

Roads.—Very good country roads are found in the cultivated parts of Santa Cruz. Also in St. Thomas, in the eastern and in the western parts, there are passable roads, but much less extensive than those in Santa Cruz. St. John has hardly any roads worthy of the name, the only exception being some stretches of cart roads, the rest are bridle paths.

The Islands and the Mother Country.—Besides the official administration, the colonial home office, and the Governor and his subordinate officers, there is a society, The Society of the Danish Islands of the Atlantic, and a commercial company, The Danish West Indies Plantation Company, that take special interest in the development of the islands.

The Society of the Danish Islands of the Atlantic.—This society, social-economic in character, was organized in 1902. It was the question of the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States that was the prime cause of the formation of the society, a measure (the sale of the islands), which the new-formed society worked against to the full extent of its power.

The program of the society, as set forth in its public organ Atlanten, is: To further the development of the Danish colonies, especially in an economic sense, and to strengthen the national spirit among the different inhabitants of the Kingdom.

These aims the society tries to attain, chiefly, by the following means:

1. To gather information of economic value to the colonies.
2. To spread information in regard to the colonies, as to their economic and other conditions, among the inhabitants of the Kingdom, and thereby arouse their interest for the aims of the society.
3. To give free of charge voluntary guidance to anybody, who applies to the society for information in regard to the colonies, or such information as will be of benefit to the population of the colonies.
4. To work for the accomplishment of improvements in existing conditions by influencing public opinion, eventually by approaching the Government and the Congress.

The society had about 1,000 members in 1904. This number has since increased.

The membership fee is Kr. 5.00 per annum, or Kr. 200.00 for a life membership.

There is a special division for each of the following colonies: Iceland, the Faroe Islands, Greenland and the Danish West Indies.

At present the society is bringing all the influence it commands to bear on the completion of the harbor improvements at St. Thomas, before the Panama Canal is finished.

The society has no commercial interests and does not offer any pecuniary assistance to people who want to emigrate to the colonies.

The Danish West Indies Plantation Company, Ltd.—This company (entirely commercial) was organized in 1902 with a stock capital of $352,400, for the purpose of furthering agriculture in the Danish West Indies, where it owns plantations.

Of white labor the company only employs unmarried men, whose chief occupation has been farm work. They agree to stay for a period of about two years, at least, on the plantations.

In case they decide to leave the plantation after a short stay only, they have to refund the company for the passage money paid for them, (about $100). For those who remain on the plantation during the time agreed upon, the company furnishes free passage to the place where they are to work.

So far the company has sent sixteen men over. They act as foremen, or inspectors on the plantations, also as caretakers of the company's domestic animals. The actual work in the fields is done by negroes exclusively. The company has no land for sale, and advises nobody to go there who is not previously employed by owners of plantations, or else have capital enough to buy a plantation for themselves.

This company owns 4,431 acres of land in the islands of which 100 acres are used for sugar plantations, 713 acres for cotton culture. They employ some 415 persons of which 219 are men and 196 women. They keep some 100 horses and colts, 63 mules, 156 draught-oxen, 148 cows, 171 calves and about 100 head of sheep. The total number of animals kept by the company is 852. The valuation of the company's holdings of land, factories, stock animals, buildings, etc. as given in one of their latest annual reports, was about $200,000, and the profit from their property during the year was about $5,900. In the same report it is, however, indicated that previous years have brought the company loss instead of profit.

Santa Cruz Sugar Factory.—The last annual report for this plant shows better results. During the year there were delivered to the factory 56,750,000 pounds of sugar cane, against 38,000,000 pounds the previous year, and the sugar has been $\frac{1}{3}\%$ higher. The expenses have also been lowered. For sugar cane was paid 44.88 øre (\$0.12) per Cwt. (1 Cwt. equals 110.22 lbs.), against 36.5 øre (\$0.109) the previous year. The production price was thus 0.5 øre (\$0.00134) less per pound of sugar and the sale price 2.5 øre (\$0.0069) higher. The total surplus was Kr. 270,000 (\$72,494.00). After the stipulated reserve and gratuities were deducted, Kr. 16,818 (\$4,485.00) were placed on the account for new buildings, and a 9% dividend was paid. Kr. 50,000 (\$13,333.00) were placed on the account of extra pay to the suppliers of the cane, and Kr. 8,300 (\$2,215.00) carried forward to new account.

When, above the statutory 6%, there is given a 3% extra dividend, it is partly due to the fact that the shareholders, during the two foregoing poor years, received no dividend, and partly to the fact that the surplus was so large that Kr. 50,000 ($13,333) could be placed on account for the suppliers.

The Constabulary Corps.—This corps of armed police numbers 4 officers, 9 petty officers and 110 enlisted men, with 33 horses. The enlisted men, at the time of enlistment, must be less than 30 years of age, must have had previous military training and be unmarried. Such enlisted men must bind themselves to serve three years in the Danish West Indies, at the end of which they may reenlist if they so desire.

The pay is about $0.64 per day, and free station and uniform. They may be advanced to subcorporals and corporals and as such receive an additional pay of $19.30 and $38.60 respectively per annum. Upon honorable discharge from the corps they are allowed, if they have served continually for 3 years, $57.90 for each full 3 years of satisfactory service.

After three years of service, a man is paid $386.00 a year; if married, he is permitted to live outside the barracks, and given a special allowance for quarters.

THE DANISH WEST INDIA ISLANDS

[From Social-Demokraten, Copenhagen, August 6, 1911]

Hamburg no longer cares whether St. Thomas is a Danish possession—Will America buy the islands?

Some time ago we wrote that a Hamburg paper, the Hamburger Fremdenblatt, had been much interested in the question of our West India Islands, particularly St. Thomas. This paper declared that Denmark was not capable of making the harbor of St. Thomas of sufficient importance, particularly in connection with the near completion of the Panama Canal, and made the statement that the island would be taken over by the United States.

That a Hamburg paper, so closely connected with all shipping interests, should write in that tone, created quite a sensation. It is a well known fact that the Hamburg ship owners, particularly the Hamburg-American Line, during 1902, were keenly interested in the fact that Denmark should keep the West India Islands. Furthermore, there is no doubt that it was the influence of the Hamburg-American Line, brought to bear on our East Asiatic Company that put itself at the head of a patriotic movement against the sale of the islands. It was also this company's former committee member, Deuntzer, who, acting as Minister of Foreign Affairs, put a stop to the sale. Finally, there can be no doubt that the director of the Hamburg-American Line, Max Ballin, during those troubled and anxious days, and owing to his friendship with the Emperor William, started the friendly relations between the German and the Danish courts, relations which caused a great sensation, due to being so unexpected and of such excessive warmth.

In 1902 it was of vital importance to German shipping interests in the West Indies that Denmark should keep St. Thomas. At that time the German trade had a widely spread field of action in the West Indies and in South America, but there was a feeling of unsafety due to not possessing a harbor of its own, belonging to a Power whose trade would not compete with its own. St. Thomas was just the basis needed by the German ships, particularly the Hamburg-American Line. It was for this reason that this line exercised itself to the utmost to the end that St. Thomas should remain a Danish possession. It was in reality the influence of the German ship owners that prohibited the sale, a result which the patriots of Denmark naively imagined they had accomplished.

It is no wonder, therefore, when the Hamburg paper this year (1911) spoke so slightly of Denmark's supremacy in these islands, that one should think that something had happened during the past nine years to change the attitude of Germany, or that possibly the Germans had their eyes on something better. This surmise has already been confirmed by the report of the journalist Johs. Hoeck, sent to the Danish paper Vort Land, in which he describes the plans the Hamburg interests are making for a harbor in the vicinity of the Panama Canal, in Colombia, South America, the frontier of which reaches to the Republic of Panama, formerly a part of Colombia. Mr. Hoeck's information is neither explicit nor comprehensive, though one is informed that he has seen extensive work going on in the harbor at the mouth of the river Atrato, which empties into the Atlantic Ocean; and that railway lines are springing up in hitherto unknown regions. He also states that concessions from the Colombian Government to begin these works have been obtained by Hamburg parties; that they have paid cash for the concessions; that the harbor is to be called Port Cesar; and that the greatest care is taken to conceal all these plans from the rest of the world. From all this one can easily understand why the Hamburg paper writes with so much superiority and so openly regarding Denmark, stating that now there is no obstacle to the sale of St. Thomas to the United States of America.

Without doubt, the Germans have other projects for harbors in the West India seas, among these, plans for a basis on one of the West India Islands. Our readers may remember that about a fortnight ago there was talk of a revolution in Haiti, the large West India island which is an independent negro republic. The President has been driven away by the rebels. Since then the rebels have divided into two parties, one having as candidate for the presidency General Firmin, the other General Leconte. Everything points to the fact that American interests are with Firmin, German interests with Leconte. The latter was once Haiti's Ambassador to Germany, and Germany has already shown her lively interest in the revolution by sending a man-of-war to Haiti. This has roused the wrath of the Americans and we are not surprised that they should disclose to us the fact that Leconte is a mere puppet in the hands of German capitalist. If one takes part in a revolution it is always with the noblest motives, but when it is a question of one's opponent, one is never slow to disclose the real motive behind it all.

The following telegram is from Washington: "According to the latest information received here, the revolution now going on in Haiti is considered of much greater importance than any former rebellion in the black republic. Between General Leconte, who has proclaimed himself president (the German candidate does it himself, of course, while the American candidate is proposed by an enormous popular movement.—Editor's note.) and a syndicate of German bankers, there is said to be an agreement by which the syndicate has pledged itself to pay one million kroner into a bank at Port au Prince for General Leconte's disposal. When Leconte enters upon his Government this sum will be looked upon as Haiti's Government debt. If he is chosen president, Leconte has pledged himself to grant the syndicate the following monopolies: 1st—the working of the Haiti mines; 2d—a monopoly of the coaling stations, partly at St. Nicolas and partly at another point of the island; 3d—denial of trade privileges to all states whose trade compete with Germany."

It is very likely that the Americans exaggerated a good deal in their report of the Germans' cunning plans and that they wish to excite a feeling against them. But certain it is, these disclosures point in the right direction. Harbors and metal, particularly iron, are just what the Germans always look for in foreign countries; and even before this information came to hand, an attentive observer might have said to himself: "Something is brewing here. An Ambassador from Germany at the head of a revolution. A German warship on the coast of a foreign republic, in seas where it is of the greatest interest for Germans to have a point of vantage! All this makes us suspect secret treaties are being held by bank directors, ship owners and diplomats."

Naturally we are interested in all this through the ultimate fate of our West India Islands. We do not know if any effort has been made by the Hamburg interests to make the harbor of St. Thomas more modern while still belonging to Denmark. As far as known by us, there are concessions of an older date concerning the harbor which would clash with any new alterations. Of course, this might be arranged in a monetary way. The question is this, whether, since 1902, the Hamburg interests have looked upon Denmark's possession as temporary, or whether they have felt certain all along that the United States would eventually buy them. Perhaps on this account the German interests have taken no steps towards modernizing the harbor and have been constantly on the lookout for other ways of handling their commerce.

The question of the sale of the islands will naturally come to the front again, but unfortunately it will not be brought forward until we are overwhelmed by the burden of our new enormous taxes. First we shall have to pay the enormous military expenses, then the sale of the islands will bring us fresh money, for new fortifications. We are quite sure that the next time an offer is made to buy these islands no "patriotic" movement will be made,—the naïves will, perhaps, appear on the scene again, but the bank directors will not. The words of Shakespeare: "The Moor has done his duty, the Moor may leave", will then fit the case of our "black brethren" most nicely.

[From Social Demokraten for November 1, 1911]

We have already at an earlier date called the attention of our readers to the momentous occurrences which are surreptitiously taking place in the West India Islands, South and Central America. The Germans, especially the Hamburg shipowners and merchants, are carrying on a persistent and, as far as we can see, determinate struggle with a view of getting such a strong foothold over there that the United States will not be able to oust them when the Panama Canal is opened.

This German contest is also of great interest to us, since St. Thomas has hitherto been the center for the Hamburg steamship lines in that part of the world. In the show window of the Hamburg-American Line on the street Unter den Linden, in Berlin, there is a large map of the world on which are indicated the different lines belonging to the company, and it is interesting to see St. Thomas, on this map, look like a spider, owing to the large number of Hamburg lines diverging in all directions from this little island of ours. We have also pointed out in this paper at an earlier date how it really was the Hamburg interests which in 1902 prevented the sale of our three islands. For the Hamburg-American Line it was a question of life or death for their great steamship lines running to Central and South America that Denmark should keep the islands, and especially St. Thomas.

We now have occasion to return to this subject, since the interest of the Hamburg people in our retaining the islands seems to have cooled off. At short intervals the Hamburger Fremdenblatt several times reiterated that St. Thomas would be sure to go to the United States, since Denmark was not able to make the harbor improvements which the situation of the island requires. We are at a loss to know what motive the Hamburg paper had in repeatedly bringing up the state of things on St. Thomas, but perhaps it has some connection with the rumors which have been circulated and which have even created considerable sensation on the stock exchange, namely, that foreign capitalists have applied to our Government for concessions on the island. It would be a very good thing if the Rigsdag could be informed of what really lies under all this, and to know if our Government, or the patriots who at one time offered to put up millions for this cause, really have any definite plan with respect to the future of these islands.

It looks as if the Hamburg people had given up St. Thomas. Not that they have given up their steamship traffic on the island, they have only directed their attentions in a different direction. The successful revolution last summer on the large West India island Haiti brought the ex-ambassador of Haiti at Berlin into power in one of the negro republics of the island, and it was said that the financial support given him by German capitalists was to be paid by a monopoly on the harbors of the island. At the same time, a Danish journalist, Mr. Johs. Hoeck, said that he had seen the beginning of an enormous harbor construction on the north coast of the South American Republic of Colombia, not far from the Panama Canal, a harbor construction which, as far as possible, is being kept secret. And now, the other day, we received new information in regard to the plans of the Germans. The news came from New York, where the movements of the Germans are very closely watched. According to this information the Germans have plans to build a canal in competition to the Panama Canal.

Close to Panama lies the Republic of Costa Rica, and a little higher up on the map the Republic of Nicaragua. As a boundary between these two States, the St. Juan River runs from the great Lake Nicaragua out to the Atlantic Ocean, and this river is navigable all the way up to the lake. To the west there is a strip of land to be cut through, but it is much narrower than the Isthmus of Panama. Ever since the sixteenth century the plan of cutting through this strip of land has been, from time to time, advanced in Europe, and ever since the latter part of the 19th century companies have been formed for doing this work. In the decade 1890-1900 much was done in this respect, but the canal did not become a reality. The Germans have planned to go up the navigable St. Juan River and across the great Nicaragua Lake and then up a river coming from the southwest, namely the Sapoa River, thus making the land-cut still shorter. The American paper was able to give the names of the principal men in the German consortium. It even asserts that the German Government is backing the enterprise, and it states that the United States Government has already made representations to the two Republics concerned and given them to understand that the granting of such a concession would be considered an unfriendly act towards the United States. Of course the statements of an American newspaper on such a subject cannot be accepted without reservations, but the New York correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt has made investigations. He got a disavowal, as far as regarded an official action, but it was admitted that the plan of building the canal really existed.

Thus within a year we have seen the persistent struggles of the German capitalists exposed in three different places, Haiti, Colombia, Costa Rica, and it all speaks of Germany's economical conquest of the lands east and west of the Panama Canal.

But will all this still continue to proceed in secret? The Government of the United States distrustfully follows the movements of the Germans, and is it reasonable to suppose that this great Power will stand still and see a European Power, in spite of the Monroe Doctrine, actually annex American ground?

And what will be the consequences for St. Thomas? Will the United States purchase or take it in order to make it an American port? Deplorably enough, it is not probable that the United States any longer has use for it, for it has already built a great harbor on Cuba as a basis for its steamship traffic through the Panama Canal. When the time once comes when the Hamburg people get their new harbor constructions ready on Haiti and in Colombia and therefore no longer have any use for St. Thomas, America will perhaps not even buy the islands, and what will we then do with them? St. Thomas has its splendid natural presuppositions, but they are not sufficient in this capitalistic age, which requires enormous improvements of the natural resources.

And even if both natural and artificial presuppositions existed, there must be ships to make use of them.

In 1902 there were two States looking for a harbor in the West Indies, America and Germany. Germany won the victory, and Denmark retained the islands, only for the benefit of German navigation, but now when both Germans and Americans have good harbors elsewhere, who is going to make use of St. Thomas?

No. 476

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, November 14, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to state that, in a conversation with Count Ahlefeldt-Laurvig, Minister for Foreign Affairs, using Mr. Nielsen's recent lecture on Panama and Danish West India Islands as a text, I asked him whether the Danish Government expected the condition of the islands to improve after the opening of the Panama Canal. He said yes, that the Government was doing its best to increase the depth of the harbor, and that the industrial outlook was better; but this in rather a vague way. He did not seem to know anything about the sea cotton industry, but laid great stress on the production of bay rum. He said that he had once been in favor of selling the islands to the United States for the reason that they were of no profit to Denmark, and in case of war it was difficult to defend colonies so far distant. His view had changed of late, however, as conditions in the islands were improving. I said that my Government was, at present, occupied with more important questions. Personally, I added, I very much desired to see these islands so near our coast the property of the United States, and if there was any intention on the part of his Government to offer them for sale, I should do all in my power to urge our Government to accept any reasonable offer, but that their value strategically and economically was not so great now as it was before we acquired Puerto Rico and a naval station in Cuba. I said I understood that Danish national pride was the main thing that stood in the way of parting with these islands, and naturally we Americans, who were sometimes sentimental ourselves, sympathized with this. I said I was surprised that there still existed Danes who imagined that the West India Islands could be traded to Germany for Schleswig.

THE WEST INDIA ISLANDS

[From København, a Conservative organ, for November 11, 1911]The fruitful work for the improvement of the islands

That which we wish to call attention to by means of these articles is the fact that, in certain radical and social-democratic circles, there has of late been carried on and is still being carried on an agitation with the view of again bringing the question of the sale of the West Indian Islands into the order of the day, and that attempts are being made in these circles to create a feeling favorable to the sale of the islands, partly by undermining public confidence in the administration of the islands, and partly by belittling the value of the work which has already been done for the improvement of the islands and the future possibilities for the islands which will be opened up by the completing of the Panama Canal.

It is a pleasure for us to be able to say that we have, during the last few days, received manifold proofs of the interest felt by the public in our West Indian Islands and of the sorrow and resentment which has been aroused by the news that an agitation is again going on in certain circles for the sale of these islands.

But we can fortunately add that the agitation, no matter how cunningly it has been arranged, has not gained and will not gain a foothold outside of radical and social-democratic circles. All other parties, as well as the Government, have decided to meet the agitation, if it really sees the light of day, with the firmest opposition.

The telegrams which have appeared in the foreign press, stating that negotiations have been opened between the United States and the Danish Government in regard to the sale of one or more of the West India Islands are quite untrue.

In the attempts to undermine confidence in the administration of the islands, great zeal has been displayed in representing the Plantation Association's work on the islands as unsatisfactory, not to say unsuccessful. Nothing can be more remote from the truth. The truth is the exact opposite. Not only has the Danish Plantation Association accomplished more than was expected when it was started, but it has awakened an initiative on the islands. Others have seen that the work of the Plantation Association was not in vain and have therefore themselves taken hold and done what they could.

It is a fact that large tracts of land which were formerly covered with bushes and which, mark well, did not belong to the Plantation Association, are now under the plough. In many places where formerly there was nothing to be seen but a wilderness of bushes and mouldering ruins, there are now vast fields of good cotton, and many new houses have been built and old ruins, long left without roofs, are rebuilt and inhabited.

This is just the picture of the progress on the islands.

The Plantation Association has also done a great and energetic work in making experiments of different kinds, and it is not least the results of these experiments that have benefited lands owned by others than the Plantation Association.

It would not be easy in a daily newspaper to enter into the details of these experiments, but so much we can say: they have been so extensive and exhaustive that they have given the best guarantee that the Plantation Association will attain the goal it has in view. Thus no one has any right to use the Plantation Association as a scapegoat in an agitation for the sale of the islands.

The work of the Plantation Association has in itself shown that the improvement of the islands in the possession of Denmark is an indisputable fact.

THE WEST INDIA ISLANDS

[An editorial leader in København, a Conservative organ, for November 12, 1911]

The Excavation of the Panama Canal and the future of the Islands

The question has been asked us: What is the use of an agitation for the sale of the islands just now? It can not be on account of the condition of the islands. The work that was begun to promote the interests of the islands when their sale was refused has borne fruit, and far from the future of the islands being darker, it contains the richest possibilities. This is true to such an extent that, aside from all other considerations, it would be disastrous to sell the islands now. It is difficult to say how much advantage the islands will derive from the excavation of the Panama Canal, but there is no doubt that it will be of great benefit to them.

Therefore we are at liberty to assume that the agitation for the sale of the islands is based exclusively on personal interests. If this is the case, there is no wonder that a certain party insists that it is now high time to make the last attempt to sell them.

For every year that passes, it will be more and more difficult to break faith with the Danish Plantation Association, and in the same moment that the Panama Canal is opened, the discussion in regard to its significance or insignificance will be broken off by facts which will speak a language that will banish all doubts on this subject.

How advantageous it is for the friends of the sale to recommence their agitation just now, and how easy to understand that it has taken the form described by us in this series of articles.

But for those who neither can agree with Mr. Nansen in his view of the history and the goal of the Nation, nor will allow themselves to be led by the secret motives, which keep the radical and socialistic sale-agitation alive, there is all possible reason to affirm that we, neither from national principles, economical considerations, nor with respect to the opportune work begun on the islands, which has opened a new field for Danish enterprise and work, can or will agree to the sale of the islands.

But we should not be satisfied with this; on the contrary, we should utilize the fact that the sale-agitators have again put the islands in the order of the day, and raise the question: What can be done to enable the islands to reap the greatest benefits from the possibilities offered by the opening of the Panama Canal?

What febrile, secret activity there is to make the sale of the islands popular, may perhaps be seen best by considering the part played by the Panama Canal in this agitation. It meant death to every thought of sale, and therefore it must be hidden as well as possible.

Nay, they nearly went so far as to defend the view that the Panama Canal would just ruin the islands. More ridiculous talk could hardly be invented, and hardly a single soul could be caught by it, but a discussion of this question would be in place if it can only lead to a negotiation as to what can be done to give the islands the greatest possible advantages from the Canal.

It is obvious that the task is now of quite a different character than when it was a question of cultivating the islands. Then it was natural and opportune that private initiative took hold; here it is specially the State that is to show the way and do the work.

As everybody knows, it was the harbor of St. Thomas, its situation on the steamship route and its excellent presuppositions, which the Americans were after, when they undertook the building of the Panama Canal. It is on the harbor of St. Thomas that the work must be done, if the islands are to enjoy the advantages which are naturally theirs.

But if nothing is done to modernize the harbor of St. Thomas, while there is time, the good presuppositions may be wasted. It is then asked what the Government intends to do, in order that we may be ready in time to pluck the fruits when this great world's enterprise gives its harvest.

THE DANISH WEST INDIES

[An article in Politiken, a Liberal organ, for November 14, 1911]

The series of articles which the renowned author, L. C. Nielsen, has been writing for this paper in regard to the Panama Canal have aroused a lively interest in the Danish West Indies, and in the provincial press considerable attention has lately been devoted to the condition of these islands. Nothing new has, however, been said on this subject. The impression is given that the authors of these articles have a very superficial knowledge of the Danish West Indies and a very exaggerated idea of the work of the Plantation Association. The truth is, however, that this Association, notwithstanding energetic leadership and ample means, has not accomplished much, simply because there was not much to do. Of the three islands, St. Croix is the only one that is arable, and unfortunately this island can only grow sugar cane, and on the one side, cane sugar is excluded from America by means of the American custom duties, and on the other side, it finds no market in Europe on account of the low prices of beet sugar.

The men who have unselfishly worked in the Plantation Association must certainly have found out that the islands can not be kept up simply by cultivation of sugar cane, no matter how rational this cultivation may be. What we will harvest on the St. Croix plantations in the future will also be nothing but disappointment and loss, more economic loss.

The papers which now again, without visible cause, raise the question of selling the islands, even if only to agitate against it, will not benefit the Plantation Association.

It will be just as astonishing in the West Indies as it is here to read in København the following:

"It is a pleasure for us to be able to say that we have, during the last few days, received manifold proofs of the interest felt by the public in our West Indian Islands and of the sorrow and resentment which has been aroused by the news that an agitation is again going on in certain circles for the sale of these islands.

"But we can fortunately add that the agitation, no matter how cunningly it has been arranged, has not gained and will not gain any foothold outside of radical and social democratic circles. All other parties, as well as the Government, have decided to meet the agitation, if it really sees the light of day, with the firmest opposition."

We do not know what circles are now agitating for the sale of the islands, but as it is not probable that it is the Government, there can not be any imminent danger of the sale taking place. We hope that this will lessen the "sorrow and resentment"; but since this paper København is in such a state of tremor, it is hardly worth while to explain to it that the same economical considerations which in 1905 urged every sensible Danish citizen to sell the islands, now, since the Panama Canal has created new conditions and possibilities, must urge every sensible Danish citizen to keep them. This simply depends on the common commercial principle that when an article suddenly begins to rise in price it should be kept.

We submit this simple reasoning to the consideration of our excited colleague. It will be easier for that paper to understand than the agricultural conditions of the West India Islands.

THE ECONOMICAL CRISIS IN DANISH WEST INDIES

[Lecture held in the "Nationaløkonomisk Forening" January 17, 1907, by Chief of Department F. P. Hiort-Lorenzen]

The subject on which I shall have the honor to speak at this meeting is the Economical Crisis in the Danish West Indies. I will begin by saying that my remarks will chiefly be devoted to the impressions I have received and the statements I have heard made during my stay in the West Indies and since then. People are frequently liable to pass hasty judgments on matters in regard to which they know very little, several naïve West Indians have been guilty of this, and I will therefore try to be as objective as possible in my statements.

It is generally known that there has been and to a certain degree still is an economical crisis in our West Indian colonies, but very little is known as to the causes thereof and the means for a possible remedy. I therefore feel sure that a few orientating remarks on this subject will be interesting to my audience.

During the continuous decadence taking place in all three of the Danish West Indian Islands, especially during the last 30 or 40 years of the last century, it is natural that the blame has been laid on the administration and government of the mother country, and this quite unjustly. It is true that Denmark, in accordance with the general colonial politics of the Powers until somewhat past the middle of the last century, used its West Indian Islands as a kind of "milk-cow" and took from them large sums to benefit the Danish Treasury. At that time, however, the islands could afford it, and in later years, the tables have been turned. The government of the islands has, on the whole, certainly been as good as could be expected, in consideration of the great distance of the islands from the home country, the poor communications hitherto existing between them and the home country, and the slight knowledge possessed here in regard to tropical conditions. Neither should the fact be ignored that it is very difficult to carry on colonial politics on such a small scale. The duties of administration have been divided between the War, Justice, Finance and Educational Departments, besides which the commercial and agricultural interests had to be looked after.

Since conditions on the different islands are quite varied, I will first treat of St. Thomas, and then of St. Croix and St. John.

The flourishing period of St. Thomas is identical with the period of sailing vessels. Ships coming from Europe sought the trade winds and were guided by them towards the northern Antilles, where they first sighted Sombrero, whose lighthouse showed them the way, and then they entered the broad, clear and deep channel which, between St. John and St. Thomas on the one side and St. Croix on the other, leads to the Caribbean Sea. It was quite natural that the vessels, after the long voyage across the Atlantic, touched at the large and safe harbor of St. Thomas to replenish their supplies of food and water, and this caused the merchants there to keep a great stock of goods. In its prosperous days, St. Thomas was a market to which merchants from great distances found their way. Not only from the adjacent islands, such as Porto Rico and St. Domingo, but from many of the South American Republics, from the east coast Cuba, and from Central America, merchants made several annual voyages to St. Thomas to make purchases. The St. Thomas merchants carried on wholesale business with comparatively great capitals. To this day, the enormous stock-rooms attached to the old stores in St. Thomas show how great commerce has been here. This commerce which thus began as a transit trade, gradually grew into a despatch or forwarding business, in which the merchants of the island acted as commissioners, the goods being ordered on the account of the foreign merchants and only despatched via St. Thomas. The profits of such trade were less, but were, nevertheless, very considerable. But gradually, as traffic with sailing vessels was substituted by steamship traffic, so that there was at last direct steamship communication between Europe and every harbor in the West Indies and vicinity, the commerce gradually disappeared. Many of the large firms moved to other places, f. i. to Barbados and Trinidad, and the remaining merchants do not give one much of an idea of the former commercial importance of the island. The commerce of to-day is principally confined to supplying passing men-of-war and other steamers with coal and provisions and a small trade with the nearest British island, Tortola. Even after commerce had begun to wane, sailing vessel traffic was for some time the source of prosperity on the island. Previous to the introduction of the telegraph, sailing vessels from Europe flocked to St. Thomas to get their freight orders there. At that time there were frequently hundreds of ships lying in the harbor, and of course this brought good profits to the islanders; but when the telegraph came, even this traffic disappeared at once. The ship-owners in Europe could now give their ships direct telegraphic orders in other harbors, so it was unnecessary to stop at St. Thomas.

Thus while the development of steamship traffic and the introduction of the telegraph may be mentioned as the principal reasons for this economical misery on St. Thomas, there were also other causes which contributed thereto. The island has no return freight, so that freight rates to the island are rather high. Customs frontiers between it and the other islands make transit trade difficult. On several occasions hurricanes and earthquakes have visited the island, each time causing millions of dollars' worth of damage. Furthermore, the fact that the money earned on St. Thomas has quickly left the island, for those who earned a fortune there left the island to spend their money in Europe or America. Thus the island had no reserve fund to resort to in hard times. Finally, the once flourishing agriculture of St. Thomas is now almost ruined. For instance, the production of sugar has entirely ceased, as a result of the fall in prices.

Now if we look at the possibilities for the development of St. Thomas, I will here ignore the efforts made by the Government to improve the financial conditions of the island and the colonial lottery, which latter must be regarded as an emergency relief. On the other hand, I will call attention to the efforts made by private individuals and companies to support the island, and in this connection I would specially mention the steamship line owned by the East Asia Company, and the West India Fruit Company, which is already carrying on quite a considerable export of fruit, etc. The East Asia Company has established a coal depot on the island, thus causing great progress. Formerly coal prices on St. Thomas were so high that competitors on St. Lucia had taken away much of the coal trade from St. Thomas by quoting cheaper prices, but now the East Asia Company has put the prices down, thus causing a considerable advancement of this branch of business. While coal formerly cost eight to nine dollars, and during the Spanish-American War twelve dollars per ton, the price is now only 22s. 6d. for American and 27s. for English coal.

If we look at the accessible statistics in regard to incoming and outgoing navigation on St. Thomas, and in regard to imports to St. Thomas, there does not appear any marked increase during the last few years, at least not sufficient for us to conclude with any certainty that there has been any improvement of the economical situation. It may be noted, however, that not only the income from custom duties and harbor fees but also the number of incoming and outgoing vessels in 1905-06 show an increase of late years.

It may, however, be taken for granted that the present fiscal year will show a more favorable result. Thus the East Asia Company states that in 1906 coal was sold to 50 more steamers than in 1905. In order to illustrate what this means to St. Thomas, let me state that the wages paid to laborers for loading the coal on these 50 steamers amounted to about 41,000 francs, which sum the laborers earned in addition to their earnings for the preceding year. As a proof of the energy with which the East Asia Company is working to improve the traffic on St. Thomas, I might mention that the company in 1907 has already made contracts with 300 steamship owners for supplying coal to vessels coming to West Indian waters. The company is now selling about 2,000 tons of coal per month, but it hopes soon to increase these sales to 5,000 tons per month. It is unnecessary to point out what an enormous significance this will have for the laboring class and thereby for the merchants and the whole population in general, but it is obvious that it is an inestimable benefit for St. Thomas that the far-seeing directors of the East Asia Company are interested in the progress of the island.

The question, however, which will be finally decisive for the future of St. Thomas is this, viz.: "What effect will the opening of the Panama Canal have on St. Thomas, and what steps should be taken in order to be prepared to meet the coming eventualities?"

In Denmark it is now claimed that the excellent situation of St. Thomas for the direct route between Europe and the eastern port of the Panama Canal, Colon, as the first port passed by the vessels on entering the Caribbean Sea from the Atlantic, and, on the other hand, as the last port passed before leaving the Caribbean Sea en route for Europe, will certainly give the island an extraordinary significance as staple town and station for supply of coal, water and provisions. It is also claimed that if suitable dry docks and repair wharves are instituted at St. Thomas, many sea-damaged vessels will seek refuge in this harbor for repairs.

The business men of St. Thomas believe that we here have too sanguine a view of the effects of the Panama Canal. They think that, no matter whether it is a question of navigation across the Atlantic or along the coast of America, there will be a tendency to make repairs and take in supplies at the termini of the voyage, if possible, where this can be done cheaper than at St. Thomas; that the competition with Colon and several other ports will be very sharp, and, especially with respect to coaling, that for the passage of the canal there will be used such large steamers that they can take on board sufficient coal for the whole voyage, or that they will otherwise coal in Colon or Panama.

For an independent view of this question, it will now first be of interest to investigate what influence the Panama Canal will have on international traffic, and furthermore what proportion of the vessels passing through the Panama Canal will visit St. Thomas. In the German journal Nauticus the commercial significance of the Panama Canal has been treated in a special article, the author of which, an expert on such matters, points out that the Panama Canal will hardly be used by sailing vessels, partly because the tolls will be too dear for them and partly on account of other disadvantages, f. i. the frequent calms in the vicinity of the canal. Furthermore, he shows that the Suez Canal offers a shorter route to East Asia from Europe than the Panama Canal; that this is also the case, though in a less degree, with respect to the routes to Australia and its adjacent islands; and thus the Panama Canal will have its greatest significance as a route from the east coast to the west coast of America and from Europe to the west coast of America and to the Pacific Islands.

With respect to the traffic from the east coast of America, it will go through the Florida Channel, the Yucatan Channel and southwest of the Antilles, and thus not touch St. Thomas. The size of the traffic from Europe will, of course, depend upon the tolls for the canal. In America it is supposed that the tolls will be one dollar per netto register ton. In the Suez Canal the tolls are 8½ francs per ton for laden vessels and 7 fr. for unladen. Under all circumstances, however, it is obvious that the opening of the canal will bring about a great increase in the traffic past or in the vicinity of St. Thomas. European trade on western America is already very great, but it will doubtless grow enormously as soon as the distance to western America has been shortened by the canal. For us the German trade will have a special significance, since Germany does not own any of the Antilles.

With respect to St. Thomas, it is obvious that its natural presuppositions for attracting part of the passing traffic are excellent. It lies close to the open ocean, is a safe and healthy harbor, and it lies five days from Colon, thus not so very near. The first and foremost question is if it is possible to still more develop the coal trade. If so, St. Thomas doubtless has great chances. In England coal costs 10-11 sh. per ton. In the ports of the Mediterranean and of Eastern Africa, steamers find English coal the price of which is the price in England with addition of freight, profit, etc. Therefore, when it is not a question of a very dear cargo, or if the vessel has not full cargo, it will pay to take plenty of coal from England. On the other hand, when steamers cross the Atlantic, they meet the America coal, which, owing to low freights, can be sold at cheap rates. The freight on coal from Philadelphia to St. Thomas is only one dollar and sixty cents, and the East Asia Company supplies coal, as already stated, at 22 sh. 6d. per ton, which is lower than the prices in Funchal and Ponta Delgada. Since steamers can earn 20, 30 or 40 shillings per cargo-ton from Europe to St. Thomas, it will pay the ship-owners to build their ships intended for the route through the Panama Canal with smaller bunkers and to refill them at St. Thomas, thus giving more space for cargo. There is no doubt but that St. Thomas can supply coal just as cheap if not cheaper than any other port in the West Indies or Central America, and as to Colon and Panama it is probable that wages there will be higher than on St. Thomas. The main thing is, however, that the coal trade on St. Thomas is in the hands of a universal firm like the East Asia Company. It can be satisfied with smaller profits in the beginning, in hopes of increase of traffic. It can make advantageous contracts with coal firms and shipowners, because, among other things, it can offer the English houses in return the sale of coal in Colombo and Aden to its vessels on the East Asia route. Thus, thanks to the good conducting of the East Asia Company, we have the best hopes of St. Thomas becoming a very much visited coal station after the opening of the Panama Canal. This will also imply the furnishing of water and provisions. Therefore it will be a good plan to build large water cisterns, and refrigerating houses for keeping easily spoiled commodities, and to systematize the production of eggs, greens, etc.

With respect to a shipbuilding wharf on St. Thomas, this is an expensive and rather risky undertaking; but there is no doubt that there ought to be made some effort in this direction, and, as far as I can see, the only proper thing will be to procure a double floating dock, like the one we now have here in Copenhagen. Such a dock is the cheapest to procure and to work, and it can be sold again if it does not pay. Such a dock can probably be got in England, together with all appertaining machinery, for about three or four million Kroner, but to this price must be added the cost of towing it to St. Thomas, deepening of the harbor, and, perhaps, the building of one or two breakwaters. Thus the total cost will probably be about five or six million Kroner. The dock should not be placed in the harbor proper, where an English company has the monopoly on floating-docks for a series of years, and where there is not water enough, but in Gregory Channel just south of the harbor, where the water is six fathoms deep, and where the dock can be placed in the lee of Water Island, which is owned by a Copenhagen company. It would doubtless be wise to get German capital interested in such a dock, which would induce German ship-owners to make use of the dock. It is obvious that such a dock would not get a chance to build new vessels or to overhaul vessels annually, but there is no doubt but that many vessels which have suffered from casualties at sea will be glad to use the dock after the opening of the canal. It will also be advisable to station a salvage steamer in the harbor of St. Thomas. The main thing is, however, that such service is cheap and prompt. It would perhaps be wise to postpone the establishing of the floating dock until nearer the time for the opening of the canal, in order not to lose the interest on the capital invested.

Furthermore, agriculture on St. Thomas, and especially fruit-growing, will be able to give a much greater profit than at the present as soon as export has become better systematized. This is also the case with tourist visits, but it will be necessary to improve the hotel accommodations and to get better guides, with donkeys and horses. Horseback rides on St. Thomas and St. John are very enjoyable, and even now many American yachts and English and German tourist steamers come to the island but I am sure that these visits could be greatly increased by proper advertising. (According to the newspapers, there were 10,000 Americans on Jamaica during the earthquake.)

With reference to St. Croix and St. John, the retarded economical progress on these islands is firstly due to the increased costs of administration since the "Emancipation," and later on it has been due to the constant fall in the prices of cane sugar, owing to the competition of beet sugar. In a pamphlet published by a planter as early as 1862, it says that since the "Emancipation" nearly all the plantations on St. Croix have been compelled to sell out, some of them two or three times. The following table illustrates the fall of the prices of sugar during the last 50 years:

Highest quotations for sugar in Copenhagen

	Øre		Øre
1855, duty paid.....	21½	1880, duty paid.....	34
1857, duty paid.....	27	1890, duty unpaid.....	15½
1860, duty paid.....	18	1900, duty unpaid.....	15
1870, duty paid.....	17½	1902, duty unpaid.....	10¼

Thus we see that the prices are now only one quarter of what they used to be, which has also caused the value of the sugar plantations to fall. The following table shows some of the prices at which sugar plantations on St. Croix have been sold during the past 100 years.

The prices in the table are in dollars.

St. George:	Price	Lower Love:	Price
1820.....	$128, 000	1807.....	$200, 000
1873.....	85, 900	1870.....	45, 000
1897.....	27, 000	1882.....	25, 000

1815.....	85, 000	Bethlehem:
1868.....	70, 000	1798.....	245, 000
1882.....	41, 500	1870.....	70, 000
1899.....	10, 000	1903.....	45, 000

1825.....	150, 000	1804.....	180, 000
1845.....	40, 000	1859.....	90, 000
1887.....	10, 000	1880.....	30, 000

This fall in prices has, of course, entirely upset all fortunes and values on the island, and a large part of the island has been left uncultivated, while numerous ruins speak of former prosperity. The result has been general poverty, to which high taxes and customs duties largely contribute. Even of necessities of life, such as flour and lard, the customs duties have been about 36% of the value. In addition to this comes the high customs duties on sugar in America, where it is mostly sold. This duty, about $5\frac{1}{2}$ Øre per lb., falls on the producers, since their competitors in the southern states and Porto Rico are free from duty. Under such circumstances it is evident that the costs of public building, army and a large staff of Government officials is a great burden on the island.

In answer to the question: What has been done to remedy all this misery on St. Croix and St. John, we must in the first place mention the Plantation Association Dansk Vestindien, which owns plantations on all three islands and can already show considerable results from its work. Large areas have been again cultivated and new cultivations have been made to a large extent.

Special attention should be paid to the growing of cotton, which seems to be developing very fast. Thus in 1906 there was harvested over 377,000 pounds of raw cotton, which was sold at a price of about 120,000 Kroner. This is the so-called "Sea Island Cotton", which costs about five times as much as ordinary cotton, and which can only grow in certain places. It is used for sewing-cotton for sewing machines. The result of this is that, while the accounts of the Plantation Company for 1904 and 1905 showed a considerable deficiency, it is hoped that in 1906 they will about balance, which is an excellent result, considering that the work of the company is so highly experimental. The harvest for 1907 is expected to be about twice as much as that for 1906. Furthermore, the company expects to get an increase in its profits by means of the sale of cattle, since there is no longer any export of cattle from Porto Rico to St. Thomas, and therefore the prices of cattle have increased somewhat on the latter island. As navigation on St. Thomas gradually increases, considerable sums can be earned by exporting cattle from St. Croix and St. John to this island. Besides the Plantation Company, the owners of several other plantations have also begun the cultivation of cotton. Furthermore, the sugar factory and Messrs. Hagemann & Lachmann have made great efforts to improve sugar production.

Director Hagemann has also made interesting experiments in regard to irrigation by means of wells and windmills, besides which he has begun to give the negroes small lots to cultivate.

Thus we see that agriculture on St. Croix is decidedly progressing. There is, however, much complaint about insufficiency of laborers. The cause of this is the great mortality among children, the distaste of the negroes for farm labor, and the increasing tendency to emigrate. On St. Croix there are annually born about 660 children, but more than half of them die in infancy, owing to lack of proper food and care. At the initiative of her Majesty the Queen considerable is done to improve the care of infants, but, owing to the great number of children, this is not sufficient to remedy the evil. The daily wage of a farm negro is 20 cts., which is not much for a supporter of a family, but nevertheless, it is quite common that the negroes will not work more than a few days in the week. This is generally attributed to laziness, but it is also possible that it is partly due to the lack of proper nourishment. The food of the negroes is generally corn porridge with a little salt fish, but frequently the negro does not get any other nourishment than that obtained from sucking the sugar-cane, and at the best, the nourishment he obtains is quite insufficient to keep a full-grown man who does hard labor.

With respect to emigration, it should be noted that the negroes keep in close communication with their friends in America and on the other islands, and know very well where there is well-paid work to be had, and thither they go as soon as possible. Sometimes there are fifty emigrants from the island every week, and emigration is systematized, so that the 30 dollars required by the immigration authorities in New York for every immigrant is regularly sent back for the use of the next emigrant. Furthermore, it is the best negroes that emigrate to America, where they get good positions as servants, and the like. In order to substitute the laborers who emigrate, it has hitherto been customary to import laborers from Barbados, but this can no longer be done, owing to the great demand for laborers on the Panama Canal.

Here we touch upon the tenderest point for St. Croix and St. John—the miserable condition of the negroes. If we talk with one of the more intelligent of the colored men in regard to this, we always get the same answer: "What is the use of our staying here? There is no work for us here, no future and no hope for development. What are we to do here?—Make boots for people who go barefooted; be joiners among people who use no furniture? What is the merchant to do when no one can afford to buy his wares, and most people have no use for them, owing to the primitive life they lead?" The negress cooks her food in a preserve tin and does her washing in a petroleum can. The thing is that the negro ought to have ground. He is the only one who can till it, and therefore he ought to have a chance to make it his property. To deprive the negroes of land is the same as to take the sledges away from the Greenlanders and the motorboats away from the fishermen of the North Sea. The possession of land is, to the inhabitants of St. Croix and St. John, the only possibility of success and prosperity.

Many doubt that it is possible for negroes to make good independent farmers. Most people think that negroes are an inferior race without possibilities of development. This is, without doubt, a mistake. I believe that Henry George is right when he says in Progress and Property that the lack of capacity to receive higher civilization evinced by inferior races is due to their surroundings, the influence of the community to which the individual is exposed; the web of countless threads with which it binds and affects the individual. It is generally stated that negro children, until they are ten or twelve years old, are just as willing to learn as white children, but that after that time they appear indolent and indifferent. This is generally ascribed to inferiority of race. I believe, rather, that it is because the children become dull and lose all desire to compete with others as soon as they get old enough to understand their position in society and to see that they are looked upon as a paria caste, and that they can never have any hopes of making any use of the knowledge they acquire. It is obvious that a child who has a good home and educated parents, and hears refined language and interesting conversation has a great advantage over the child who only hears vulgar language and negro dialect in his home. Furthermore, it is clear that the lack of nourishment from which nearly all negro children suffer will have a very bad effect on them, especially in their growing age and will prevent them from doing any good mental work.

My experience proves to me that, in certain respects, the negro has very good mental capacities. The reliability and carefulness of the negro as a servant is well known, also their faithfulness and solicitude for people they like. The chief fault of the negro has been that he has tried to come into possession of the rights and privileges of the white man instead of imitating him in the habits of industry which have procured the white man these advantages. As a well-known American negro once said: "The negroes placed more importance upon getting a seat in Congress or on the town council than upon acquiring property and industrial proficiency. They would rather spend a dollar at the opera than to earn it at a factory." It should be noted, however, that, when the slaves were set free, nothing was done to insure their education or to provide them with land. Therefore it is easy to understand how difficult it has been for the negroes to keep step with American progress. The same is true in regard to the negroes of West Indies. The chief cause of their low stage of development is that they have lacked and still lack the inducement offered by the prospect of equality with the whites and the possibility of economical and social success. I therefore think it is necessary to try to make independent landowning farmers of the negroes on St. Croix and St. John, and I believe this might be successful. Even though big farming is most suitable for these islands at the present, it is to be hoped that steps will soon be taken to provide as many as possible with farms of their own. It is true that attempts have earlier been made in this direction, and the reason why they have not met with unqualified success is doubtless because they were made just at the time of the fall in the prices of sugar, and the people who started these enterprises did not have enough capital or energy to tide themselves over the crisis. On Jamaica the division of the land into small farms cultivated by negroes has met with great success. In a book called Black Jamaica published in 1895, an English priest, Livingstone, has described the conditions of the negroes, and especially the enormous progress made since they have been given small farms to cultivate. He points out that in the Jamaica lowlands there are over 72,000 farms of less than five acres each, mostly cultivated by negroes, and he declares that the ever-increasing fruit export of the island is chiefly due to these small farms. England supports this export by a subvention of £20,000 annually to a steamship line which runs quick steamers with refrigerator rooms direct between Jamaica and England. The negroes on the Danish islands have not lacked desire to carry on a similar trade, but they have had no capital and could not mortgage their farms, which were grown up to underbrush, because the by-laws of the banks prevent them from taking mortgages in farms unless they are under the plough and furnished with buildings and stock. It is therefore necessary for the State to come to their aid and it is to be hoped that both Cabinet and Rigsdag will soon take steps to give the negroes land of their own. No doubt the Plantation Association, which has done so much for the progress of the islands, will help get seed and plants, give the negroes advice, and help them sell their products. According to the modern cooperative system, I suppose the negroes ought to clear the ground in company, cultivate the ground separately, each on his little farm, raising poultry, goats, mules and other domestic animals, and to sell the products in company. If this is carried out, the children will without doubt live and have both desire and strength to work, and thus emigration will cease, and it is to be hoped that drunkenness will become less.

We have not time to go into other important details, such as improvement of the fisheries and of irrigation, but I will mention one point which [is] vital, namely the tariff.

The reason why I touched upon this subject is that, some time ago, I received two boxes of preserved fruit from the West Indies for a charity sale here in the city. At the charity sale the preserves brought about 25 Kroner, while the freight cost 18 and the duty 26 Kroner. This made me think that there was something wrong with the tariff, and I therefore made some investigations.

In import to the West Indies, goods from the home country are not given any preference, and therefore the United States, being much nearer, monopolizes the import to the islands, especially with respect to St. Croix.

The import to St. Thomas is given in a previous table. The export is insignificant. Thus we plainly see how preponderous the import from America is; but the import from Denmark has increased a little during the last few years. From this we see how desirable it is to give a rebate in the tariff for goods from Denmark. At the present, however, the financial situation of the islands makes this very difficult, it would not be of great importance, since most of the articles imported by St. Croix are things not exported by Denmark, or with respect to which it could not, under any circumstances, compete with America, f. i. lumber, machinery, corn and wheat, coal, etc. With respect to an eventual claim for reciprocity it may, however, be emphasized that, for our export, it makes no difference if the market on St. Croix becomes easier or not, while the West Indies is to a large extent obliged to seek a market for its products in the home country.

It will be seen that it is here a question of a very great increase. Furthermore, the duty on live turtles is 1 Kroner per kgr., while tinned turtle costs 14 øre per kgr. in duty—proposed unaltered. The duty on 50% rum is now 25 to 29 øre per liter. It is proposed that this duty shall be 25 øre, besides the excise duty paid by the retailer. The present duty is 150% of the cost price. The present duty on sugar is 4.6 to 12 øre. The lowest rate is 50 to 60% of the cost price. In relation to the price, the duty is now much higher than before.

It is hardly possible that the State really wishes to meet the efforts made to help the islands by such a high duty that most goods are impossible to export to the home country. It is unnecessary to point out how important it is for the islands to be able to export their fruits in dried or preserved condition, instead of having to sell them fresh on the islands, but by raising the duty on these commodities their export is rendered almost impossible, there being a sharp competition with the fruit imported to Denmark via England and from Italy and California (canned fruit).

It would seem reasonable to place the West Indian Islands on the same footing in this respect as Iceland and the Faroe Islands, thus making West Indian products free of duty. This can hardly be done, however, with respect to fruits, since the export of fruits is to a large degree based on the supply from the adjacent British islands, and it would be difficult to determine what fruit really came from the Danish West Indies, especially with respect to fruit sent without emballage. But if these articles cannot be entered duty free, they ought to be given such rebates that the export from the islands is not prohibited. The duty on turtles also seems to be too high.

St. Croix rum is almost exclusively sold in Denmark and it would be a great encouragement to the small sugar plantations and rum distilleries if a rebate could be granted on their products, thus not only cutting out the Jamaica rum but making it also possible to pay the plantations a higher price for their products. Up to 1863, St. Croix rum had a duty of 17 Rigsdalers and 48 Skillings per 240 potts of 8 $\frac{1}{2}$, plus 6% official fees, while foreign rum had a duty of 18 Rigsdalers, plus 6% official fees. A certificate of origin could easily be obtained for rum, and therefore there would be no obstacle to granting West Indian rum freedom from duty, so that there would only be the excise duty on it. In 1906 48,269 gallons of rum was exported from St. Croix, 39,764 gallons of which went to Denmark.

With respect to St. Croix sugar, its production has for several years only been a loss. The high duties are largely to blame for this. Hitherto nearly all St. Croix sugar has been sold in America, but of late the prices have been very low, generally only 3 cts. per lb. After St. Croix sugar had not had any market here for several years, an attempt was again made to sell it here in 1906, and 200 barrels of 250 lbs. each, brutto, were sold. Owing to the reduction in freight granted by the East Asia Company, a slightly higher profit was made by selling the sugar here than in New York, but if this is to continue, the duty must be reduced, and it would only be natural and just if the duty on sugar from the Danish West Indies were reduced to the same sum as the home excise duty, especially, since taxes on St. Croix are chiefly levied on cultivated sugar farms. Until 1863, St. Croix sugar enjoyed a rebate, the duty being one Rigsdaler and 64 Skillings per Cwt. plus 6% official fees, while the duty on foreign sugar was 2 Rigsdalers and 60 Skillings, plus 6% official fees. Formerly sugar, as well as other products from the Danish West Indies, was favored by half as high wharfage dues as products from other trans-Atlantic ports. It is supposed that it was the relations to the Duchies which, in 1863, deprived West Indian products of the rebates formerly accorded to them, but now that the tariff is under debate, there seems to be due cause for considering the feasibility of favoring the sugar growers in St. Croix by placing them on an equal footing with the home sugar producers. They will, at all events, have the freight against them in their competition with the home producers. The loss for the Danish Treasury, if this rebate is granted, will not exceed 200,000 Kroner, and will most likely be even less, since it is hardly possible that all the sugar will be sold here, and sugar will furthermore partly give place to cotton. At the present, the sugar-production is 25 to 30 million lbs. annually. In our times, when there is so much partiality shown to parts of the monarchy lying much nearer than the West Indies, we feel justified in calling to the proper authorities: Videant consules, hoping that this partiality will not increase.

As a résumé of my remarks, I would finally state that, if the East Asiatic Company and the Plantation Association continue their good work, if steps are taken to give the negroes land, and if the tariff is properly adjusted, I believe that the crisis in Danish West Indies will come to an end, and that a new era will be inaugurated.

III. NEGOTIATIONS FOR THE TREATY OF AUGUST 4, 1916

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, March 8, 1915.

SIR: It may seem out of place for me, especially when the most terrible events are making a crisis in the world, to return to a subject on which in the past I have written many despatches, the purchase of the Danish Antilles. For seven years I have hoped that the Department might instruct me to make such suggestions to the Danish Government as would lead to an offer of these islands to the United States at a reasonable price. For good reason, I am sure, I received little encouragement; it was necessary to soften the suspicion of our arrogance and imperialistic tendencies which had arisen here and seemed fixed, and to make the Danish people feel that the Government of the United States has a sincere interest in their progress and sympathy with their national aspirations.

Once during the administration of President Taft there seemed to be some hope that the matter of the purchase of these islands might be considered as probable in the near future; the President went so far as to ask me whether they could be put under the same jurisdiction as Porto Rico and what price might be asked for them. This was sometime after a number of distinguished Danes had sent to me a memorial (September 23, 1910) proposing that our Government should accept Greenland in exchange for Mindanao, the Danish Government having the right to surrender Mindanao to Germany in exchange for Northern Schleswig. The hope that Danish Schleswig may one day again become part of Denmark is still cherished by a great number of the Danes, whose very delicate position, between two great Powers, does not depress their national ardor. The knowledge that this memorial had been presented to me produced a discussion in certain groups here as to whether the Danish Government would be willing to part with St. Thomas and the other Danish Antilles.

All this of course was purely academic, but interesting. It was made plain that if the pride of this small country in parting with such useless possessions as the Danish West Indies could be soothed, the islands might easily be made to come to us. The price of course would have had to be greater than it would have been previous to the opening of the Panama Canal or before the present improvements in the harbor of St. Thomas had begun. There would have been then no objection on the part of either England or Germany.

The main opponent of the sale, when the last attempt was made in 1902, was the East Asiatic Company, backed up by certain business men here; for instance Mr. Holger Petersen. Home politics too, played a part in the defeat of the project in the Upper House,—the Conservative Party fearing that the Deuntzer Ministry might strengthen itself by spending the money received for these islands. The interest of the business men in the holding of the islands has fallen off; the national subscription for the improving of the islands, which was opened in 1912 entirely failed. My argument with the principal opposers of the sale of the islands to us was to the effect that if they were to remain a burden to Denmark and a blot on the face of progress, as they were, it would be much better for the national reputation of Denmark that they should be sold to the United States. This attitude was looked upon as reasonable. Representing the ideas of our Government, I said publicly, that the United States would gladly sympathize with any attempt to make the population of the islands more contented and prosperous. The improvements in St. Thomas are still going on, but interest in them, on the part of the Danish people, has almost entirely ceased.

It is not necessary for me to comment on the importance of the great harbor of St. Thomas as a base of operations for any nation that possesses it. There is a rumor, widely spread, founded on the negotiations of 1902, that the United States had secured an option on the islands in question. This is without foundation, as far as I know.

It is not improbable that one day Denmark, in spite of the apparent drawing together of the three Scandinavian countries, may be absorbed by Germany, not by the breaking of her neutrality, which, however, is feared, but by what is called "peaceful penetration." If Germany should gain great advantages in the present war, neither England, nor Russia, nor France would be in a position to protest; and protests from other nations would of course be useless. The Danish West India Islands would then be the property of Germany, as Heligoland, under very different circumstances, became her property. A copy of the memorial sent by me to the Department on September 23, 1910,¹⁵ is appended.

I have been impressed by the fact that the Department, notwithstanding its present arduous and grievous occupations, has kept its eyes fastened on probable contingencies which may result from the present war and I take the liberty of calling attention to one of these possible contingencies.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, May 24, 1915.

SIR: The question of a possible sale of the Danish Antilles to the United States forms an undercurrent of thought here, much evidence in recent talks I have had with important personages, owing to the latest reports from the islands of the failure of the sugar plantations. Admiral de Richelieu and Etatsraad Andersen, representing the East Asiatic Company, and conservative in politics, would at present be unfavorable to the sale, but the following account of a recent conference with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who represents the opinion of the majority of voters in Denmark, will give the Department an impression of the condition of public opinion on this matter.

In a conversation with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Erik de Seavenius, on May 5, 1915, I asked him what was the present condition of the Danish West India Islands. He answered that, economically, they were very bad and that the latest reports from the planters of sugar showed that industry to be in a deplorable condition, partly because of the American tariff, but without doubt because of the fact that the soil has been too long used for the production of sugar and that to make a change leading to a rotation of crops would at present incur too much loss. I then suggested that it was evident that the capitalists, who were interested in keeping the West India Islands as Danish possessions in 1902, had evidently changed their opinion as to the financial value of these islands. He said that he had no doubt that this was true. I then said that, leaving out of the question the subject of national honor which had so often been alluded to during the previous negotiations regarding the sale of the islands to the United States, there seemed no reason why Denmark should not part with the islands, as I knew there would be no objection on the part of the citizens of the islands. He answered that the best of the citizens, the skilled, the cleverest and the most ambitious were leaving the islands in order to find greater opportunities in the United States and that the Government at present saw no way of changing this.

In speaking of the improvements in the harbor, undertaken under the auspices of the East Asiatic Company, he said that he had heard no reports of the success of these operations and that personally he had no belief in their success. I then asked him what would be his personal attitude towards the sale of the islands to us. He answered that personally, he emphasized the fact that he did not speak officially, he thought that the islands ought to be sold, and that they eventually would be sold to the United States. I said that during my stay in Denmark, as Minister, I had occasionally been asked by influential Americans why the United States did not buy the islands, but I had had no intimation that the Government of the United States considered the time propitious for the encouragement of any proposals from Denmark to the United States as to this sale; that, personally, I should have been glad to present to my Government any proposal of the kind, but that up to the present time this had only been a personal attitude on my part. The present, Mr. Scavenius said, was a time hardly ripe for any proposal on the part of Denmark, but, if the United States gave any encouragement to the consideration of the possibility of such a sale, it might be possible.

He felt sure that the attitude of the United States, which was so sympathetic and kindly toward Denmark, would convince the Danish people that the American Government was not trying to force a sale from a small nation only because it was a small nation. As I had heard the objection used before that, in the two previous attempts of the United States to buy the Danish Antilles, the Government of the United States had selected the Danish islands because Denmark was supposed to be small and poor, I at once answered that Denmark now was not poor; that I understood that it was very prosperous, and that a country which included Greenland and Iceland could hardly be considered territorially small. * * *

In parting we agreed that it would be to the advantage of the United States and Denmark to arrange for the transfer of the islands provided such an opportunity should occur. We again assured each other that our conversation was in no way official but in every respect tentative and personal.

[Extract]

No. 867

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, July 17, 1915.

SIR: With reference to my confidential despatch No. 833 of March 8, 1915, and to the Department's confidential telegram No. 27 of June 14, 4 p. m., in reply thereto, I have the honor to state that I had an interview with Mr. Christian Helweg-Larsen, Governor of the Danish West Indies. He has been in the Danish service in the West Indies since 1888. He is a good type of the Danish bureaucrat, with apparently few interests outside those of his ordinary work. Strangely enough he knows little about conditions in the United States, which he has never visited except on his way to or from Europe; his present visit to Denmark is the first in four years. He is a man of cultivation, and outside of his special work in the islands his principal intellectual interest seems to be in interpreting Shakespeare. He goes to Puerto Rico whenever he has the opportunity, as the administration of affairs in that island, he says, helps him in solving problems that confront him in the islands over which he is Governor.

It was quite evident from the beginning of the interview that he belonged to the party, not very large in numbers, which desires to retain these islands, because it feels that Denmark has lost so much territory, that the surrender of any more would be a blow to the national prestige. Besides, he has, I think, a financial interest in the improvements in the harbor, which the East Asiatic Company is undertaking. He told me that he always attends the meetings of the directors in St. Thomas.

In my opinion, I said that the Danish West Indies might well belong to the United States. He said that he was glad that this was only my private opinion and not the opinion of my Government. I agreed with him that my Government had expressed no desire to be the owner of any of the Danish Islands, since 1902 when the Danish Rigsdag by one vote had defeated the motion for selling them.

I then asked his opinion of the status of the negro calling himself Hamilton Jackson, who has been speaking at various socialistic meetings in Denmark on the ill-treatment of the negroes in the Danish Islands at the hands of the officials there. He said that this negro has much less cause for complaint than he would have under an American administration. He might then have the suffrage, to be sure, but he would be looked on only as a "nigger" and receive no social consideration. * * *

He reiterated his belief that the United States did not care to possess the islands, and that I was alone in my opinion that they could be of any value to us. He said that he has often told citizens of the islands, who desired to go under American protection, that the United States would never be so benevolent as Denmark has been. "Denmark, through motives of national pride, was willing to lose money every year in order to keep the islands, but the United States would force them to pay for themselves." My answer was, that if

Denmark was willing to sell, and if the citizens of the islands approved of the sale by their votes, we should no doubt find a means of making St. Thomas and Santa Cruz pay.

He disclaimed speaking for his Government, but he thinks that St. Thomas will be a place of tremendous value as a point for transshipment between the British Channel and the Panama Canal. I suggested that the harbor of St. Thomas be a fruit station for ships going southward. He said for this purpose it could have no value as the fruit steamers took a shorter route. He admitted that under this administration the cleverest and most valuable inhabitants were leaving the islands because prices for labor in the United States were much higher. He admitted that conditions in Santa Cruz were very retrograde owing to the failure of the soil and perhaps the unenergetic management; but he grew enthusiastic about the prospects of the improvements in the harbor and their effects on the prosperity of the islands when the present war should cease.

I gather that the greatest opposition to the sale of the islands would come from the East Asiatic Company and probably from the English interests in the islands should these join forces with that company. This was foreseen some time ago and an effort, unofficially, of course, was made to interest Mr. Leigh Hunt and other American capitalists in the improvements of the harbor of St. Thomas.

The Governor said that American capital would be eagerly welcomed in the islands and if some of our capitalists saw their way clear to making investments, it would strengthen our position immensely in the event of the Government's desiring to purchase the Danish West Indies.

I have the honor to thank the Department for its encouragement in a matter which seems to me of great importance in the future of the United States.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Copenhagen, August 18, 1915

SIR: Replying to the Department's telegram No. 37 of August 10, 11 a.m., I have the honor to report that I saw Mr. Erik de Scavennius, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, at the earliest opportunity which was today, August 18th. Mr. Scavenius and I had had several rather academic conversations regarding the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States and it was not difficult to open the question. I told him that I should consider our talk confidential, so far as outside persons were concerned, but that I would communicate anything he said to my Government. I then asked him whether he still believed it would be well for Denmark to cede the Danish West Indies to the United States. He said that he had always believed so and that he believed so now; but that this was his personal opinion and that he had not yet discovered the views of his colleagues in the Ministry or of the public in this matter. I then asked him whether he thought that the present moment was propitious for the raising of the question. He said that it was his personal opinion that it would be a rather delicate matter to entertain a proposition for the sale of the islands while the present war was going on, but that the opinion of his colleagues and the public generally might be sounded on the subject. I answered that I thought the failure of the attempt made in the summer of 1912 to induce the Danish people to supply funds for the improving of the harbor of St. Thomas by appealing to their patriotism showed that the public was indifferent to the destiny of the islands. Mr. de Scavenius admitted with certain reservations the probable truth of this deduction. He added that if any proposition worthy of the reputation of the United States for largeness of views and for generosity were made, it would probably be seriously considered. I asked him what he meant by largeness of views and generosity as applied to the purchase of the islands. He said that the previous experience of Denmark in her relations with the United States in regard to the sale of the islands had been so unfortunate, owing, he thought to a misunderstanding on both sides, that the prestige of both countries demanded that the United States should not propose pecuniary terms which would lead to haggling or fail to give guarantees which would effect the kind treatment of the present inhabitants, principally negroes. I answered that as to the first, the United States was not in the habit of buying anything because it was cheap, but because it felt the need of possessing it, that he was right in presuming that if my Government made any proposition it would be both generous and just, and as to the treatment of the negroes, it seemed to me we understood the character of the colored people and the way of making them content better than the Europeans. He was very polite, but he hesitated before agreeing with me. He repeated that what he meant by large-mindedness was that we should give Denmark an assurance that the negro population was to be treated in the most kindly and liberal way. I answered that the United States could not show a greater confidence in its colored population than by giving it the right of suffrage which the Danes in the West Indies had not yet seen their way to doing. He said too that Europeans were probably wrong in forming their opinions of our treatment of the colored population in the United States owing to their ignorance of conditions in the United States, that he felt the greatest confidence in the principles of humanity which must actuate a great nation like ours. He reiterated the statement that in view of past negotiations for the islands, which had not reflected credit on either country, Denmark could not make an offer of the islands to us, but that he was reasonably certain, though he spoke only personally, that if a suitable offer was made it would be seriously considered.

He also spoke of the probable opposition to the project. I said that I anticipated no real opposition except perhaps from my friend Admiral Richelieu and the East Asiatic Company, who, divorcing themselves from any pecuniary connection with the Danish Government, had undertaken to complete the improvements to the harbor. In my opinion many of the business men who opposed the sale of the islands in 1902 felt now that owing to the failures in Santa Cruz and the comatose condition of affairs in St. Thomas that there was no chance of making the islands pay under the present régime; I assumed too that my Government would so safeguard the rights and investments of the East Asiatic Company, etc., that these interests would be only too glad to profit by the increased prosperity which the possession of the islands by the United States would bring about.

SIR: During a recent visit to the Department of the Danish Minister, I referred to the question of probable acquisition, by the Government of the United States, of the Danish West Indies, and inquired whether, in his opinion, he deemed it feasible at this time. He replied that, owing to the opening of the Panama Canal, he had no doubt that his Government considered the islands of more value now, than in the past, on account of the increase of trade which would naturally follow, and would hesitate to part with any commercial advantages which the retention of the islands gave to Denmark.

I called his attention to the fact that if the islands were acquired it would be largely for military purposes and indicated to him that it would no doubt be possible to reach some arrangement by which the Danish Government, in the event that they would be willing to part with the islands, could arrange for certain commercial privileges and advantages. He remarked that if this could be done, he could see no good reason why the Danish Government would not be willing to dispose of the islands.

Your telegram No. 185, of October 8, 1915, four p. m. has been received and I will be glad if you will give the question of the sale of the islands your close attention and secure, if possible, some tentative offer from the Danish Government, as it is necessary to have some proposal from it upon which to base any suggestions which the President might care to make to Congress.

SIR: With reference to my despatch No. 883 of November 6, 1915, and to previous correspondence concerning the Danish West Indies, I have the honor to report that the rumors of a revolution in the Danish Antilles have revived in the press the supposition that our Government may sooner or later be offered these islands. Yesterday, à propos of these rumors, the British Minister, Sir Henry Lowther, asked me whether there was any truth in them. I answered that I did not attempt to conceal from anybody that I was personally very much in favor of my Government's purchasing these islands, that I always had been, but that there was no thought of any negotiation at present. He asked if there was likely to be in the future. I answered that I would do all I could to make such negotiation possible, but that the war would at present interfere with anything of the kind and that I could only express my personal opinion. He asked me whether I thought it would be to the interest of Great Britain to encourage such a purchase or not, remarking that he, whenever the matter had been mooted in the papers, had always advised his Government to make no opposition and rather to encourage it and that he would continue to do so. He fears that after the war these islands might be made use of by Germany, although he believed that Denmark would never be allowed to sell them to that Power. He added, that he considered it very much to the interest of England that we should possess these islands. I did not tell him what was in my mind—that if Germany should ever penetrate peacefully or otherwise this country of Denmark, St. Thomas and the other islands would become German—but I remarked that they might easily be made a center of German steamship activity. He agreed with this opinion and he again assured me that, if the United States should, during his stay in Denmark, accept a proposition for the purchase of the islands from Denmark, he would support the project.

As Sir Henry Lowther is a very cautious man, not given to expressing opinions of his own, I have no doubt that he was instructed by his Government to tell me this.

The German Minister, Count Brockdorff-Rantzau, seems entirely indifferent to these rumors and from what I can find out at this present moment no German influence would be brought to bear on the Foreign Office here to prevent the sale should the matter come up officially. As soon as I find any indication that such influence would be used I shall report it at once. At present I can only sound public opinion and make it thoroughly understood through the press and otherwise that our Government is entirely in sympathy with any movement on the part of Denmark to improve the condition of these islands. I am happy to say that the opinion prevalent in Denmark that our Government is imperialistic and desirous of acquiring territory by superior force has almost disappeared. Some years ago it was generally held here.

The movement in favor of selling the islands to the United States is steadily growing. There are a certain number of influential people who are afraid that Germany would secretly oppose the sale, but the greatest opposition would come from those who believe that the prestige of Denmark would suffer by the loss of her colonial possessions.

67. Your 203, December 24, 4 p. m., and 207, January 8, 4 p. m. Please inform Foreign Office that, in view of Denmark's willingness to part with her ancient possessions in the West Indies, and, with a desire for an early and friendly conclusion of the negotiations, this Government would consider an offer of the sale of the Danish West Indies for the sum of twenty-five million dollars, although not agreeing to pay that amount, which seems excessive.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 29, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: I am having prepared a draft of a treaty transferring to the United States the sovereignty of the Danish West Indies, which I shall submit to you as a basis of negotiation. In the course of preparing this draft it has occurred to me that it would be very useful to have a definite statement of the character and extent of Danish obligations and rights in these islands as indicated in the attached formal note, so that if it were necessary, as was done in the Treaty of 1902, to make any statements in the new treaty in regard to public rights and obligations, the information would be before us in compact form. Such information would also be very useful for the Government in answering inquiries which undoubtedly will be made by the Senate as to the status of the financial and other obligations of the Danish Government in the West Indies. I hope that in making this request I am not imposing an unnecessary burden upon you at this time, when I know you are extraordinarily busy.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 29, 1916.

SIR: With reference to the proposed transfer of sovereignty of the Danish West Indies Islands to the United States, I have the honor to request that, if you perceive no objection, you notify me formally as to the following:

(1) The character and extent of the public property of every kind and description now belonging to the Danish Government or the Governments of the Danish West Indies, together with all appurtenances thereto, in these islands, including all public, Government or Crown lands, public buildings, wharves, fortifications, barracks, franchises, concessions, grants, and other privileges.

(2) The nature and extent of all grants, concessions, franchises and privileges which have been dispensed by the Danish Government or by the Governments of the Danish West Indies, in or in any way relating to these islands and which are now in existence.

(3) The nature and extent of any Government obligations resulting from or connected with the matters mentioned in paragraphs (1) and (2).

The object of this request is to have a definite description of the rights and obligations of the Government of Denmark and the Governments of the Danish West Indies in these islands up to the date of the signature of the proposed treaty before us during the negotiations, in order that a proper statement in regard to them, if deemed advisable, may be inserted in the proposed treaty. I believe that a clear understanding of these matters will contribute to the expedition with which the treaty can be disposed of in this country, and to the removal of any possible cause of dispute which may arise out of public rights and obligations in these islands.

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, February 7, 1916.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Agreeable to your suggestion in your letter to me of January 29, I cabled on February 1 to the Danish Government asking to be supplied with a definite statement of the character and extent of Danish obligations and rights in the Danish West Indies, such statement to cover all the points mentioned in your formal note to me of January 29 on the same subject.

I have now received a reply-cablegram from the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs in which he states that it has been found impracticable to send the required information by cable, but that this information was sent to me in a letter by the S. S. Frederik VIII, which sailed from Copenhagen on February 6.

Barring delay occasioned by British cruisers detaining the ship, the Frederik VIII should arrive in New York about 10 or 12 days from the date of sailing, and I shall then at once have the pleasure of communicating further with you.

No. 910

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, February 21, 1916.

SIR: To-day, with a view to discovering the opinion of one of the gentleman most interested in the Danish Antilles, I called on Gehejmekonferenceraad G. A. Hagemann who has great interests in Saint Croix. In a recently published pamphlet he seemed very pessimistic as to the progress of the Danish West Indies under the present rule. However, knowing that his ideas on the subject were of great importance and that they have wide influence, I asked him very directly whether he would approve of the sale of the islands. He said, "Yes", and that the project would have been approved of in the Upper House in 1902 if a second proposition had been made offering a reasonably larger sum. He denied emphatically that Germany had anything to do with the stopping of the sale. I said that I fancied, as far as I could understand, that there had been three difficulties in 1902; first, the opposition of the East Asiatic Company, the comparative smallness of the sum offered in Danish eyes and the disagreeable scandal occasioned by the quasi agents sent over to the United States. Naturally a powerful influence against the sale was that of Prince Valdemar and the late Princess Marie and Director H. N. Andersen of the East Asiatic Company, but then I knew that Mr. Andersen had close relations with Herr Ballin of the Hamburg-American Line who desired a base in the islands. That, however, Mr. Hagemann said, would make no difference now as the United States would probably, in case of a sale, not interfere with business arrangements already made. I said that I was quite sure that my Government would conserve all legitimate business interests. Mr. Hagemann said that his certainty of this was one of the reasons why he should not object to the sale of the islands. He spoke of it having been necessary in 1902 to obtain the consent of the French Government for the sale of Saint Croix (France ceded her rights in Saint Croix in 1868), but agreed with me that this permission had been given without condition and for all time. Mr. Hagemann is, of course, unaware that there have been any negotiations on the subject of the sale. He said that he was afraid that the present Government would not consent to the sale, but that perhaps opinion might be sounded on the subject. He said:

If a good round sum was offered, such as would strike the imagination of the people, there was little doubt in his mind that the Landsting (Upper House) would be compelled to vote for the sale.

He was kind enough to say that he appreciated the delicate way in which our Government had behaved since the failure of the project in 1902, by not raising the question until it was evident that Danish national pride would not be ruffled. He added, however, that if the sum of five millions of dollars had been doubled in 1902, the majority in the Upper House would have been entirely for it. It was quite evident from our conversation that he, as representing the investors in the Danish West Indies, was even quite anxious that the islands should be sold. He promised to get the opinion of Director Holger

Petersen, who has likewise interests in the islands, and who is the president of the East Asiatic Company. I said that this relieved me very much, as I did not want to have the appearance of lobbying for a project which was evidently of great importance to the future of the Danish West Indies, and to the advantage of the Danish Treasury.

[Extract]

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
St. Thomas, D. W. I., February 24, 1916.

SIR: * * * I find that there has been much speculation here during the past four months, especially, regarding the probable purchase of these islands by the United States, and the wildest rumours are almost daily afloat along these lines. Last week the people were freely stating that ex-President Roosevelt had been delegated to these parts for the express purpose of concluding arrangements for the proposed sale, and during the past few days rumours have filtered out that I had been sent here for the same object. A notice that appeared today in one of the daily newspapers of St. Thomas, Lighbourn's Mail Notes, concerning the desire of the Danish Government to dispose of the islands, consequent upon the labor troubles in St. Croix, appears to confirm these extravagant impressions. Naturally, all this is most distasteful to me, but I try to pass it off as best I can, and I am citing these facts to the Department now in the event that there might be need of referring to them later on.

I might add that an eager desire on the part of the great majority of the native element to see the American flag waving over the islands can be noted on all sides, the only negative voices in the matter coming from a specially privileged few who have received valued favors from the Danish authorities.

Laborers' Strike in the Island of St. Croix

Conditions in the Island of St. Croix have arrived at the acute stage. The laborers, who are mostly negroes, under the direction of one D. Hamilton Jackson, who has displayed qualities that have brought him a decided leadership over the Santa Cruzian blacks, and who has visited Copenhagen recently and secured a certain foothold in Government circles, and especially among the socialists there; decided several months ago upon the general strike that was put into operation just a few weeks ago, or at a time when the harvesting of the sugar-cane crops was about to begin. The cause of this strike is said to be due to the starvation wages that have been paid to the black laborers, and is continued because the plantation owners and managers refuse to comply to the laborers' demands (which are reported by various reputable parties to be no more than what is reasonable).

On December 8, 1915, the Danish Cruiser Valleyrien was sent to St. Croix to preserve order, and has been stationed in these waters ever since, and the Governor of these islands has been permanently stationed at St. Croix for a considerable period. The Governor has been placed in the position of mediator between the two contending factions—employers and employees—but in spite of repeated attempts towards a settlement of their differences, no arrangement has as yet been concluded. Jackson is said to have exercised a wonderful influence over his followers. He has persuaded them to give up drinking, and has preserved a semblance of orderliness up to date, in spite of the fearful predictions of his adversaries. Owing to his fearless and independent attitude, he has incurred the displeasure of the Governor, who stoutly refuses to have anything further to do with him as the laborers' representative, but who appears to be powerless to crush him. This may be due, as some say, to Jackson's powerful backing in official, and socialistic circles in Copenhagen, or, as others aver, because of his strong hold over the Santa Cruzians, whom the authorities fear would bring devastation and ruin throughout the island were their leader to be interfered with.

Jackson publishes a daily newspaper, and is bitter in his denunciations of the Governor and others who have thwarted the designs of the laborers; but in this work, in his public utterances, which are frequent, and in his other activities he is said to take care to keep just within the limits of the law. He counsels his followers against any unlawful demonstrations, such as the firing of the cane crops, or wanton destruction of any private or public properties, which he states, is precisely what the enraged planters desire, in order that they may have a legitimate (?) excuse for shooting them up. Matters appear to be reaching a climax, however, as the extensive and valuable cane crops are likely to become practically worthless if they are not harvested within two weeks. In fact, the February 23d edition of the West End News, which is reputed to be the Government newspaper of Frederiksted, St. Croix, concludes an urgent appeal to the Cruzian laborers by urging them to return to the fields "in order to save their island from ruin and thus preserve it for the Danish Crown." Furthermore, a St. Thomas daily paper, Lighbourn's Mail Notes, to-day publishes a news paragraph reported to originate from Copenhagen, stating that

The strike of the negroes in the Danish West Indies revives the proposition to sell the West India Islands to the United States of America, if the American Government is willing to pay more than four million dollars for them.

It is not proven that the laborers have as yet gone beyond bounds, although a yesterday's dispatch from St. Croix affirms that eleven fires were started the day before on one of the large estates, which were finally extinguished by the marines from the Valkyrien and the local gendarmes. A rumour has just reached here that one of the large plantation owners, now in Copenhagen, has cabled his willingness to sell out his entire holdings for a price approximating what his last year's harvest yielded him.

Should an opportunity offer, where a real or pretended outrage on the part of the blacks might furnish a fancied pretext for retaliation, it is believed by many that the large estate owners, agents, etc., who include a few Irishmen and a large number of Danes, and who are well supplied with arms and ammunition, assisted by the local gendarmes and guns from the Valkyrien, would show no mercy to their foes, and that a frightful carnage would be the result.

The West Indian Company, Limited, of St. Thomas, D. W. I.

Referring to a recent cable from the Department, making enquiry regarding The West Indian Company, or The East Asiatic Company of St. Thomas, which I feel was insufficiently and perhaps inaccurately, answered by the consulate (and also to another late cable regarding a contract for fifteen thousand tons of coal made here by the Earn Steamship Company of Philadelphia), I have to report that interest is thereby directed to the most interesting institution of the Island of St. Thomas, since The West Indian Company, Ltd., has by far the most powerful foothold of any other concern here, and may prove to be stronger than all of the other concerns combined. I have become acquainted with the local manager of this company, Captain H. P. Berg, and he has already extended certain courtesies to me. I now hope to have a complete report concerning all the interests and activities of this powerful corporation to submit to the Department within a short while.

According to my present understanding, The West Indian Company, Ltd., is a corporation organized under the laws of Denmark, with head offices at St. Thomas. I am persuaded to believe that considerable of the stock of this corporation, if not the majority, is held by Germans. This company acts as the local agent of The East Asiatic Company, whose head offices are in Copenhagen, which acts, in its turn, as the Copenhagen representative of The West Indian Company. The present prospects point to this company enjoying a practical monopoly over shipping, and other affairs in St. Thomas, including the coaling, water and other supply business. It owns and operates the electric light plant of the place, which has taken the place of an unsatisfactory gas light company, which is now practically extinct, and there is a possibility of it monopolizing the village water supply in the not distant future.

About one and a half million dollars have already been expended on their harbor, etc., works, and another half million will be expended before the work is entirely completed. The Governor of the Island, Mr. L. C. Helweg-Larsen, is the chairman of the board of directors of this corporation. * * *

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 14, 1916, 6 p.m.

88. Please submit to the Foreign Minister the attached draft of a treaty of cession of the Danish West Indies. Article III, Section 3, refers to certain concessions regarding which the United States may undertake to assume and discharge the obligations now incumbent upon the Danish Government. Of the concessions mentioned the Department has not seen the original documents relating to the concessions to the Saint Thomas Dock, Engineering and Coal Company, to the West India Company regarding improvement of Saint Thomas Harbor, and to Ejnar Svendsen; nor the original documents relating to the Danish Government's guarantee of Saint Thomas Harbor four per cent loan of 1910. The undertaking in Article III, therefore, is subject to the Department's further examination of the original documents relating to the concessions and guarantees therein mentioned. Bring the foregoing to the attention of the Foreign Minister, obtain the original documents mentioned, mail them immediately to Department and telegraph brief summary of them. Keep Department fully advised and use greatest possible precaution to keep negotiations absolutely secret.

The United States of America and the Kingdom of Denmark, being desirous of strengthening, if possible, the good understanding which exists between them, have, for that purpose appointed as their Plenipotentiaries: the President of the United States, Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States; and His Majesty the King of Denmark, Constantin Brun, his Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States; and the said Plenipotentiaries, having exchanged their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon and signed the following articles:

ARTICLE I

Denmark by this convention cedes to the United States all territory, dominion and sovereignty, possessed, asserted or claimed by Denmark in the West Indies, including the Islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix, together with the adjacent islands and rocks.

This cession includes the right of property in all public, Government, or Crown lands, public buildings, wharves, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks, funds, rights, franchises, and privileges, and all other public property of every kind or description now belonging to Denmark, together with all appurtenances thereto.

In this cession shall also be included any Government archives, records, papers or documents which relate to this cession or the rights and property of the inhabitants of the islands ceded, and which may now be existing either in the islands ceded or in Denmark. Such archives and records shall be carefully preserved, and authenticated copies thereof, as may be required, shall be at all times given to the United States Government or the Danish Government, as the case may be, or to such properly authorized persons as may apply for them.

ARTICLE II

Denmark guarantees that the cession made by the preceding article is free and unincumbered by any reservations, privileges, franchises, grants or possessions, by any governments, corporations, syndicates or individuals, except as herein mentioned. But it is understood that this cession does not in any respect impair private rights which by law belong to the peaceful possession of property of all kinds, by private individuals, of whatsoever nationality, by municipalities, public or private establishments, ecclesiastical or civic bodies, or any other associations having legal capacity to acquire and possess property in the islands ceded. The congregations belonging to the Danish National Church shall remain in possession of the churches which are now used by them, together with the parsonages appertaining thereunto. It is specially agreed, however, that:

(1) The arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Government of Denmark shall remain the property of that Government and shall, within one year after the exchange of ratifications of this convention, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may have been bought by the Government of the United States; it being however understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms or military articles as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in this cession.

(2) The pecuniary claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands ceded are altogether extinguished in consequence of this cession and the United States assumes no responsibility whatsoever for or in connection with these claims.

(3) The United States will assume and continue to discharge the obligations incumbent upon the Danish Government at the date of this treaty under the following grants:

Concession of March —, 1897, to the St. Thomas Dock, Engineering and Coal-ing Company, Limited, relative to a floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor;

Royal Decree of November 30, 1914, relative to subsidies to the West India and Panama Telegraph Company (Ltd.);

Concession of July 7, 1912, to the West India Company, Ltd. relative to the improvement of St. Thomas Harbor;

Concession of (Space for date) to Ejnar Svendsen for the construction and operation of an electric light plant in Christiansted, St. Croix;

Concession of November 3, 1906, to K. B. Hey to establish and operate a telephone system on St. Thomas Island;

Concession of February 28, 1913, to the Municipality of St. Croix to establish and operate a telephone system on St. Croix Island.

Guarantee of (Space for date) relative to the St. Thomas Harbor four per cent loan of 1910.

(4) No responsibility of any kind whatsoever is incumbent on the Danish Government, or on the United States Government, as to the guaranty which, conformably to the ordinance of June 16, 1876, the colonial treasury of Sainte Croix has assumed with regard to the payment of an interest of five per cent per annum to the holders of the shares of the Sainte Croix Fallessukkerkogerier Company, Limited. The Danish Government retains the claims held by it as a creditor against the Ste. Croix Fallessukkerkogerier Company, Limited, and should the Danish Government acquire the ownership of property belonging to this company in the Island of Ste. Croix, the following provision (5) regarding a sale within two years shall apply to such property; the two years however to begin from the date of the acquirement of ownership of said property which, if at all, shall be within three years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the present convention.

(5) Whatever sum shall be due to the Danish Treasury by individuals on the date of the exchange of ratifications are reserved and do not pass by this cession; and where the Danish Government shall at that date hold property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, the United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction, to the credit of the Danish Government, any portion of such property remaining unsold at the expiration of the said term of two years.

(6) The colonial treasuries shall continue to pay the yearly allowances now given to functionaries appointed in the islands but holding no Royal commissions, who have been retired prior to the date of this convention unless those allowances may have until now been paid by the Danish Treasury, but no allowance in arrears shall be so paid.

ARTICLE IV

The Danish Government shall appoint, with convenient despatch, an agent or agents for the purpose of formally delivering to a similar agent or agents appointed on behalf of the United States, the territory, dominion, property and appurtenances which are ceded hereby, and for doing any other act which may be necessary in regard thereto. Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in this convention; but the cession with the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of the ratifications of this convention without such formal delivery. Any Danish military or naval forces which may be in the islands ceded shall be withdrawn as soon as may be practicable after the exchange of ratifications, but not later than six months thereafter, it being however understood that if the persons constituting these forces, after having terminated their Danish service, do not wish to leave the islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians.

ARTICLE V

In full consideration of the cession made by this convention, the United States agrees to pay, within six months from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, in the City of Washington to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark, duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of Twenty-five Million Dollars in gold coin of the United States.

ARTICLE VI

Danish subjects residing in the territory ceded may remain in such territory or may remove therefrom, retaining, in either event, all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or of its proceeds, and their right to carry on their industry, commerce and professions, being subject in respect to these rights to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners. In case they remain in the territory they may preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Denmark by making, before a court of record, within a year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a declaration of their decision to preserve such allegiance; in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it and to have adopted the nationality of the territory in which they may reside.

The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress of the United States.

ARTICLE VII

Danish subjects residing in the islands shall be subject in matters civil as well as criminal to the jurisdiction of the courts of the islands, pursuant to the ordinary laws governing the same; and they shall have the right to appear before such courts, and to pursue the same course therein as citizens of the country to which the courts belong.

ARTICLE VIII

Judicial proceedings pending at the time of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty in the islands ceded shall be determined according to the following rules

1. Judgments rendered either in civil suits between private individuals, or in criminal matters, before the date mentioned, and with respect to which there is no recourse or right to review under Danish law, shall be deemed to be final, and shall be executed in due form by competent authority in the territory within which such judgments should be carried out.

2. Civil suits between private individuals which may on the date mentioned be undetermined shall be prosecuted to judgment before the court in which they may then be pending or in the court that may be substituted therefor.

3. Criminal actions pending on the date mentioned before the Supreme Judicial Tribunal of Denmark against persons of the islands ceded by this convention shall continue under its jurisdiction until final judgment; but, such judgment having been rendered, the execution thereof shall be committed to the competent authority of the place in which the case arose.

ARTICLE IX

The rights of property secured by copyrights and patents acquired by Danish subjects in the islands ceded at the time of the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, shall continue to be respected.

ARTICLE X

The United States agrees to receive from Denmark consular officers in the ports and places of the islands ceded by the present convention, except where it may not be convenient to recognize such officers.

ARTICLE XI

In view of the development of the political and economic interests of Denmark in Greenland, the United States will not object to the claim of Denmark to take such measures of control and protection in Greenland as she may deem proper and necessary to safeguard and advance these interests, provided that such measures are not contrary to the principle of equal opportunity in whatever concerns the commerce and industry of all nations. Denmark engages to extend so much as is in force of the provisions of the Convention of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation concluded April 26, 1826, with the United States, to Greenland, Iceland and the Faroe Islands.

ARTICLE XII

The ratification of this convention shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible after ratification by both of the High Contracting Parties according to their respective procedure.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention, in the English and Danish languages.

Done at Washington the — day of —, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Sixteen.

Concession for the Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas, Limited, for the utilization of an iron floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor for a period of 21 years

His Royal Majesty, King of Denmark, etc., governor for the Danish West India Islands, Carl Emil Hedemann, R. of D., hereby makes known inasmuch that as, on the recommendation of the Ministry of Finance, it pleased His Majesty, the King, in his decree of February 2, last, to authorize the Government for the Danish West India Islands to grant a concession for the Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas, Limited, for the exploitation of an iron floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor for a period of 21 years, the said company is hereby given and granted the concession in question on the following specific conditions:

1. The iron floating dock which already lies in St. Thomas Harbor shall as heretofore have a length of at least 250 English feet, a breadth of at least 70 English feet internal measurement, and a capacity of 3,000 English tons.

2. The mooring place of the floating dock shall as hitherto be located at the large careening place in St. Thomas Harbor. The dock shall be moored as near to the shore as the depth will permit, and it must not lie in the way of ships which may go to or depart from the wharves in that part of the harbor.

The dredging or deepening operations at and near the mooring place of the floating dock may be undertaken by the company at its own expense, but can not be required by it to be done by the public.

3. The company shall be entitled to fix its own rules for the use of the floating dock and to determine the fees therefor. Just as it is understood as a matter of course that nothing shall be contained in these rules which might conflict with the rules prevailing at any time regarding the order and security of the harbor, so is it likewise true that the access to the utilization of the dock, with the exceptions enumerated below, shall be alike to the ships of all nations, and the rates shall be determined alone according to the character and size of the ships, in which connection the rules and rates shall be made publicly known.

Danish warships and mail ships of all nations shall at all times have the preference to utilize the dock before all other ships.

The company shall be at liberty to grant rebates or reductions in the usual rates for the use of the dock to companies or shipowners who own several ships and therefore use the dock more frequently.

4. If the company does not show any neglect in keeping the floating dock in a perfectly utilizable condition, the Government will not, within a period of twenty-one years from the date of this concession, permit the establishment of any other iron or wooden floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor or of any slip for ships of over 200 tons except the one already existing there, for the extension or alteration whereof the privilege of this company shall not constitute any hindrance.

If any defect should appear which would hinder the use of the floating dock in whole or in part the company shall be obliged to have such defect remedied as soon as possible, and the Government shall be at liberty in all such cases to require the company, on eight days' notice, to appoint an expert to render an opinion on the defect whereupon the Government shall appoint another expert to render a like opinion. The persons thus appointed shall have to give their opinion both regarding the character of the defects which have appeared, and regarding the length of time which, according to circumstances, will be required, and sufficient to remedy the defect. If they do not agree, they shall mutually select, if necessary by drawing lots, an umpire who shall decide the matter by siding with one of the first mentioned experts.

If the defect is not remedied before the expiration of the period fixed as above, and unless the company is able, on the basis of an opinion requested to be obtained by it under the conditions mentioned above, can prove that this fact is attributable to incalculable circumstances, the company's privilege shall be forfeited and the Government shall be authorized after that time to permit the establishment of other floating docks or slips in St. Thomas.

5. The company obligates itself toward the Danish Government not to remove the dock from the islands within the above-mentioned period unless it is proven that the dock has failed to yield any profit during three consecutive years.

If any exportation occurs, the dock shall pay the usual ship and harbor dues.

6. The company shall be considered to be domiciled in St. Thomas and shall be obliged at all times to have a representative actually domiciled there, who shall be authorized to represent the company in dealings with the Government. In all matters relating to the floating dock and whose settlement is not reserved to the Government under Article 7 of the concession, the company shall be amenable to the local courts of the place.

7. Furthermore, in all cases in which questions may arise regarding the interpretation of the wording and correct meaning of this concession the company shall be subject to the judgment or decision of the Government.

8. The company shall be obliged to have the present concession proclaimed by the Royal West Indian Superior Court and the St. Thomas township court within six weeks after date.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE,
Copenhagen, January 18, 1913.

In a letter dated the 6th instant the company among other things requested to have transferred to it the rights, granted to the consortium for the exploitation through drainage and deepening of an area within the harbor of the Danish West India island of St. Thomas, in the letters from the Ministry of Finance to the consortium of the 2d and 11th (cf. letter of October 14, last year).

In this connection it may be stated that the Ministry of Finance, in view of the fact, that it appears from the secretly adopted by-laws of the company (a copy of which is returned herewith, bearing the mark "Set. Colonies Central Administration, January 17, 1913, A. C. Schlichtkrull") that the company has its domicile at Copenhagen and that a majority of the members of the board of directors must have the rights of Danish citizenship, so that the conditions laid down in the aforementioned letters of the Ministry for the desired transfer of rights are fulfilled hereby permits the company to dam up the areas in St. Thomas Harbor which are marked in red on the plan which accompanied the aforementioned concession granted to the consortium on July 7th of last year, for the exploitation through drainage and deepening of an area within the harbor of the Danish West India Island of St. Thomas which plan is appended, so that when these land areas are reclaimed the company will acquire free and unrestricted ownership thereof, although the company, in so far as such ownership may conflict with private rights, will have to settle with the interested parties. The company shall likewise have exclusive right to utilize and exploit the basins constructed in conformity with the aforementioned plan. It may especially be remarked, that in consequence of the permit thus given, the company, will be entitled to charge wharfage stake money, and other similar dues against vessels who come alongside the wharves or otherwise make use of the basins. The wharfage dues shall be charged in accordance with rates established in advance, which rates shall be alike to all.

The company shall likewise be permitted to erect, on the land belonging to it, reservoirs for liquid fuel for ships, observing such reasonable safety measures against conflagration as the proper authority may deem necessary.

Pilotage and harbor dues (including ship dues) shall be paid to the harbor treasury by the ships which come to or utilize the harbor, wharf, mole and dock establishments which may be constructed by the company, to the same extent and according to the same rates as those prevailing at all times in the remainder of St. Thomas Harbor.

The police supervision over the aforementioned sea and land areas will evolve upon the local harbor police and the general police.

With respect to the application, made in the aforementioned letter of the company for duty free importation of all materials imported for the original installation in and about St. Thomas Harbor of the aforementioned establishments it may be remarked that, in the letter of the 8th instant, the Government for the West Indies Islands was authorized to lay before the colonial council for St. Thomas and St. Jan a proposal for the exemption from customs duties and ship dues of materials imported for establishments in and about St. Thomas Harbor, this proposal reading to the effect that the Government is authorized, for a period of ten years calculated from January 1, 1913, to grant exemption from customs duties and ship dues on all materials, including working implements and machinery which are imported to St. Thomas as an original installation there of establishments designed to provision or serve ships coming into the harbor, or which are otherwise calculated [to] further the navigation in the harbor.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE,
Copenhagen, April 16, 1913.

The company having been informed, in the communication of the 10th instant, that there was no intention for the time being to give to any other than this company a permission to establish electric works on St. Thomas Island for the supply of needs beyond those of private individuals (including those of one company), and that there would not be given any such permit for such establishments until the company could have an opportunity to express itself on the subject, a communication was received on the 11th instant from the Government for the Danish West India Islands to the effect that, in view of an application from Diploma Engineer Ejnar Svendsen of Roskilde for permission to establish and operate an electric plant for the supply of light to the city of Charlotte Amalie under date of the 17th ultimo, it granted Mr. Svendsen the said permit on the recommendation of the building and street commission.

In order to prevent the occurrence the Government was informed by telegram on the 11th instant that no concessions must be issued until correspondence had been had with the Ministry of Finance, and thereupon, as far as concerns the plans, mentioned in the aforementioned letter of the Government under date of February 12, last, for the widening of the present area of St. Thomas Harbor by making Gregori and the two Gregori canals a part of the Harbor (which plans the company regards as a menace to its purposes and its future) a letter was written to the Government (as the company was already informed in the letter of the 10th instant) to the effect that, under the present circumstances, there will be no question of any steps toward extending the area of St. Thomas Harbor.

As we agree with the company that it would be unfortunate if its plans were crossed by foreign companies with foreign capital (cf. in this regard the proceedings in the Parliament concerning a law for the concession of various establishments in St. Thomas Harbor), we are willing to give a promise that, within a certain period within which the company will be asked for a proposal, and provided that the establishments of the company prove adequate to serve the expected increase of traffic, no other companies will be granted concessions for commercial, industrial or navigational establishments in St. Thomas Harbor.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE,
Copenhagen, August 6, 1910.

In a letter of February 3, last, the bank council stated that the Danish West Indian National Bank would be willing to furnish the harbor treasury of St. Thomas, on a guarantee of the Government Treasury, a loan of 500,000 francs with 7% per annum interest and redemption, of which 4% per annum of the amount remaining at any time should be interest, and the remained redemption, provided that the loan should be furnished at the rate of 98% and payable in June term of the year.

For the loan the bank council desired to have delivered to it, without expense to the bank, partial bonds (drawn up in accordance with a model transmitted at the same time) to the number of 500, at 1,000 francs each issuable without the use of stamps and reading both to bearer and registered in some name, being subject later on to transfer, likewise without stamps, to bearer or to an owner named. The bank furthermore laid down the condition that the bank should not be charged any stamp tax in connection with the loan, and it stipulated that there should be paid by the harbor council a commission of one-eighth per cent of the amount paid out, for the redemption of coupons and bonds drawn at each period.

In this connection we will state that the Ministry of Finance accepts the aforementioned offer of the bank council, but with certain alterations in the model adopted by the bank council for the partial bonds and their coupons as will be seen from the inclosed printed model.

Before any further steps are taken in the matter we wish to ask the bank council for a declaration as to whether it can comply with the model inclosed. We will add that we desire to have the matter arranged in such a way that the partial bonds, after being provided here with the mark of the Government guarantee shall be transmitted to St. Thomas in order to be signed there by the harbor council as debtor, whereupon the amount of the loan will be raised in the Danish Indian National Bank in St. Thomas at the same time that the bonds are delivered.

From this date the interest due on December 11 of this year will be calculated, as appears from the coupon attached to the inclosed model of bond marked Number 1.

230. Your 92, March 27, 5 p. m. The Minister for Foreign Affairs here is extremely afraid of publicity at present moment as rumors of a tension between us and Germany are growing stronger. Denmark, he says, does not desire to seem unfriendly to its near neighbor. He says, "it would not be advisable that the matter should become public at a time which would give reason for a misinterpretation of Denmark's motives." He asked that the matter be carried on normally until its finish and not unduly hastened and not brought to public notice before. This can be done without injury to Denmark.

SIR: I have the honor, supplementing my telegraphic despatch No. 230 of March 30, 11 p. m., to report that further communication with the Foreign Office convinces me of the fact that the rumors of strained relations between the United States and Germany is the sole cause of the delay and that, as soon as I can overcome this fear, the negotiations will proceed smoothly. The Foreign Minister said:

My Government will submit a counter project as soon as possible and will expedite the negotiations. It is, however, impossible to sign the treaty without having discussed the details with the various Danish authorities interested. Moreover, the political situation is such that—though willing to do our utmost in the matter—we must be careful to choose the opportune moment for bringing the matter, which is closely connected with the general political situation, to the knowledge of the public without injuring Danish interests. On one side, the Danish Government, as far as it is concerned, deems it a favorable moment to carry out the plan while others interested are otherwise occupied, but, on the other side, there is or is said to be a tension between the United States and one of the belligerent powers whose feelings it is of importance for us to take into consideration.

Minister Egan to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, April 27, 1916, 8 p. m.

240. Referring to your 99, April 24, 2 p. m. Following is the Foreign Office interpretation of the contre projet with its text:

The United States Government will be aware from previous negotiations respecting the questions now at issue that a cession of these islands which from olden times have belonged to the Danish Crown will only seem justifiable to Danish public opinion if the Danish public feel convinced that both the islands and their inhabitants will gain by the union with the United States, a great power in their vicinity, this position being preferable to a continued union with Denmark. This point of view manifested itself during the previous negotiations in the wish that the inhabitants of the islands might, through voting, be given an opportunity of expressing themselves respecting the contemplated cession. It is not impossible that this point of view will again be brought forward by the Danish Rigsdag.

It must therefore again be put forward as Danish desiderata that those of the inhabitants who may not make use of their right to retain their Danish citizenship within the limits especially prescribed by the cession of the islands shall obtain all the rights of which citizens of the United States are possessed.

Futhermore, the island should simultaneously with the cession be exempt from any customs duty in their commercial connection with the United States, or at least that at the time of the union with the United States the customs duties shall be considerably diminished and entirely abolished after a short period of transition.

The Danish Government has enumerated in Article II, Section 4, of the contre projet as accurately as possible the monopolies, franchises and concessions existing in the said islands, and they cannot imagine that other claims or demands can be put forward from any side on account of the cession, but should such demand nevertheless be brought forward by any interested party who might feel that his rights had been violated on account of the cession, the King's Government must expressly insist that it shall not be possible on that account to bring forward any claim against the Danish Treasury. The administration of the islands have possibly granted certain concessions, for instance wharf space to different parties, such as the Hamburg-American Line and the Royal Mail.

As regards the public monies in the islands, it is taken for granted that the special purposes to which they may possibly be allotted will be respected by the United States.

It will be remarked that Article XI in the original American proposal is not found in the accompanying contre projet from the Danish Government. The Danish Government deem it most expedient that the acknowledgment on the part of the United States of the measures taken by the Danish Government in Greenland does not form part of the convention itself, but is made simultaneously with the signing of the convention in the form of a declaration from the United States. A draft for such declaration will be forwarded later.

It has further not been thought possible to include in the convention an article respecting the extension of the Danish-American commercial treaty to the Faroe Islands, Iceland and Greenland. As the Government of the United States will be aware, trading with Greenland is at present government monopoly and the extension of the Danish-American commercial treaty to the Faroe Islands and Iceland will necessitate a series of negotiations which among other things could be expected to delay the settlement of the proposed main object of the present convention.

The small differences which in reality exist between the original American proposal and the contre projet of the Danish Government will easily appear in comparing the two texts.

Convention between His Majesty the King of Denmark and the United States of America respecting the cession of the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix in the West Indies.

His Majesty the King of Denmark and the United States of America, being desirous of confirming the good understanding which exists between them, have to that end appointed as Plenipotentiaries:

His Majesty the King of Denmark:

Mr. Constantin Brun, Grand Cross of Dannebrog and decorated with the cross of honor of the same order, His Majesty's Chamberlain and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington,

And the President of the United States:

Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States,

Who, having mutually exhibited their full powers which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

His Majesty the King of Denmark by this convention cedes to the United States the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix in the West Indies together with the adjacent islands and rocks with all the sovereignty exercised or claimed therein by the Danish Government.

This cession includes the right of property in all public, government, or crown lands, buildings, wharves, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks and all other public property and public means of every kind or description now belonging to the Danish Government together with all appurtenances thereto.

Any government archives, papers and documents relative to the islands ceded and the dominions of the same, which may now be existing there, shall pass by this cession, but an authenticated copy of such documents or papers as may be required shall at all times be given by the United States to the Danish Government or to such properly authorized Danish officers or subjects as may apply for them.

It is specially agreed, however, that:

(1) The arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Danish Government shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may have been bought by the Government of the United States; it being however understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms and baggage or military articles as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in such purchase.

(2) The movables, especially silver plate and pictures to be found in the Government buildings in the islands ceded and belonging to the Danish Government shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it.

(3) The pecuniary claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands ceded are altogether extinguished in consequence of this cession and the United States assume no responsibility whatsoever for or in connection with these. Excepted is however the amount due to the Danish Treasury in account current with the West Indian colonial treasuries pursuant to the making up of accounts in consequence of the cession of the islands; should on the other hand this final accounting show a balance in favor of the West Indian colonial treasuries, the Danish Treasury shall pay that amount to the colonial treasuries.

(4) The United States will maintain the following grants, concessions and licenses, given by the Danish Government, in accordance with the terms on which they are given:

(A) The concession granted to "Det vestindiske Kompagni" (The West Indian Company), Limited, by the communications from the Ministry of Finance of January 18, 1913, and of April 16, 1913, relative to a license to embank, drain, deepen and utilize certain areas in Saint Thomas harbor and preferential rights as to commercial, industrial or shipping establishments in the said harbor.

(B) Agreement of August 10 and 14, 1914, between the Municipality of Saint Thomas and Saint John and "Det vestindiske Kompagni," Limited, relative to the supply of the city of Charlotte Amalie with electric lighting.

(C) Concession of March 12, 1897, to "The Floating Dock Company of Saint Thomas, Limited," subsequently transferred to "The Saint Thomas Engineering and Coaling Company, Limited," relative to a floating dock in Saint Thomas harbor, in which concession the maintenance, extension and alteration of the then existing repairing slip are reserved.

(D) Royal Decree No. 79 of November 30, 1914, relative to the subsidies from the colonial treasuries Saint Thomas and Sainte Croix to "The West India and Panama Telegraph Company, Limited."

(E) Concession of November 3, 1906, to K. B. Hey to establish and operate a telephone system on Saint Thomas Island, which concession has subsequently been transferred to the "Saint Thomas Telefonselskab," Limited.

(F) Concession of February 28, 1913, to the Municipality of Sainte Croix to establish and operate a telephone system in Sainte Croix.

(G) Concession of July 16, 1915, to Ejnar Svendsen, an engineer, for the construction and operation of an electric light plant in the city of Christiansted, Sainte Croix.

(H) Concession of June 20, 1904, for the establishment of a Danish West Indian bank of issue. This bank has for a period of thirty years acquired the monopoly to issue bank notes in the Danish West India Islands against the payment to the Danish Treasury of a tax amounting to ten per cent of its annual profits, such tax to be paid in Danish West Indian bills of credit in case the bank possesses such bills. It must however be observed that the Danish Treasury undertakes to redeem such Danish West Indian bills of credit as are in the possession of the bank.

(I) Guarantee according to the Danish supplementary budget law for the financial year 1908-1909 relative to the Saint Thomas harbors four per cent loan of 1910.

(J) According to a promise given provisionally in accordance with petitions from the following companies: "Det ostasiatiske Kompagni," Limited, and "Det kontinentale Syndikat Forpowlsen Radio Telegraf," Limited, there is reserved for each of these companies within a period of ten years from January 1, 1916, a right to establish and thereafter to operate, within the limits of the islands ceded, a radio telegraph station, in the case of the former for correspondence with vessels at sea and in the case of the latter for correspondence as well with ships at sea as with stations over the islands.

(5) Whatever sum shall be due to the Danish Treasury by individuals on the date of the exchange of ratifications are reserved and do not pass by this cession; and where the Danish Government at that date holds property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by the private individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this Convention; the United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction, to the credit of the Danish Government, any portion of such property remaining unsold at the expiration of the said term of two years.

(6) The congregations belonging to the Danish National Church shall retain the undisturbed possession of the churches which are now used by them, together with the parsonages appertaining thereunto and all other appurtenances including the capitals allotted to churches.

(7) The colonial treasury continue to pay the yearly allowances now given to heretofore retired functionaries appointed in the islands but holding no royal palace commission, unless such allowances may have until now been paid in Denmark.

ARTICLE III

The Danish Government shall appoint with convenient despatch an agent or agents for the purpose of formally delivering to a similar agent or agents appointed on behalf of the United States, the territory, dominion, property and appurtenances which are ceded herewith, and for doing any other act which may be necessary in regard thereto. Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in this convention. Any Danish military or naval force which may be in the islands ceded shall be withdrawn as soon as may be practicable after the formal delivery, it being however understood that if the persons constituting these forces, after having terminated their Danish service, do not wish to leave the islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians.

ARTICLE IV

In full consideration of the cession made by this convention, the United States agree to pay, within ninety days from the date of the exchange ratification of this convention in the city of Washington to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of twenty-five million dollars in gold coin of the United States.

ARTICLE V

Danish citizens residing in said islands may remain therein or may remove therefrom at will, retaining in either event all their rights of property, including the rights to sell or dispose of such property or its proceeds; in case they remain in the islands, they shall continue until otherwise provided, to enjoy all the private, municipal and religious rights and liberties secured to them by the laws now in force. If the present laws are altered, the said inhabitants shall not thereby be placed in a less favorable condition in respect to the above mentioned rights and liberties (than they?) now enjoy. Those, who remain in the islands may preserve their citizenship in Denmark by making before a court of record, within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a declaration of their decision to preserve such citizenship; in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it, and to have accepted citizenship in the United States; for children under eighteen years the said declaration may be made by their parents or guardians. Such election of Danish citizenship shall however not, after the lapse of the said term of one year, be a bar to their renunciation of their preserved Danish citizenship and their election of citizenship in the United States and admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, for other inhabitants of the islands.

The civil rights and the political status of the inhabitants of the islands shall be determined by the Congress, subject to approval stipulations contained in the present convention.

Danish citizens not residing in the islands but owning property therein at the time of the cession, shall retain their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property, being placed in this regard on the same basis as the Danish citizens residing in the islands and remaining therein or removing therefrom to whom the first paragraph of this article relates.

The rights of property, secured by copyrights and patents acquired by Danish citizens in the islands ceded at the time of exchange of the ratifications of this convention, shall be maintained.

Judicial proceedings pending at the time of the formal delivery in the islands ceded shall be determined according to the following rules:

(1) Judgments rendered either in civil suits between private individuals, or in criminal matters, before the date mentioned, and with respect to which there is no recourse or right to review under Danish law, shall be deemed to be final, and shall be executed in due form and without any renewed trial whatsoever by the competent authority in the territories within which such judgments should be carried out.

The same rule is applicable to such extrajudicial agreements in civil matters as according to the law hitherto in force, are to be exacted (are exigible), without foregoing procedure.

If in a criminal case a mode of punishment has been applied which according to new rules is no longer applicable on the islands ceded after delivery, the nearest corresponding punishment in the new rules shall be applied, or, if the Danish Government should so desire, the punishment shall be undergone in Denmark.

(2) Civil suits or criminal actions pending before the first courts in which the pleadings have not been closed at the same time, shall be confirmed before the tribunals established in the ceded islands after the delivery in accordance with the law which shall thereafter be in force.

(3) Civil suits and criminal actions pending at the said time before the superior court or the supreme court in Denmark or which are subsequently brought before these courts against persons from the islands ceded by this convention, shall continue to be prosecuted before the Danish courts until final judgment according to the law hitherto in force. The judgment shall be executed according to the rules stipulated in paragraph number 1 of this article.

ARTICLE VII

Treaties, conventions and all other international agreements of any nature existing between Denmark and the United States shall eo ipso extend, in default of a provision to the contrary, also to the ceded islands.

ARTICLE VIII

In case of differences of opinion arising between the high contracting parties in regard to the interpretation or application of this convention, such differences, if they cannot be regulated through diplomatic negotiations, shall be submitted for arbitration to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague.

ARTICLE IX

The ratification of the treaty will be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible after ratification by both of the high contracting parties according to their respective procedure.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention, in the Danish and English languages.

[Telegram]

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, May 23, 1916, noon.

107. Referring to the Legation's despatch number 317 of April 10, 1916. The Minister for Foreign Affairs thinks that the time is propitious for presenting the question of the islands here. He believes that the Government of the United States will not object to the Danish Government's extending their political and economic interests to the whole of Greenland.

EGAN

File No. 711.5914/59

The Secretary of State to Minister Egan

[Telegram]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 9, 1916, noon.

110. Your 107, May 23, and 240, April 27. This Government regrets that it cannot favor submitting the question of transfer of the islands to a vote of the inhabitants.

We can not guarantee that the inhabitants of the islands shall immediately have all the rights of American citizens. Full citizenship has not been accorded as yet to Porto Ricans, though the present Congress has the matter under consideration. Danish West Indians, however, will be regarded as nationals of the United States and entitled to its full protection, and will receive every possible political liberty.

The question of exemption of the islands from customs duties lies with the Congress, and this Government therefore can not give guarantees as to tariffs on goods passing between the islands and the United States. I have no doubt, however, that every facility for the rejuvenation of the commerce of the islands will be accorded them, as has been the case with the present insular possessions of the United States.

As to concessions and grants, this Government can undertake to assume obligations only in regard to such as may be mentioned in the treaty under negotiation. If the Danish Government believes that other concessions have been granted in the islands, it should satisfy itself as to what concessions they are and promptly notify this Government. I look to the Danish Government to inform this Government as to the particulars of any further concessions which may be in existence, for I cannot assure the maintenance of concessions or grants that have not been brought to my attention prior to the signature of the treaty and I cannot present to the Senate, with hope of obtaining its approval, a treaty that is indefinite in the obligations which it imposes on the United States.

It is not the intention of the United States to interfere unnecessarily with the internal administration of the islands, and therefore it may be presumed that the public moneys in the islands that have been allotted for special purposes will be respected by the United States in so far as this is compatible with the necessary changes consequent upon a transfer of sovereignty.

The following refers to proposed changes in the text of the treaty, to which I have given consideration with great care and in the most liberal spirit.

ARTICLE I, United States Text

Article I of American text should in general be retained, as the cession in the Danish text does not appear to be so unreserved and complete as that in the United States text. Only a full unreserved statement of the cession will save the provision from criticism here.

Paragraph 3 of the Danish text is objectionable because the duty to preserve valuable documents is omitted, because reference to documents which may be in Denmark is omitted and because the right to authenticated copies is not made reciprocal. The United States text is based on the similar provision in the treaty with Spain of 1898.

ARTICLE II, United States Text

I think Article II should be retained as I do not believe there is any hope of the treaty receiving the approval of the Senate if any doubt as to possible concessions, grants, privileges, etc., exists. I have no objection to the last sentence of Article II, United States text, regarding the Danish national church, as changed in Article II, Paragraph 6 of the Danish text, but I think the proper position for the provision is in Article II of the United States text.

ARTICLE III, United States Text

Paragraphs numbered 1, 2 and 3, of Danish text are accepted.

As to paragraph 4 of Danish text I have not been furnished with the original documents and accompanying maps of the concession of July 7, 1912, to the West India Company relative to the improvement of St. Thomas Harbor, as requested in my telegram No. 88 of March 13. The letter of January 18, 1913, does not seem to be the original grant. Moreover, it intimates that a decree has been drafted exempting the company from customs duties and harbor dues on all materials imported for its works for the years from January 1, 1913. I should be furnished with this decree if any has been issued, or with a formal statement that none has been issued. I should also be furnished with the original concession, together with the maps referred to and any other documents affecting the right of the company. The concession to the West Indian Bank of Issue is set forth in some detail in Paragraph 4 (h) of the Danish text. I do not understand the necessity for this, in view of the fact that it is not done in the other concessions mentioned.

Paragraph 4 (J) of the Danish text should be omitted. I am surprised that since the beginning of negotiations the Danish Government has felt free to promise new concessions regarding which no mention has been made in reply to my formal request of the Danish Minister here on January 29 for a complete statement of all concessions and grants made in the islands. I can not favor a radio concession in the islands, because the policy of this Government is not only opposed to monopolies, but against absolute individual control of radio stations within its territory, and because stations on these islands might seriously interfere with the operation of those in and adjacent to the Panama Canal Zone.

Paragraph 4 of the United States text should be retained as it occurs in the previous treaties and as the United States can not consider undertaking responsibilities in regard to the sugar boileries until they are fully known to it.

I accept paragraphs numbered 5, 6 and 7 of the Danish text.

ARTICLE IV, United States Text

I wish to retain the sentence "But the cession of the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of the ratifications of this convention without such formal delivery." This clause completes the cession without the formality of delivery, which might be prevented by some untoward cause.

ARTICLE V, United States Text

I have no objection to the insertion of ninety days instead of six months.

ARTICLE VI, United States Text

I have modified the first sentence to read as follows:

"Danish citizens, whether or not residing in the territory ceded, shall retain in either event all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or its proceeds, and the right to carry on their industry, commerce and professions; being subject in respect to these rights to such laws as are applicable to other foreigners; in case they remain in the islands they shall continue, until otherwise provided, to enjoy all the private, municipal and religious rights and liberties secured to them by the laws now in force."

I accept the remainder of the Danish text omitting "If the present laws are altered the said inhabitants shall not thereby be placed in a less favorable position in respect to the above-mentioned rights and liberties than they now enjoy." And omitting "Subject to approval stipulations contained in the present convention." And omitting paragraph beginning "Danish citizens not residing" and ending "This article relates," as this paragraph is now covered by the changes suggested in the first sentence. The final paragraph regarding copyrights and patents should, it seems to me, form a separate article, as is customary in other treaties.

ARTICLE VII, United States Text

This article relating to privileges of Danish subjects in the islands may be omitted, as indicated in Danish text.

ARTICLE VIII, United States Text

I suggest the following omissions: "The same rule is applicable, etc., without foregoing procedure"; "Or if the Danish Government should so desire punishment shall be undergone in Denmark"; and "Or which are subsequently brought before these courts against persons from the islands ceded by this convention." I suggest that the final sentence be changed to read: "The judgment shall be executed in due form by the competent authority in the territories within which such judgment should be carried out." This corresponds with the reading of last part of paragraph numbered 1.

ARTICLE IX, United States Text

As indicated above, I should prefer to see this article retained as a separate article. I prefer, however, my reading of the last words, namely, "Shall continue to be respected."

ARTICLE X, United States Text

I agree to the substitution of Article VII of the Danish text.

ARTICLE XI, United States Text

I agree to omission of entire article, and will address a formal note regarding Greenland to the Danish Minister here at the date of signature of the treaty in the sense of the first sentence of this article.

ARTICLE VIII, Danish Text

I accept this article.

Please go over with the foreign Minister the proposed changes and endeavor to obtain his prompt agreement to them. I have endeavored to retain the thought of the Danish text except where it threw upon this Government responsibilities which it can not assume or guarantee to carry out if it should assume them, as the ultimate decision in regard to some of them rests, as I have pointed out, with the Congress of the United States, for which body I can not undertake to speak.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, June 29, 1916, 4 p. m.

267. Referring to the Department's 110, June 9, noon. As it seemed dangerous that I should depend on my memory for the results of conference with Minister for Foreign Affairs, I have had the suggestions of the Foreign Office reduced to writing. I will send the document in two sections.

The Danish Government beg to call attention to the fact that in their absolute opinion the secrecy respecting the whole of the matter upon which both sides have agreed should be strictly maintained until the case can be laid before the Danish Rigsdag and the Congress of the United States.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, June 30, 1916, 4 p. m.

268. Continuation of our 267, June 29, 4 p. m. The Danish Government have now drafted a new counterproject for a convention respecting the transfer of the Danish West Indian Islands, in which to the greatest possible extent regard has been taken to the original draft of the United States Government in connection with the Danish proposals which have been accepted by the said Government.

The Danish Government waive the claim that the convention should be made dependent on the vote of the inhabitants on the islands ceded, and they further waive their claim that by the convention itself the inhabitants should immediately be guaranteed full American citizenship and exemption from customs duties in the commercial intercourse with the United States.

The Danish Government have noted with satisfaction the statement of the United States Government that every facility for the rejuvenation of the commerce of the islands will be given them, such as has been the case with the present insular possessions of the United States, and the Danish Government, therefore, take it for granted that the inhabitants of the islands, in the intervening period, until the above-mentioned rights to their full extent can be granted to them, will at least obtain the same privileges in this respect as the inhabitants of other similar territories within the Union.

Finally, the Danish Government expressly state that they have not given any other concessions, grants, etc., on the isles than those which have already been communicated to the United States Government and they have in the new counterproject reinserted Article II of the original draft of the United States. Respecting the different articles in the new counterproject, the following is remarked:

Article I is equal to Article I in the original draft of the United States.

Article II is equal to Article II in the United States original draft, the third sentence having, however, been worded in the form accepted by the United States Government.

Article III is equal to Article II in the first Danish counterproject to such extent as it has been accepted by the United States Government.

The further particulars desired by the United States Government respecting paragraph four are enclosed herewith:

1. The original concession of the seventh of July, 1912, with the accompanying map;

2. Public notice of thirty-first of January, 1913, respecting the annulment of the original concession, and;

3. Decree of the first of April, 1913, exempting from customs and ships' dues materials imported for works in Saint Thomas Harbor.

The stipulation contained in Article III, paragraph 4, of the United States original draft has become superfluous by the enclosed law number 68 of the 24th of April, 1903, respecting Sainte Croix Fallessukkerkogerier, which expressly states that at the fulfilment of the agreement mentioned in the law the shareholders in the Sainte Croix Fallessukkerkogerier have been fully satisfied in respect to all claims, including all claims against the Saint Thomas colonial treasury on account of the interest guarantee incumbent on the said treasury in virtue of the Royal West Indian decree of the 16th of June, 1876.

Respecting the bills of credit mentioned in section H in the Danish counterproject, part of which has now been left out, the following is remarked:

Formerly Danish West Indian bills of credit, issued by the Danish Treasury, which bore no interest, circulated in the Danish West Indian Islands.

These bills of credit were issued in virtue of a Royal decree of the 4th of April 1849. They were only in the Danish West Indian Colonies valid at their face value, so that they should be received in the paying offices in the islands as ready money and payment. They were unredeemable, were not legal tender, but were received without the compulsion of the law between man and man.

When on the 20th of June 1904 the Minister of Finance in virtue of the law of the 29th of March 1904, gave a concession for the establishment of a Danish West Indian Bank of Issue, which for a period of thirty years has the monopoly to issue in the islands notes which are redeemable at bearer's request with gold coin and which in all public paying offices shall be accepted as legal tender, a promise was given to the Bank in virtue of Article VI in the said concession that the Danish West Indian bills of credit should be recalled with preclusive effect within a certain term not shorter than one year. This took place in this manner, that the term expired at the end of the month of April 1907, (see public notice number 6 of the 5th of March 1906). The Bank was bound to redeem the bills of credit with the Bank's own notes and was not allowed to put then in circulation again. On the other hand the Bank has a right to use the bills in payment of its yearly tax to the Danish Treasury. This tax will now in virtue of the convention pass to the United States, but the Danish Treasury will undertake to redeem the bills of credit redeemed by the Bank, and which, according to the Bank's monthly balance of the 31st of March 1916, amounts to 442,610 Fr.

In Article IV the sentence "but the cession, etc.," to "formal delivery" has been reinserted. It is, however, the desire of the Danish Government that formal delivery shall take place but it may take place without delay in accordance with a telegraphic instruction to the Governor from the Danish Government.

Article V is equal to Article V in the United States original draft with the alteration accepted by the United States.

Article VI is equal to Article V in the first Danish counterproject with the exception of the last paragraph. This is the only point where the Danish Government have not seen their way to accept the proposals of the United States Government. The Danish wording is in strict conformity with Article III in the prior convention of the 24th of January 1902 with the exception that the period of option, in conformity with the proposal of the United States Government, has been shortened to one year, and that a stipulation has been added respecting the deposit of the declaration of option for children under eighteen years.

During the negotiations which were conducted between the two Governments prior to the Convention of the 24th of April 1902 the reasons which made Article VI in the United States draft unacceptable to the Danish Government were so fully stated that it would be unnecessary to repeat them here. These reasons being still valid, in view of the fact that American citizenship has not been guaranteed to the inhabitants of the islands through the convention, that the Danish Government are not in possession of the necessary material to form an accurate judgment of how the legal status of the inhabitants will be after the transfer, and that by Article VI the inhabitants are not even given as favorable a legal status as secured to them by Article II in the Danish-American Convention of Commerce of the 26th of April 1826, the Danish Government, therefore, hope that the United States Government also now will appreciate the weight of these reasons and will accept a wording which they have already accepted on the prior occasion.

Article VII is equal to Article VII in the United States original draft.

Article VIII is equal to Article VIII in the United States original draft with the modifications accepted by them in the first Danish counterproject's Article VI.

Article IX is equal to Article IX in the United States original draft..

Article X is equal to Article VII in the first Danish counterproject accepted by the United States Government.

Article XI is equal to Article VIII in the first Danish counterproject accepted by the United States Government.

Respecting Greenland the United States will at the date of the signature of the convention give a declaration in conformity with the draft previously submitted to the United States Government by the Danish Government.

The Danish Government finally beg to recall to the memory of the United States Government the promise given to the Danish Minister at Washington by the American Secretary of State to the effect that they would interest American capital in the islands to release private Danish monetary interests.

The new counterproject drafted in conformity with the above has been sent to the Danish Minister at Washington in the Danish and English languages. The Danish Government agree with the United States Government that the present moment would be opportune for the conclusion of this convention, and should the United States Government be able to accept the draft now submitted, it will be possible to give the Danish Minister at Washington telegraphic powers in the course of eight days to sign the convention in the name of the Danish Government together with the American plenipotentiary.

Proclamation relative to the granting of a concession for the utilization, through drainage and deepening, of an area within the harbor on the Danish West India Island of St. Thomas.

On the recommendation of the Minister of Finance it has pleased His Majesty the King, by supreme resolution of the 7th instant, to grant to a consortium consisting of: Counselor of State and Administrative Director for the East India Company H. N. Andersen, S. K. of D. and Dm.; Captain and Administrative Director for the United Steamship Company C. M. T. Cold, K. of D. and Dm.; Counselor of State and Director for the Danish Farmers' Bank and Mortgage and Exchange Bank of Copenhagen, E. R. Glückstadt, R. of D.; Wholesaler and Manufacturer Holger Petersen, K. of D. and Dm.; and Chamberlain and Vice Admiral A. du P. de Richelieu, S. K. of D. and Dm., with the East India Company as manager, the following concession for the utilization, through drainage and deepening, of an area within the harbor on the Danish West India Island of St. Thomas:

We Christian Tenth, by the grace of God King of Denmark, etc., hereby make known that, in compliance with a petition for the purpose, and in accordance with Law No. 113 of May 25, 1912, We have granted to a consortium consisting of: Counselor of State and Administrative Director for the East India Company H. N. Andersen, S. K. of D. and Dm.; Captain and Administrative Director for the United Steamship Company C. M. T. Cold, K. of D. and Dm.; Counselor of State and Director for the Danish Farmers' Bank and Mortgage and Exchange Bank of Copenhagen E. R. Gluckstadt, R. of D.; Wholesaler and Manufacturer Holger Petersen, K. of D. and Dm.; and Chamberlain and Vice Admiral A. du P. de Richelieu, S. K. of D. and Dm., with the East India Company as manager, the following concession for the utilization, through drainage and deepening, of an area within the harbor on the Danish West India Island of St. Thomas:

1. The concessioner shall be entitled to dam in the areas in St. Thomas harbor marked in red on the accompanying plan, and, after these areas have been reclaimed, he shall have free and unrestricted right of ownership over them, though he shall be obliged to reach a settlement with the interested parties in case such right of ownership should conflict with the rights of private parties.

However, the Ministry of Finance will be ready, if necessary, to undertake, in accordance with 75 of the Colonial Law, to have such rights expropriated for the benefit of the concessioner, on condition that the latter shall give full compensation therefor.

In consequence thereof he shall be entitled to charge:

- a. Wharfage from the ships which anchor within the dammed-in areas.
- b. A fee for the use of warehouses and storage rooms.
- c. A fee for handling goods arriving and shipped away.

He shall be permitted to utilize the area as owner according to the laws and regulations in force.

Wharfage shall be collected according to rates determined in advance by the concessioner, and shall be alike to all.

2. The concessioner shall have a right to construct a mole from St. Thomas Island across Prince Rupert's Rocks, as described more accurately on the accompanying plan, and, after this mole has been completed, to utilize not only it but also Prince Rupert's Rocks themselves in the same manner and with the same rights as the new land areas mentioned under 1.

3. The concessioner shall have a right to deepen the harbor on the areas marked in blue on the accompanying plan, and, when this deepening work is completed, he shall have the exclusive right to use the basin constructed there in accordance with the plan.

In consequence hereof he shall be entitled, among other things, also to collect stake money and other similar charges from ships using these basins.

It shall not be permissible, immediately outside the basins, on the area thus deepened by the concessioner, for ships to anchor or maneuver in such a way as to hinder the passage of vessels to or from or their anchorage in said basins.

It may be further remarked that the police supervision over the sea and land areas included within the present concession shall devolve upon the local harbor police and the general police.

4. The concessioner shall further have a right to construct and operate one or more appropriate stationary or floating docks, at a suitable place within the part of St. Thomas harbor reserved to him in the present concession or at such other place in the harbor as the Minister of Finance may approve. However, the floating dock rights belonging to the St. Thomas Dock, Engineering & Coal-ing Company, Ltd., which is operating for the time in the harbor, shall be maintained until the expiration of its concession.

The dock or docks of the concessioner shall not be situated in such a manner as to impede the general navigation in the harbor, in which connection the approval of the construction by the Ministry of Finance shall be obtained.

No careening dues or other special dues for the use of such dock or docks shall be payable to the harbor treasury or to any other public treasury, and the concessioner himself shall be allowed to determine what dues he will charge for the utilization thereof.

As long as the concession remains in force and the docks are kept in operation, no permit shall be given to construct or operate any other stationary or floating dock within West Indian territory; however, if the reservation made above with respect to the floating dock operating for the time in the harbor.

5. As long as the present concession is in force, no other concession or permit shall be granted on or at St. Thomas or St. John for harbor works which can be used in competition with the harbor works constructed by the present concessioner, though it may be remarked in this connection that this provision shall not constitute a hindrance to the free utilization and possible extension of the wharves existing in St. Thomas harbor at the time of the granting of this concession, just as it shall not interfere with any harbor or wharf constructions that may be executed for the use of ships belonging to or chartered by the owner or renter of the wharf.

Neither shall the present provision impede the establishment of competitive activity for which no special concession is required from the Government.

6. The concessioner shall have a right to erect tanks on his land area for liquid fuel for ships, but must take such reasonable safety measures against fire as the competent authority may deem necessary (cf. 12).

7. The concessioner shall have the exclusive right on and at St. Thomas to establish and operate an electric light and power plant, a refrigerating plant, water works, and street car power house, provided such establishments serve more than the needs of one individual (including a joint-stock company).

However, this exclusive right shall not interfere with the operation of already existing establishments, nor may it be invoked when the concessioner, after having an opportunity to express himself on the matter, fails to declare his willingness to construct the works in question on such a scale as the Ministry of Finance may deem necessary and within a reasonable period to be set by the Ministry of Finance.

8. If the concessioner deems that the existing lights are not adequate, he shall be free to construct and operate other lights, subject to the approval of the Ministry of Finance, and he shall then be entitled to collect lighthouse charges, subject to the approval of the Ministry of Finance, from all ships entering the harbor.

9. Pilotage and harbor dues (including "ship" dues) shall be paid into the harbor treasury by ships which approach or utilize the new harbor, wharf, mole, and docking facilities dealt with in the present concession, to the same extent and at the same rates as in the present harbor of St. Thomas. The present rates of these dues shall not be subject to increase without the consent of the concessioner.

10. The concessioner undertakes, if so required by the Ministry of Finance, to attend to the pilotage service throughout the harbor according to rules and at rates approved by the Ministry of Finance, in which connection it may be remarked that the masters of vessels shall not be obliged to utilize pilots or to pay pilotage when pilots are not utilized.

As long as this obligation rests upon the concessioner, no other shall be allowed to furnish pilots in the harbor.

11. The concessioner shall have the exclusive right to establish and operate a wireless telegraph on St. Thomas in accordance with the regulations contained in decree No. 8 of April 18, 1910, on telegrams (including wireless or radio telegrams) on the Danish West India Islands, and with further rules approved by the Ministry of Finance.

However, this exclusive right can not be invoked unless the concessioner operates a wireless telegraph open to traffic on St. Thomas within a reasonable period to be set by the Ministry of Finance.

As long as the concession is in force and such a wireless telegraph is in operation, no other permits shall be given to establish and operate any wireless telegraph plant in St. Thomas or St. John.

The wireless telegraph station shall be open to the use of the public, and the rates for such public use shall be submitted to the Ministry of Finance for approval.

12. The concessioner shall be subject in every respect to the law prevailing in St. Thomas, and he must govern himself according to the rules prescribed by the lawful authorities in St. Thomas.

Before the enterprises mentioned in the concession are begun, plans and drawings must be approved by the Ministry of Finance.

13. With respect to quarantine matters in St. Thomas harbor the Government promises the concessioner that it will regulate them in accordance with rules prevailing in the harbors of the world in general and in such a way that no unnecessary hindrances shall be placed in the way of navigation in the harbor from the standpoint of the quarantine service.

14. The concessioner shall have an opportunity, upon acquiring the usual licence, to engage in commerce on and from St. Thomas on the same conditions as prevail in general with respect to the commercial activity of private individuals or joint-stock companies.

With regard to taxation he shall be subject to the general rules of the place.

15. The concessioner shall be granted duty-free importation of all materials imported for the original installation, in and about the harbor, of the works belonging under the present concession.

16. The present concession shall become void if the concessioner has failed, within a period to be determined by the Ministry of Finance, to take the necessary steps to establish the works sketched on the accompanying plan in and about "Long Bay" on St. Thomas, though the concessioner shall have a right to undertake this work in different sections, in such a way that the completion of the work sketched on the plan under "A", or some other section of the whole harbor-deepening plan which is suitable in the judgment of the Ministry of Finance, shall, before the expiration of the period set, be sufficient for the maintenance of the concession, and it shall depend on the judgment of the concessioner when and to what extent the other works sketched shall be executed.

17. The concession is given for a period of 99 years from the date of its issuance. However, after the expiration of 60 years from the time when, in accordance with the latter part of 16, the first part of the establishments is completed, the Danish Government or the harbor council of St. Thomas shall have a right to buy from the concessioner all his harbor and dock establishments in St. Thomas, including property such as the area reclaimed from the harbor, together with the wharves, machinery, warehouses, and other buildings, docks, and materials, as well as all other works constructed by him in accordance with the present concession. However, the right shall be subject to the condition that the Danish Government or the harbor council of St. Thomas shall give the concessioner notice, at least one year in advance, of its intention to avail itself of this right.

If the Danish Government or the harbor council of St. Thomas fails to avail itself of the said right of taking over the works by the 60th year from the date on which, in accordance with the final part of 16, the first part of the works is completed, the same right to take over the works shall belong to the Danish Government or the St. Thomas harbor council at the 70th, 80th, or 90th year calculated from the same date as the aforementioned 60th year. The taking over of the works shall be subject in these cases also to the condition that the Danish Government or the St. Thomas harbor council shall give notice to the concessioner at least one year in advance that it intends to utilize the right.

Upon the expiration of the concession the same right to take over the works shall belong to the Danish Government or the St. Thomas harbor council.

This right of preemption or purchase on the part of the Danish Government or the St. Thomas harbor council shall be subject to the condition that the concessioner shall be paid a price based on the appraisement of impartial persons for all the harbor and dock establishments belonging to the concessioner in St. Thomas, and, if he has failed to earn 5% interest on his invested capital during the ten years next preceding the taking over of the works, there shall be added a sum equivalent to the amount lacking, provided it can not be covered from the reserve fund saved. The appraisement shall be based on the amount which it is considered the property would, at the time of purchase, cost new, making due allowance for deterioration and age. If the concession has been transferred to a joint-stock company, the latter may choose to determine the rate at which the shares have been quoted on an average in the stock exchange at Copenhagen during the last ten years. The average for each year shall be obtained by taking $\frac{1}{12}$ of the sum of the averages of each month's highest and lowest quotations. However, the stockholders must not in any event insist on the purchase being made at a rate exceeding 125 crowns per 100 crowns.

If the parties are unable to agree on the selection of the impartial persons, of whom there shall be an odd number, they shall be appointed by the court.

If any of the companies or persons who utilize any part of the present concession become bankrupt, the Danish Government or the St. Thomas harbor council shall have a right to immediately take over the establishments of the company or persons concerned, together with all rights connected therewith, on the condition set forth in the 4th paragraph of the present section, unless the concessioner wishes to take them over himself.

18. The concessioner shall have his domicile and venue in the Danish West India Islands or in the mother country, in the latter place at the royal superior court and the inferior court at Copenhagen, or at such court as may at the time be considered competent as a court of first instance.

19. A majority of the members of the consortium, if the concessioner is such, and a majority of the board of directors of the joint-stock company if the concessioner is such, shall be persons possessing the rights of Danish citizenship.

20. With respect to the enterprises dealt with in this concession, regardless of the party by whom they are operated, it shall be a condition precedent that additions to the reserve fund and payments from the capital stock for plants, establishments, machinery, and equipment shall be made according to general commercial rules.

A copy of each of the annual reports and accounts of the various enterprises shall be sent in to the Ministry of Finance.

21. The present concession shall not be transferred to another person without the consent of the Ministry of Finance. The consent of the Ministry of Finance shall likewise be required in order that the harbor works or parts thereof may be transferred to another person.

Even if a part of the enterprise passes into other hands, the concessioner shall nevertheless continue to be responsible to the Ministry of Finance for the observance of the concession as a whole.

22. If the concessioner should fail essentially to fulfill the obligations resting upon him in accordance with the present concession, the latter may be declared forfeited by judicial decree at the instance of the Minister of Finance.

23. All questions arising in connection with the interpretation of the present concession shall be settled by the Minister of Finance.

However, the concessioner shall in all cases be at liberty to appeal from the decisions of the Minister of Finance before the common courts, but until such decisions are reversed by the courts they must be followed.

Addition to the foregoing concession.

It is being sought by law to abolish the import duties in St. Thomas and St. John. However, the Ministry of Finance must reserve the right, if it should be found that St. Thomas and St. John communes are unable to cover a deficit from the ordinary revenues, to prescribe in accordance with 56 of the Colonial Law No. 124 for the Danish West Indies of April 6, 1906, that the deficit shall be covered by a temporary proportionate restoration of the abolished import duties.

In compensation for the privileges granted to the concessioner under 9 of the concession and the present additional concession, he hereby undertakes, during the first ten years after a law abolishing the import duties has gone into force, to pay into the St. Thomas and St. John colonial treasury $33\frac{1}{3}\%$ of the wharfage dues collected by him. Besides, the concessioner shall make a deposit of 500,000 francs, from which the aforesaid colonial treasury shall be entitled, within the aforesaid period of ten years, to take annually an amount equal to the difference between the aforementioned $33\frac{1}{3}\%$ of the wharfage dues collected and 100,000 francs annually.

What the concessioner has thus furnished from the said deposit shall be paid back to him by the St. Thomas and St. John commune whenever, after the expiration of the said ten years, the annual ship (harbor) dues shall exceed 300,000 francs, in such a way that half of the surplus shall be paid annually, until the amount taken from the said deposit (which shall not draw interest) is paid back.

Let all interested parties be governed accordingly.

Law relating to the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries

AMALIENBORG, April 24, 1903.

We Christian the Ninth, by God's grace King of Denmark, etc., hereby make known that the Rigsdag (Parliament) has passed and We approve the following law:

The Minister of Finance is hereby authorized to finally and validly conclude the provisional agreement embodied in the appendix to the present law and to the effect that the present company entitled "St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries" shall be dissolved after assigning the factory on St. Croix, together with all buildings appertaining thereto and the machinery, appurtenances, and inventory articles belonging to the factory on January 1, 1903, to a new joint-stock company to be organized with a nominal capital stock of 3,000,000 crowns. One-half the amount of the stock of the new company shall go to the national treasury, while the other half shall go to the stock-holders in the "St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries" company. However, before the agreement is finally concluded, the Minister of Finance must be given a guarantee, suitable in his judgment, that the necessary operative capital will be at the disposal of the new company.

Upon the consummation of the aforementioned agreement, the national treasury shall be given permanent satisfaction for its mortgage-secured lien on the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries Company, just as the stockholders in the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries shall be given permanent satisfaction for every right they possess, including every claim they may have against the St. Croix colonial treasury in connection with the interest guarantee assumed by the colonial treasury in accordance with the Royal West Indian decree of June 16, 1876.

The aforementioned agreement, as well as the documents to be drawn up in connection with the transfer of the factory and appurtenances to the new company, may be made without the use of stamped paper; furthermore, all recording and other fees due the public treasury in connection with said transfer shall be waived.

Let all interested parties be governed accordingly.

Appendix

Between the Minister of Finance on behalf of the national treasury, who, as unsatisfied mortgagee in accordance with D. L. 5-7-8, has taken over the factory, etc., on St. Croix, belonging to the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries, on the one hand, and: Counselor of State and Administer W. A. D. Moldenhawer; Counselor of State and Wholesaler A. P. C. Holm; R. of D. and Supreme Court Attorney S. S. Nellemann; K. of D. and Dm., Factory Owner, and Director G. A. Hagemann; and R. of D. and Dm. and Director Martin Dessau, as duly empowered representatives of the stockholders in the "St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries," who altogether are holders of stock to a total amount of 683,800 crowns, on the other hand, the following agreement has been entered:

1. There is formed a joint-stock company under the name of St. Croix Sugar Factory, with a nominal capital stock of 3,000,000 crowns, divided into shares at 1,000 crowns each, or shares in denominations which are multiples of 1,000 crowns; however, by way of exception single shares may be issued in denominations of 100 crowns or multiples thereof.

2. The present St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries company shall transfer to the aforesaid joint-stock company, with the consent of the Minister of Finance, the factory on St. Croix together with all buildings appertaining thereto, as well as the machinery, appurtenances, and inventory articles belonging to the factory on January 1, 1903, (including spare articles, tools, materials for keeping up factory, bone charcoal, and the like, but not the stock on hand, at the time, of wholly or partly manufactured sugar, sacks and other sugar packing, coal, limestone, Slamlærred ("mud linen"), and the like, cash on hand and outstanding claims). On the other hand, the new company undertakes, in the manner described below, to relieve the St. Croix Sugar Boileries company from all obligations resting upon it.

3. The sum at which the concern is to be taken over is fixed at 3,000,000 crowns, to be represented by stock in the new company.

The payment shall be made in such a way that one half of the shares, or shares to a total amount of 1,500,000 crowns shall be delivered to the national treasury as its property in full satisfaction of its mortgage-secured claim on the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries company, namely, 1,414,784 crowns 57 øre principal and all accrued or accruing but unpaid interest.

The other half of the shares, or shares totaling 1,500,000 crowns, shall, according to the rules enumerated below, fall to the stockholders in the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries company in full satisfaction of every right due the stockholders in the last-named company, including particularly every claim held by them against the St. Croix colonial treasury in connection with the interest guarantee assumed by the colonial treasury in accordance with the Royal West Indian decree of June 16, 1876.

The shares in the St. Croix Sugar Factory, due the stockholders in the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries in accordance with the above and totaling 1,500,000 crowns, shall be taken into custody temporarily by the Ministry of Finance. Of this amount there shall first be set aside 1,416,100 crowns, corresponding to the capital stock in the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries. Each share (either common or preferred), together with all coupons, in the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries can thereafter be exchanged at the Ministry of Finance for a share of corresponding amount in the St. Croix Sugar Factory.

The remaining 83,900 crowns shall be proportionately divided among the holders of preferred stock in the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries, who, according to further rules prescribed by the Minister of Finance, shall further receive for proportionate distribution among them such part of the aforementioned 1,416,100 crowns as may not be taken at the Ministry of Finance after a call has been issued, provided they make a declaration that they will hold the new company and the St. Croix colonial treasury harmless for any claim against the latter which might be raised by stockholders in the old company who have not received their part of the new shares.

4. The stock of sugar, coal, bone charcoal, and sacks on hand on January 1, 1903, as mentioned in 2, shall go to the national treasury as free property in full settlement of the debt owing on account current by the St. Croix Cooperative Sugar Boileries to the Danish national treasury up to the date mentioned.

5. It shall be the particular business of the new company to procure the necessary operative capital for the new company, perhaps by means of a loan on the factory.

6. The new company shall assume operations on January 1, 1903, from which date on the national treasury shall retire as the creditor who took over the boiler-ies on mortgage, and from which date all expenditures and receipts shall take place on its (the new company's) account. The new company shall take the place of the Ministry of Finance in contracts entered into with the present personnel in the boiler-ies on St. Croix. Likewise, the bookkeepers engaged here at home by the Ministry of Finance shall enter the services of the new company.

7. The Minister of Finance shall present a bill to the Parliament now in session for the regulation of the matter, which bill shall embody a proposition for the approval of the present agreement as well as to the effect that the transfer mentioned in 2 may be made without using stamped paper and that recording fees and others due the public treasury in connection with said transfer shall be waived.

8. The signature of the Minister of Finance to the present agreement shall not be binding unless the agreement is approved by the Parliament.

The Danish Minister to the Acting Secretary of State
DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, July 18, 1916.

DEAR MR. POLK: As I understand that Mr. Lansing is now having a holiday and absent from Washington, I beg to address to you the following confidential communication regarding a subject mentioned between us already on a previous occasion when Mr. Lansing had gone away.

On June 29 I wrote Mr. Lansing informing him that on the day before the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs had handed to Mr. Egan a memorandum relative to the definite Danish proposition regarding our West India Islands and had also dispatched to me by mail the draft convention.

I have now received this draft convention, and I take pleasure in sending you under this cover a copy both of the English and Danish text.

Although I presume that you have now received from Mr. Egan the above-named memorandum, I also enclose for your information and convenience a copy of that document and of the declaration regarding Greenland, which you will also have received from Mr. Egan.

This second counterproposition of the Danish Government having been drafted with the greatest possible consideration for the wishes of the Government of the United States as expressed both in the original draft-convention and in the course of the negotiations, and both Governments agreeing that the present moment would be opportune for the conclusion of this convention, I venture to hope that the text now submitted will be entirely acceptable and permit of the prompt completion of this important event.

You will perceive from the last passage of the memorandum of the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs that it will be possible, within 8 days, to give me telegraphical powers to sign the convention on behalf of the Danish Government in the now submitted form.

I would be much obliged to you, if you would be so good as to acknowledge the receipt of my present communication as soon as convenient and, when you are able to, let me know whether it is proposed to await the return of Mr. Lansing for the final consideration of the matter.

As I understand that Congress will adjourn about the 20th of August, I would also thank you for informing me whether it is contemplated to submit the convention, when signed, to the Senate of the United States during this present session or only upon the opening of the new session in the coming month of December.

I also wish to again repeat here my readiness to come down to Washington at any moment whenever my presence should be deemed necessary or advisable in this connection.

Believe me [etc.]

C. BRUN

[Inclosure 1]

The United States of America and his Majesty the King of Denmark being desirous of confirming the good understanding which exists between them, have to that end appointed as Plenipotentiaries:

His Majesty the King of Denmark:

Mr. Constantin Brun, His Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington, and the President of the United States:

Mr. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States, who, having mutually exhibited their full powers which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

His Majesty the King of Denmark by this convention cedes to the United States all territory, dominion and sovereignty, possessed, asserted or claimed by Denmark in the West Indies including the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Sainte Croix together with the adjacent islands and rocks.

This cession includes the right of property in all public, government, or crown lands, public buildings, wharves, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks, public funds, rights, franchises, and privileges, and all other public property of every kind or description now belonging to Denmark together with all appurtenances thereto.

In this cession shall also be included any government archives, records, papers or documents which relate to the cession or the rights and property of the inhabitants of the islands ceded, and which may now be existing either in the islands ceded or in Denmark. Such archives and records shall be carefully preserved, and authenticated copies thereof, as may be required shall be at all times given to the United States Government or the Danish Government, as the case may be, or to such properly authorized persons as may apply for them.

Denmark guarantees that the cession made by the preceding article is free and unencumbered by any reservations, privileges, franchises, grants, or possessions, held by any governments, corporations, syndicates, or individuals, except as herein mentioned. But it is understood that this cession does not in any respect impair private rights which by law belong to the peaceful possession of property of all kinds by private individuals of whatsoever nationality, by municipalities, public or private establishments, ecclesiastical or civic bodies, or any other associations having legal capacity to acquire and possess property in the islands ceded.

The congregations belonging to the Danish National Church shall retain the undisturbed use of the churches which are now used by them, together with the parsonages appertaining thereto and other appurtenances, including the funds allotted to the churches.

It is especially agreed, however, that:

1. The arms and military stores existing in the islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Danish Government shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may have been bought by the Government of the United States; it being however understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms or military articles as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in such purchase.

2. The movables, especially silver plate and pictures which may be found in the government buildings in the islands ceded and belonging to the Danish Government shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it.

3. The pecuniary claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands ceded are altogether extinguished in consequence of this cession and the United States assumes no responsibility whatsoever for or in connection with these claims. Excepted is however the amount due to the Danish Treasury in account current with the West Indian colonial treasuries pursuant to the making up of accounts in consequence of the cession of the islands; should on the other hand this final accounting show a balance in favour of the West Indian colonial treasuries, the Danish Treasury shall pay that amount to the colonial treasuries.

4. The United States will maintain the following grants, concessions and licenses, given by the Danish Government, in accordance with the terms on which they are given:

a. The concession granted to "Det vestindiske Kompagni" (the West-Indian Company), Ltd. by the communications from the Ministry of Finance of January 18, 1913 and of April 16, 1913 relative to a license to embank, drain, deepen and utilize certain areas in St. Thomas Harbor and preferential rights as to commercial, industrial or shipping establishments in the said harbor.

b. Agreement of August 10 and 14, 1914, between the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John and "Det vestindiske Kompagni" Ltd. relative to the supply of the city of Charlotte Amalie with electric lighting.

c. Concession of March 12, 1897 to "The Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas, Ltd.," subsequently transferred to "The St. Thomas Engineering and Coaling Company, Ltd." relative to a floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor, in which concession the maintenance, extension and alteration of the then existing repairing slip are reserved.

d. Royal Decree Nr. 79 of November 30, 1914 relative to the subsidies from the colonial treasuries of St. Thomas and Sainte Croix to "The West India and Panama Telegraph Company, Ltd."

e. Concession of November 3, 1906, to K. B. Hey to establish and operate a telephone system on St. Thomas Island, which concession has subsequently been transferred to the "St. Thomas Telefonselskab" Ltd.

f. Concession of February 28, 1913 to the municipality of Sainte Croix to establish and operate a telephone system in Sainte Croix.

g. Concession of July 16, 1915 to Ejnar Svendsen, an engineer, for the construction and operation of an electric light plant in the city of Christiansted, Sainte Croix.

h. Concession of June 20, 1904 for the establishment of a Danish West Indian Bank of Issue. This bank has for a period of 30 years acquired the monopoly to issue bank notes in the Danish West India Islands against the payment to the Danish Treasury of a tax amounting to ten per cent of its annual profits.

i. Guarantee according to the Danish supplementary budget law for the financial year 1908-1909. relative to the St. Thomas Harbor's four per cent loan of 1910.

5. Whatever sum shall be due to the Danish Treasury by private individuals on the date of the exchange of ratifications are reserved and do not pass by this cession; and where the Danish Government at that date holds property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by private individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention; the United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction, to the credit of the Danish Government, any portion of such property remaining unsold at the expiration of the said term of two years.

6. The colonial treasuries shall continue to pay the yearly allowances now given to heretofore retired functionaries appointed in the islands but holding no Royal commissions, unless such allowances may have until now been paid in Denmark.

ARTICLE IV

The Danish Government shall appoint with convenient despatch an agent or agents for the purpose of formally delivering to a similar agent or agents appointed on behalf of the United States, the territory, dominion, property, and appurtenances which are ceded hereby, and for doing any other act which may be necessary in regard thereto. Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in this convention; but the cession with the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of ratifications of this convention without such formal delivery. Any Danish military or naval forces which may be in the islands ceded shall be withdrawn as soon as may be practicable after the formal delivery, it being however understood that if the persons constituting these forces, after having terminated their Danish service, do not wish to leave the islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians.

ARTICLE V

In full consideration of the cession made by this convention, the United States agrees to pay, within ninety days from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, in the city of Washington to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of twenty-five million dollars in gold coin of the United States.

ARTICLE VI

Danish citizens residing in said islands may remain therein or may remove therefrom at will, retaining in either event all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or its proceeds; in case they remain in the islands, they shall continue until otherwise provided, to enjoy all the private, municipal and religious rights and liberties secured to them by the laws now in force. If the present laws are altered, the said inhabitants shall not thereby be placed in a less favorable position in respect to the above-mentioned rights and liberties than they now enjoy. Those, who remain in the islands may preserve their citizenship in Denmark by making before a court of record, within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a declaration of their decision to preserve such citizenship; in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it, and to have accepted citizenship in the United States; for children under eighteen years the said declaration may be made by their parents or guardians. Such election of Danish citizenship shall however not, after the lapse of the said term of one year, be a bar to their renunciation of their preserved Danish citizenship and their election of citizenship in the United States and admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, for other inhabitants of the islands.

The civil rights and the political status of the inhabitants of the islands shall be determined by the Congress, subject to the stipulations contained in the present convention.

Danish citizens not residing in the islands but owning property therein at the time of the cession, shall retain their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property, being placed in this regard on the same basis as the Danish citizens residing in the islands and remaining therein or removing therefrom, to whom the first paragraph of this article relates.

ARTICLE VII

Danish subjects residing in the islands shall be subject in matters civil as well as criminal to the jurisdiction of the courts of the islands, pursuant to the ordinary laws governing the same, and they shall have the right to appear before such courts, and to pursue the same course therein as citizens of the country to which the courts belong.

ARTICLE VIII

Judicial proceedings pending at the time of the formal delivery in the islands ceded shall be determined according to the following rules:

(1) Judgments rendered either in civil suits between private individuals, or in criminal matters, before the date mentioned, and with respect to which there is no recourse or right to review under Danish law, shall be deemed to be final, and shall be executed in due form and without any renewed trial whatsoever, by the competent authority in the territories within which such judgments are to be carried out.

If in a criminal case a mode of punishment has been applied which, according to new rules, is no longer applicable on the islands ceded after delivery, the nearest corresponding punishment in the new rules shall be applied.

(2) Civil suits or criminal actions pending before the first courts, in which the pleadings have not been closed at the same time, shall be confirmed before the tribunals established in the ceded islands after the delivery, in accordance with the law which shall thereafter be in force.

(3) Civil suits and criminal actions pending at the said time before the Superior Court or the Supreme Court in Denmark shall continue to be prosecuted before the Danish courts until final judgment according to the law hitherto in force. The judgment shall be executed in due form by the competent authority in the territories within which such judgment should be carried out.

ARTICLE IX

The rights of property secured by copyrights and patents acquired by Danish subjects in the islands ceded at the time of exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, shall continue to be respected.

[Inclosure 2—Memorandum]

The Danish Government have now drafted a new contre projet for a convention respecting the transfer of the Danish West Indian Islands, in which to the greatest possible extent regard has been taken to the original draft of the United States' Government in connection with the Danish proposals which have been accepted by the said Government.

The Danish Government waive the claim that the convention should be made dependent on the vote of the inhabitants on the Islands ceded, and they further waive their claim that by the Convention itself the inhabitants should immediately be guaranteed full American citizenship and exemption from custom duties in the commercial intercourse with the United States.

The Danish Government have noted with satisfaction the statement of the United States' Government that every facility for the rejuvenation of the commerce of the islands will be given to them, such as has been the case with the present insular possessions of the United States, and the Danish Government, therefore, take it for granted, that the inhabitants of the islands, in the intervening period, until the above-mentioned rights to their full extent can be granted to them, will at least obtain the same privileges in this respect as the inhabitants of other similar territories within the Union.

Finally the Danish Government expressly state that they have not given any other concessions, grants, etc., on the islands than those which have already been communicated to the United States' Government and they have in the new contre projet reinserted Article 2 of the original draft of the United States.

Respecting the different Articles in the new contre projet the following is remarked:

Art. 1=Art. 1 in the original draft of the United States.

Art. 2=Art. 2 in the United States' original draft, the 3d sentence having however been worded in the form accepted by the United States' Government.

Art. 3=Art. 2 in the first Danish contre projet to such extent as it has been accepted by the United States' Government.

The further particulars desired by the United States' Government respecting §4 are enclosed herewith:

- (1) the original concession of the 7' of July 1912 with the accompanying map;
- (2) Public Notice of 31' of January 1913 respecting the annulment of the original concession; and (3) Decree of the 1' of April 1913 exempting from custom duties and ship's dues materials imported for works in St. Thomas Harbour.

The stipulation contained in Art. 3, 4 of the United States' original draft has become superfluous by the enclosed Law No. 68 of the 24' of April 1903 respecting St. Croix Fallessukkerkogerier, which expressly states that at the fulfillment of the agreement mentioned in the law the shareholders in St. Croix Fallessukkerkogerier have been fully satisfied in respect of all claims, including all claims against the St. Thomas colonial treasury on account of the interest-guarantee incumbent on the said treasury in virtue of the Royal West-Indian Decree of the 16' of June 1876.

Respecting the bills of credit mentioned in section (h) in the Danish contre projet—part of which has now been left out—the following is remarked:

Formerly Danish West Indian bills of credit, issued by the Danish Treasury, which bore no interest, circulated in the Danish West Indian Islands.

These bills of credit were issued in virtue of a Royal Decree of the 4' of April 1849. They were only in the Danish West Indian colonies valid at their face value, so that they should be received in the paying offices in the Islands as ready money and payment. They were unredeemable, were not legal tender, but were received without the compulsion of the law between man and man.

When on the 20' of June 1904 the Minister of Finance in virtue of the Law of the 29th of March 1904 gave a concession for the establishment of a Danish West Indian Bank of Issue, which for a period of 30 years has the monopoly to issue in the islands notes, which are redeemable at bearer's request with gold coin and which in all public paying offices shall be accepted as legal tender, a promise was given to the Bank in virtue of Art. 6 in the said concession that the Danish West Indian bills of credit should be recalled with preclusive effect within a certain term not shorter than one year. This took place in this manner, that the term expired at the end of the month of April 1907, see Public Notice No. 6. of the 5' of March 1906. The Bank was bound to redeem the bills of credit with the Bank's own notes and was not allowed to put them in circulation again. On the other hand the Bank has a right to use the bills in payment of its yearly tax to the Danish Treasury. This tax will now in virtue of the convention pass to the United States, but the Danish Treasury will undertake to redeem the bills of credit redeemed by the Bank, and which, according to the Bank's monthly balance of the 31' of March 1916, amounts to 442,610 Fr.

In Art. 4 the sentence "but the cession, etc." to "formal delivery" has been reinserted. It is however, the desire of the Danish Government that a formal delivery shall take place but it may take place without delay in accordance with a telegraphical instruction to the Governor from the Danish Government.

Art. 5=Art. 5 in the United States' original draft with the alteration accepted by the United States.

Art. 6=Art. 5 in the first Danish contre projet with the exception of the last paragraph. This is the only point where the Danish Government have not seen their way to accept the proposals of the United States' Government. The Danish wording is in strict conformity with Art. 3 in the prior convention of the 24' of January 1902 with the exception that the period of option, in conformity with the proposal of the United States Government, has been shortened to one year, and that a stipulation has been added respecting the deposit of the declaration of option for children under 18 years.

During the negotiations which were conducted between the two Governments prior to the convention of the 24th of April 1902 the reasons, which made Art. 6 in the United States' draft unacceptable to the Danish Government were so fully stated that it would be unnecessary to repeat them here. These reasons being still valid, in view of the fact that American citizenship has not been guaranteed to the inhabitants of the islands through the convention, that the Danish Government are not in possession of the necessary material to form an accurate judgment of how the legal status of the inhabitants will be after the transfer, and that by Art. 6 the inhabitants are not even given as favorable a legal status as secured to them by Art. 2 in the Danish American Convention of Commerce of the 26th of April 1826, the Danish Government also now will appreciate the weight of these reasons and will accept a wording, which they have already accepted on the prior occasion.

Art. 7=Art. 7 in the United States' original draft.

Art. 8=Art. 8 in the United States' original draft with the modifications accepted by them in the first Danish contre projet's Art. 6.

Art. 9=Art. 9 in the United States' original draft.

Art. 10=Art. 7 in the first Danish contre projet accepted by the United States' Government.

Art. 11=Art. 8 in the first Danish contre projet accepted by the United States' Government.

Respecting Greenland the United States will at the date of the signature of the convention give a declaration in conformity with the draft previously submitted to the United States' Government by the Danish Government.

The Danish Government finally beg to recall to the memory of the United States' Government the promise given to the Danish Minister in Washington by the American Secretary of State to the effect that they would interest American capital in the islands to release private Danish monetary interests.

The Danish Government beg to call attention to the fact, that in their absolute opinion the secrecy respecting the whole of the matter upon which both sides have agreed should be strictly maintained until the case can be laid before respectively the Danish Rigsdag and the United States' Congress.

The new contre projet drafted in conformity with the above has been sent to the Danish Minister in Washington in the Danish and English languages. The Danish Government agree with the United States' Government that the present moment would be opportune for the conclusion of this convention, and should the United States' Government be able to accept the draft now submitted, it will be possible to give the Danish Minister in Washington telegraphical powers in the course of 8 days to sign the convention in the name of the Danish Government together with the American Plenipotentiary.

COPENHAGEN, the 28th of June 1916.

Declaration by the United States

Government dated June 28, 1916. In order to clear up the English translation, I have had to make two or three verbal changes which do not in any way affect the sense of the text. Please telegraph me what the words "capitals allotted to the churches" in Art. II mean. Do they mean investment made by the churches or moneys allotted to the churches out of the revenues of the islands?

Your telegram July 27th conveying official acceptance of text of treaty received yesterday evening. Replying your question would say that the words "capitals allotted to the churches" and the corresponding words in the Danish text of Article II do not mean investments made by the churches but sums of money set aside for the use and benefit of the churches. I would be much obliged if you would cause proofs of the final English and Danish texts to be sent to me as soon as possible and I am of course ready to come to Washington in this connection if desired.

BAR HARBOR, MAINE, July 29, 1916.

According to a cablegram received this morning, the Danish Government, before cabling me full powers to sign treaty, desires to receive an official statement from you to the effect that your acceptance of our proposition includes that the declaration regarding Greenland in the text agreed upon and sent you with my letter of July 18, will be given to me simultaneously with the signature of the treaty and they also desire that before signature an agreement should be reached regarding the time when the treaty should be submitted to the respective legislative bodies of the two countries. On this point I did already ask for your intention in my letter of July 18. These two points should already have been mentioned in my telegram to you of July 26 regarding four enclosures but the corresponding part of the cablegram received by me had disappeared in transmission of which I could not be aware until today when the cablegram was repeated to me. I may add that the Danish Parliament is at present in session but I do not know for how long.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 31, 1916.

Your telegrams July 28 and 29. My telegram July 27 intended to include assurance that declaration enclosed in your letter of July 18 will be given to you when treaty is signed. This will be done simultaneously with signature of treaty, it being understood that declaration stands or falls with treaty. Desire to submit treaty to Senate immediately after signature. Will consult you as to date if it is desired to submit it simultaneously to Senate and Danish Parliament.

The following are the only verbal changes made in your draft of treaty:

The word "claims" added at end of first sentence, Article III, Paragraph 3, and the corresponding Danish word, "pengekrav" added in Danish text.

"Colonial treasury" changed to "Colonial treasuries" in Article III, Paragraph 6, and Danish word "kolonialkassen" changed to "Kolonialkasserne".

The following changes were made in the English translation:

The word "held" inserted before "by" in first sentence Article II, so as to read "held by any Governments".

The word "funds" substituted for the word "capitals" in last sentence of Article II.

The words "which may be found" substituted for "to be found" in Article III, Paragraph 2.

The words "private individuals" substituted for the word "individuals" Article III, Paragraph 5.

The word "hereby" substituted for "herewith" in Article IV.

The words "are to be carried out" substituted for the words "should be carried out" in Article VIII, Paragraph 1.

As you will observe, these changes do not modify the sense of the text. If they are agreeable to you, I see no necessity of your coming to Washington prior to signature, but if you desire to do so, I shall be glad to go over the texts with you.

Most important that matter be expedited to greatest extent.

Vice Consul Zabriskie to the Director of the Consular Service

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
St. Thomas, July 31, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to quote below a cablegram regarding the sale question, which is dated from Washington, D. C., July 25, 1916, and published in the St. Thomas and St. Croix newspapers on the following day, as follows:

Official announcement was made at the White House today that negotiations between Denmark and the United State for the purchase of the Danish West India Islands have practically been completed for the sum of twenty-five million dollars.

Commenting on the foregoing, the Editor of the St. Thomas Tidende, of July 26, 1916, has the following to say:

The circulation of this important bit of news has, as may be expected, created quite some sensation. Coming after the persistent rumors of the renewed efforts to effect the transfer, and with what seems unusual definiteness, it is apparently regarded as settled. "Practically concluded" should be taken to mean that the high contracting parties—the Cabinets of both countries—have reached an agreement on all essential points. Ratification by the Rigsdag and Congress would be the next and final step, and that it will pass should not be doubted in view of the hairbreadth failure at the last attempt, and the alleged mutual readiness now of the one side to sell and the other to buy.

Though familiarity with this sale question has caused it to be treated with a certain flippancy and unconcern, it remains nevertheless a matter of moment. Sixty years ago the talk of Americans buying the islands was current, and pretty nearly came off. Fourteen years ago the sale failed through a single vote—that of an invalid member of the Landsting who was taken from his bed to help block its passage. Will it go through this time and be consummated? The Danish Parliament meets on October 1st so we shall not have a long wait to learn whether they will in reality come under the Stars and Stripes.

The editor of the (St. Croix) West End News goes much further in his remarks on the sale question, commenting as follows in the July 29th issue of his paper:

Since the cablegram announcing the negotiations between the United States and Denmark for the transfer of the islands was received here on Wednesday, nothing further has been received. We along with most people, are inclined to believe, for several reasons, which we do not here intend to explain just now, that the transfer is going to be materialized this time. But we would rather stand by and watch the development of affairs. And we will not begin to expose who are in favor of and who are against the transfer, for some have their national reasons and others their own personal reasons. Some jumped from joy when they heard of the news, and some cried of grief. We believe that the question of the transfer is at such a stadium that it would be impossible and imprudent if Denmark should again, for the third time, break off negotiations. She would then be jeered at by all the world. On the other hand we must say that the transfer now would be an admission of Denmark's inability to handle colonies and be declared elsewhere a "bankrupt," but as things are at present we would rather this radical change. It will be of absolutely no avail, we can assure the population, to arrange protest-meetings, addresses, and the like; it will be only wasting time and will not be of any use.

Minister for Foreign Affairs spoke for three-quarters of an hour explaining conditions of proposed sale. An official communication of this meeting appeared in the 9 o'clock edition of Berlingske Tidende last night. Other papers print communication this morning. Very conservative Berlingske Tidende protests against sale and delivery's taking place during the war. Moderate National Tidende and Independent Kjobenhaven express gratification Minister for Foreign Affairs for having denied that negotiations were going on. Social Demokraten unreservedly in favor of sale. From conversations with leading conservative party I gather that the main opposition will be made from that point of view. As far as I can see there will be little doubt that the treaty will be ratified by the Rigsdag.

142. Treaty ceding Danish West Indies to the United States was signed yesterday by Secretary Lansing and Minister Brun, in New York. Treaty will be immediately submitted to Senate here for its approval. It is understood treaty will be submitted to Danish Parliament as soon as text arrives by mail. Text is not to be made public until a date agreed upon by the two countries. Keep Department advised as to attitude of Danish Parliament regarding treaty.

The foregoing is for your information.

Documents contained in your mail despatch No. 937 of July 4th and No. 915 March 27th do not give sufficient information regarding concession to Danish West Indian Company for the improvement of St. Thomas Harbor. It is understood the concession of July 7, 1912, was completely annulled January 31, 1913. If this is so, concession must rest, so far as Department is advised, on letters of the Minister of Finance dated January 18, 1913, and April 16, 1913. These letters, however, do not give details of concession, such as period of concession, right of Government to buy back concession, etc. Moreover, these letters refer to other correspondence which Department has not received. Please obtain immediately from the Danish Government all details regarding this concession, and also the four letters referred to in the first paragraph of the letter of the Minister of Finance of January 18, 1913, and the four letters referred to in his letter of April 16, 1913. This information is desired officially and immediately for use in connection with treaty which is being sent to Senate. In a concession of this importance, there must be documents setting forth more definitely the relative rights of the company and the Danish Government.

Please telegraph summary of information obtained.

Facts of the case are these: Department was informed one month ago by two reputable papers that they had complete story, which they had secured from Denmark. At the personal request of the President, they agreed to, and did so withhold publication. Story was published in London on July 22 and it was stated it came from Copenhagen. Then the American papers published the story and the Philadelphia Ledger, one of the papers, which originally had the story from Copenhagen, published details it had obtained from these. This Government refused even after publication to discuss the matter or give any details of any kind. It is clear the responsibility for the premature publication was not on this Government.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE,
Copenhagen, October 2, 1912.

On the 1st instant the Consortium notified the Ministry of Finance to the effect that the subscription for stocks in the "Vestindiske Kompagni" had not reached the result that was conditional for the granting of the harbor-concession, and that under the circumstances the Consortium desires, without the concession, to proceed with the work.

In compliance herewith the Consortium has offered to undertake temporarily the erection of the first section of the harbor plant at Long Bay, provided that the right to dispose of any area and dock which it may construct be reserved to it.

In this connection you are informed that the Ministry of Finance agrees, also if the concession is dropped, to permit the Consortium to fill up and deepen the part of St. Thomas harbor, which on the map attached to the concession of July 7th, last, is marked with A., and which is situated directly in front of the area acquired by the Consortium. Permission is also granted to the Consortium to dispose freely of any area and dock which it may erect.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE,
Copenhagen, October 11, 1912.

In connection with the Ministry of Finance's letter of the 2nd instant, through which the Consortium was notified that the Ministry of Finance was willing, even if the concession granted to the Consortium on July 7, last, is dropped, to grant to the Consortium the permission to drain and deepen certain particularly specified areas within the harbor of St. Thomas, and to utilize the recovered areas and docks, the Consortium has through a communication of the 8th instant called attention to the fact that it is its intention, because the development makes it advisable, to accomplish the whole of the previously contemplated plant. In this connection the Consortium asks for particulars as to how it may secure a free disposition of the plants.

You are hereby informed that permission is granted to the Consortium to reclaim (inddæmme) those areas in the harbor of St. Thomas, which on the map, attached to the afore-mentioned concession, are marked in red color. When these areas have been recovered, they shall be considered the property of the Consortium, which may dispose freely and independently of them. However, should such a property in any way be involved in a conflict with the interests of a private individual, the question should be settled with the party concerned. The Consortium should further have the sole right to dispose of the docks, which it may have erected in accordance with the map. It is particularly pointed out that this permission reserves the Consortium the right to collect wharf dues, anchorage and other similar dues from such crafts as call at its docks or take advantage of the harbor facilities. The wharf dues are a fixed tax, and should be collected equally from all.

It is also stated that the Consortium is permitted to erect on its area, tanks for liquid fuel to serve as fuel for ships, subject, however, to such precautions as may be considered necessary by the local authorities.

Pilot and harbor dues (also ship's dues) shall be paid to the harbor's cashier by all ships which call at or take advantage of the facilities offered by the harbor, such as the use of piers, dock arrangements, etc., which the Consortium may have erected; conditions and rates to be the same at all times as those which are in effect in the remainder of the harbor.

The police inspection of the afore-mentioned water and land districts will be under the control of the harbor and local police authorities.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, August 10, 1916, noon.

293. Referring to the Legation's No. 291, August 8, 6 p. m., following is summary of letters mentioned therein. Letter of October 2, 1912 from Ministry of Finance to the "Company to utilize through draining and deepening an area in St. Thomas Harbor," stating that the Ministry had been informed by said company that the subscription for stocks in the Vestindiske Company having fallen short of the amount required for the granting of the concession, the company desires to proceed with the work without the concession. The company offers to undertake temporarily the erection of the first section of the harbor plant at Long Bay reserving the right to dispose of any area and dock so constructed. The Ministry hereby states that even if the concession is dropped it agrees to allow the company to drain and deepen the part of St. Thomas Harbor marked A on the map attached to concession of July 7 and which is outside of the area acquired by the company. Permission is also granted to the company to dispose freely of any area and dock it may erect.

Letter of October 11, 1912 from Ministry of Finance to the same company stating that in connection with their letter of October 2, 1912 they have been informed by the company in a letter of October 8, 1912 that it is the company's intention to complete the previously contemplated plant and that permission is granted to the company to drain "indaemme" those areas marked in red on the aforementioned concession map. These recovered areas shall be considered the property of the company which may dispose of them freely. Should such property be involved in a conflict with the interests of a private individual the question should be settled with party concerned. They can also dispose of docks erected as prescribed on map. The company can collect wharf dues which are fixed amounts. The company may erect tanks for liquid fuel subject to the requirements of the local authorities, pilot and harbor dues shall be paid to harbor's cashier.

Letter of October 14, 1912 from Ministry of Finance to the same company acknowledging receipt of latter's letter of October 12 and stating that Ministry is willing to transfer rights granted to the company through the Ministry's letters of October 2 and October 11 to a limited company with administration at Copenhagen. Board of administration should be formed so that the greater part of the members are Danish citizens.

Letter of January 6, 1913, from Vestindiske Company to the Ministry of Finance requesting that the rights accorded to the "company to utilize through draining and deepening an area within the harbor of St. Thomas" by the Ministry's letters of October 2 and October 11, 1912 be transferred to the stock company det Vestindiske Company resident at Copenhagen and the board of administration consisting entirely of Danish citizens. They request that all material imported for the work be exempt from duty. · EGAN

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 11, 1916, 4 p. m.

146. Your 291, August 8th, and 293, August 9th. Department does not understand your statement that letters cabled are of no value, as concession has been annulled. Please obtain an official statement from the Danish Government that the rights granted by the letters of the Ministry of Finance of October 2, 1912, and October 11, 1912 were annulled by decree of January 31, 1913. It is understood that you will obtain the information requested in Department's 142 officially and in writing from the Foreign Office. Endeavor to obtain an expression of the views of the Danish Government as to period for which the West India Company is entitled to hold its concession. Also ascertain officially whether any promise was given that no other companies would receive concessions for privileges in St. Thomas Harbor, as intimated in the last paragraph of letter of April 16, 1913.

Consul Payne to the Secretary of State

No. 325

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
St. Thomas, August 14, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to hereby confirm the Department's cable of the 5th instant to this Consulate reading as follows: [Printed ante.]

The cable reply from the St. Thomas Consulate, of today's date, reads as follows:

Referring Department's fifth, code messages disallowed. Report mailed today.

In connection with the above, I have to report that immediately upon the receipt of the Department's cabled instruction the Vice Consul had a lengthy conference with Government Secretary Baumann, with whom this office enjoys the friendliest relationship, who promised to render to the Consulate a full report on the subject, and to include copies of all of the agreements made by the local Colonial Government with any individual or concern here as a result of which any special privileges are enjoyed along the lines indicated in the Department's cable. Late in the afternoon, though, the Government Secretary telephoned to the Consulate to state that it would be impossible for him to redeem the pledge he had made in the morning.

On the following day, the Governor himself requested a conference with me, but upon my arrival at the Government Office, at the appointed hour, the Governor was absent. The Government Secretary, however, intimated to me that the Governor had objected to furnish the consulate with any such information as had been requested until he had received instructions from the Copenhagen Government as to the exact status of affairs respecting the probable sale of the Danish West Indies.

This office felt justified in the course it had pursued, inasmuch as practically all of the information requested was public property, and in many instances, at the time the various agreements were made, was published in the local newspapers. However, the action of the Governor in this instance is only in keeping with his attitude along these lines ever since the present sale question began to assume serious proportions. Taking but one example, when a request was made of him some time ago, through the American Consular Agent in Ste. Croix, for certain data regarding the 1916 sugar crop, he arbitrarily replied, according to the written statement of the Consular Agent, that he would not positively refuse his request but would prefer if he would withdraw it. The Governor has the reputation of being more or less anti-American, and has been strongly opposed to the sale of the islands, and these two conditions will probably explain the reason for his putting obstacles in the way of the Consulate in such a manner as he has done repeatedly, when the office was seeking some special information.

As a result, in order to obtain the information desired, it has become necessary for this office to interview the heads of the various local concerns that enjoy any sort of monopoly; but, owing to the inability of some of these, and the unwillingness of others, to provide full details on the subject, the results met with have not been as satisfactory as was hoped for.

It now appears, from a statement made by Captain H. P. Berg, manager of the West India Company, Limited, that his denials made on the occasion of several former interviews, concerning the existence of any sort of concession granted to the company he represents here, were absolutely false, and that they do enjoy special privileges that incline to give them a monopoly in their electricity, oil, water, and, possibly, their coal supply business.

According to Captain Berg's statement, the West India Company has the exclusive privilege for furnishing electricity and electric power to St. Thomas for a period of ten years dating from April, 1915, and with the option for an extension of same for another ten year period, unless the Government should decide to take over the plant in accordance with the terms of a contract which reserves this right. The prices for electricity were determined upon when the agreement was made, and are more or less fixed. No taxes at all are levied upon any department of this plant.

For supplying fuel oil to ships in the St. Thomas harbor, the manager of the West India Company asserts that they have the exclusive and unlimited privilege.

Respecting the future water supply for the town and for the harbor, Captain Berg admits that the Government has made some arrangement with the West India Company, but no details of this arrangement could be ascertained.

As for the harbor coal supply business, it is said that the West India Company possesses no governmental concessions that afford it any special advantage over their competitors, but, owing to the local conditions occasioned by the war, and because of a previous favorable arrangement for the transportation of their coal here, the company is enabled to undersell all others, and consequently, is at present enjoying an absolute monopoly in this business.

Captain Berg states that the West India Company has paid no taxes to the local Government since their establishment here.

As previously reported to the Department, Governor L. C. Helweg-Larsen is the chairman of the board of directors of the West India Company, and is also a large shareholder in this concern. In addition, according to the statements made by members of the local colonial council, the methods that he, as Governor, has employed for "railroading through" the council legislation favorable to the company he represents sound most reprehensible.

There is a prevailing opinion here that considerable German money has found its way into the new St. Thomas harbor improvements, although the Governor, the local manager, Captain H. P. Berg, and the German Consul stoutly declare to the contrary.

According to the statement of the German Consul, who is also the local representative of the Hamburg-America Line, the only real estate interests that the Hamburg-America Company has in St. Thomas are the following: The new office building, the superintendent's residence, the old office building, and the wharf.

An extension to their own wharf, of about equal size, is leased by the Hamburg-America Line from private parties, who own this tract of land on the slope of Orkanshullet Island.

For the purpose of giving the Department a better understanding concerning the ownership and control of lands about the harbor of St. Thomas, there is being transmitted, under separate cover, a map of the harbor, along with three small supplemental maps, where the several wharf holdings have been roughly indicated. This work was done for the consulate by the local Government surveyor, Mr. C. Philipsen, and is regarded as fairly correct, although Mr. Philipsen does not wish same to be considered as in any way an official ruling on the subject.

The lease on the lands rented by the St. Thomas Dock, Engineering and Coaling Company, as well as their exclusive right to operate a dry-dock in the harbor, expires, according to the statement of Captain C. B. Stewart, who is the local manager for the company, as well as the British Consul, in the year 1918.

A copy of the ordinance concerning subsidies from the colonial treasuries of St. Thomas and St. Croix the "West India and Panama Telegraph Company, Ltd." is enclosed herewith.

The local telephone company appears to have been established under the laws of Denmark, as a joint stock company, in the year 1906, with headquarters in St. Thomas. Governor Larsen and Postmaster Caistensen are the directors of the company, and these two men, with a Mr. Hey, a member of the Danish Landsting and the company's original promoter, and two others, make up the entire body of stockholders. The local colonial council, with the approval of the Home Government, has given this company the exclusive right to operate here, and they have to pay a local tax according to the size of their income, which is stated every half year. This tax amounted in 1915 to approximately $50.00. Every five years the Government has the right to regulate the telephone rates, and it also possesses the right, at any time, to take over the concern, by giving due notice and paying the actual cost of the plant.

The company has at present about 140 subscribers, and their rates are $2.50 per month for one telephone; but where a second telephone is installed in a man's residence, besides his place of business, only $2.00 is charged for the addition. The past year's running expenses amounted to approximately 9,000 francs ($1,737.00), out of which the directors and the employes received a gratification of 1,000 francs ($193.00). A 10% dividend, as a rule, is paid to the stockholders.

The drug stores, of which one is limited to St. Thomas, and one to each of the towns of Frederiksted and Christiansted in St. Croix, make up, so far as this office has been able to find out, the remainder of the local monopolies. The exclusive right for the operation of a drug store in each of the three named localities is given by the Government, and the resultant exorbitant prices and unsatisfactory service have created much dissatisfaction.

LARS CHRISTIAN HELWEG-LARSEN Governor of the Danish West India Islands, Knight of Dannebrog and Dannebrogsmænd

Maketh Known: On the most submissive representation of the Ministry of Finances His Majesty the King was most graciously pleased by resolution of 30th November, 1914, to sanction the following ordinance concerning subsidies from the colonial treasuries of St. Thomas and St. Croix to "The West India and Panama Telegraph Company, Ltd." as passed by the colonial council of St. Croix by 3rd discussion on 21st September, 1914, and by the colonial council of St. Thomas and St. Jan by 3rd discussion on 24th September, 1914:

1. The yearly subsidies of 15,000 Frs. from the colonial treasury of St. Thomas and 5,000 Frs. from the colonial treasury of St. Croix, hitherto granted "The West India & Panama Telegraph Company, Ltd." are guaranteed the said company for a period of 10 years, reckoned from 1st April, 1915, on the conditions laid down in ordinance of 2nd November 1885, provided however that the company binds itself to maintain during the whole of the above-mentioned period the following maximum rates for transmitting telegrams to and from the Danish West India Islands:

	Fr. per word
Between St. Thomas and Christiansted, St. Croix.....	0. 20

2. During the period of 10 years mentioned in the preceding paragraph and on the conditions stipulated in same, the company is guaranteed against competition in the Danish West India Islands from any other cable company, subject however to the condition that the cable connection which exists already in St. Thomas, belonging to another company, may be made use of, when the connections of "The West India & Panama Telegraph Company, Ltd." are interrupted or out of order.

3. The position which is guaranteed the company does not debar any other company from being granted both a concession and a monopoly for establishing wireless telegraphy for communicating with ships, as well as for communicating from land to land.

4. The company is subject to the regulations of the ordinance of 18th April 1910 concerning telegraphs in the Danish West India Islands (wireless and radio-telegraphs included).

306. Referring to the Legation's number 303. Minister of Finance officially gives the following answer in writing to my question whether the permissions mentioned in the communications from the Ministry of Finance of October 2 and October 11, 1912, have been canceled by the official order of January 31, 1913:

The implied promise contained in the communications of October 2 and October 11, 1912, from the Ministry of Finance to the company for the use of an area within St. Thomas harbor is not of individual selvstaending importance. The said implied promise is embodied in a communication in writing of January 18, 1913, to the West India Company of which communication a copy has been previously submitted.

We enclose a copy of the ordinance of April 1 mentioned in the communication, by which materials imported for the purpose of the improvements of St. Thomas harbor are exempted from duties and dues.

Aforementioned ordinance follows:

Amalienborg, April 1, 1913. We Christian the tenth by the Grace of God, King of Denmark, etc., hereby make known: the Colonial Council of St. Thomas and St. Jan have adopted and we have hereby given our consent to the following ordinance:

The Colonial Government is hereby authorized within a period of ten years reckoned from the first day of January 1913 to grant exemptions from duty on every kind of materials, inter alia working utensils and machines, which are imported to St. Thomas for use in the considerable improvements which it is intended to carry out there to supply and facilitate vessels touching at the said port, or otherwise to further the shipping trade of the said harbor.

The Ministry of Finance in answer to my further questions have written as follows:

The West India Company have by a communication in writing of January 18, 1913, been allowed to reclaim certain areas in St. Thomas harbor and to construct basins there in consequence of which—as also mentioned in the communication have been [apparent omission] unlimited possession of the said areas, no right of preemption being reserved to the Government.

In a communication of April 16, 1913, from the Ministry of Finance to the West India Company they state that "The Ministry shall be willing within a certain time, as to the duration of which the company is requested to propose a date, to promise to abstain from granting concessions to other companies to carry on commercial or industrial enterprises or to construct plants for shipping purposes in St. Thomas harbor, provided that the plants and facilities established by the company will be sufficient." The company have not since proposed any time within which no other concessions should be granted and consequently the Ministry has not had any occasion to fulfill the promise it was willing to give according to said communication.

150. Article 2 of the Danish Treaty provides:

Congregations belonging to the Danish National Church shall retain the undisturbed use of the churches which are now used by them, together with the parsonages appertaining thereunto and other appurtenances, including the funds allotted to the churches.

Senate Committee inquires, First, where the title to the church properties and parsonages reposes, whether in the Danish Government or some official thereof, in the Colonial Government or some official thereof, or in the Church as an ecclesiastical organization or corporation; Second, similarly, where the title to the funds mentioned reposes; Third, what is amount of funds, of what do they consist or in what invested and in whose control are they? Question involved is constitutional right of Congress to hold property of religious institutions.

Please obtain this information officially and telegraph it to me at the very earliest possible moment for the use of the Senate Committee. Before Monday noon if possible.

Papers in your mail despatch No. 915 March 27th do not give period for which concession to Ejnar Svendsen runs nor remaining specifications for the execution of the concession to be determined by the Government of the Danish West Indies. Please obtain this information officially in documentary form if possible, and cable report, but do not let this delay obtaining foregoing information for Senate Committee.

318. Your 150, August 18, 5 p. m. Have just received the following from Minister of Foreign Affairs:

The churches in the Danish West Indies which belong to the established church are owned by the Danish State and the expenses connected with their maintenance and repairs are granted in the annual budgets. The church on King's Hill however forms an exception: the said church was built by an association in this country, the West India Church Union "den Vestindiske Cosesag" which union still owns it and keeps it in repair but the State defrays the stipend to the clergymen appointees this church.

The endowments, if any, bestowed on the churches are not comprised in the annual estimate of income and expenditure of the state, in consequence of which no mention is made therein of their amounts. However they must be supposed to belong to the congregations of the churches concerned. These congregations through their vestries decide upon the application of these resources. The said resources are not considered to be very large.

The control of the aforesaid resources is exercised by the congregation concerned, each congregation deciding the manner in which the said control is to be exercised.

Minister of Foreign Affairs adds that efforts will be made to procure further particulars as soon as possible.

Please telegraph me at earliest moment meaning of "the government's own balance being 110,902.16 kronen." 153. Your 318, August 21st. Foreign Minister's reply does not cover all of the specific questions in my 150 of August 18th. If the clause in Article II regarding churches contemplates that this Government shall assist in the maintenance of the churches and church properties by appropriations for maintenance, repairs, and salaries of clergymen, it will be impossible to make the treaty effective, as such acts would be contrary to the Constitution of the United States. If the clause in question does not contemplate the foregoing, I believe it is important to exclude this interpretation by an exchange of notes. Please take this matter up with the Foreign Minister at the earliest moment, as it is of the utmost importance to the success of the treaty to have this point settled, so that no constitutional question will arise. The Government of the islands has always been designated by the foreign word the gouvernement. I believe this translation will make the meaning perfectly clear.

[Inclosure—Summary Memorandum]

Treaty ceding Danish West Indies to the United States

ARTICLE II. In regard to the last paragraph of this article, the American Minister in Copenhagen telegraphs the following note which he has received on this point from the Minister of Foreign Affairs: [Not printed. See telegram No. 318, August 21, 1916, from the American Minister.]

As Article II reserves to the congregations merely the use of the churches, parsonages, and funds, it seems clear that the United States Government is not obligated by this article to continue the appropriations which Denmark has heretofore made for the maintenance and repairs of the properties and the salaries of the clergymen, and that there would be no obligation upon the United States Government to appropriate additional sums toward the maintenance of the "funds", to take title to these funds, or to take part in their dispensation. Department is making efforts to procure further particulars in regard to these matters at the earliest moment.

It may be stated that in the negotiations for the treaty of 1902, the Danish Government appeared to regard such funds as not belonging to the Danish State and therefore not passing to the United States if inserted in that treaty. The church properties, however (three in number), of the Established Church being owned by the Danish State, will pass to the United States under the proposed treaty, but there appears to be nothing in the treaty to prevent the transfer of the churches and church properties to the congregations for their use.

ARTICLE III. (1) This provision is taken from Article II of the unratified Treaty of 1902, with which it is practically identical.

(2) This provision is new, and appears to be chiefly of sentimental significance.

(3) The exact amount of the pecuniary claims, if any, held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands, has not been calculated, but whatever they are, the United States assumes, with one exception, no responsibility in regard to them. A somewhat similar provision occurred in Article I of the Treaty of 1902, but without the exception mentioned in this article. Under this exception, whatever current amount may be found due the Danish Treasury in settlement of the accounts of the West Indies of the present year up to the date of the cession of the islands, is to be paid to the Danish Treasury. From the Government account of 1914-15, it appears, as the Danish Government states, that on March 31, 1915, it had to its credit in the West Indies treasuries the sum of 79,671.60 kroner, and a cash balance of 110,902.16 kroner. The article provides that if there is a balance in favor of the colonial treasuries, the Danish Treasury shall pay that amount to the colonial treasuries.

ARTICLE III. (4) The following grants, concessions, etc. are the only ones in regard to which the United States assumes the obligations of the Danish Government. In the same way the 1902 Treaty assumed the obligations of the Danish Government in respect to the floating dock concession and the West India and Panama Telegraph concession, but excepted the Sugar Boileries concession. So far as we know, there were no other concessions then in existence. The Sugar Boileries concession has been closed up, as the Danish Government states, by the Law of April 24, 1903, providing a means of settlement satisfactory to the shareholders, and the St. Thomas colonial treasuries. The assumption of the obligations in connection with the following concessions is regarded by Denmark as an essential part of the consideration for the cession, and as justly due to the business interests of the islands, which are naturally apprehensive as to the consequences attendant upon a transfer of sovereignty to the United States. A brief summary of the Sugar Boileries concession and its settlement is given at the end of the following concessions.

ARTICLE III. (4a) St. Thomas Harbor Improvement.

On July 7, 1912, by royal decree under the law of May 25, 1912, the right was granted to a consortium for 99 years to dam in the areas in St. Thomas Harbor marked in red on a plan annexed to the concession; to reclaim these areas, and to own exclusively the areas reclaimed, except for conflicting private rights which might be expropriated; and to have the exclusive right to utilize the basins constructed (dredged) marked in blue on the same plan; to charge wharfage, warehousing, and stake dues alike on all vessels which use these facilities; to construct a mole to St. Ruppert's Rocks to be utilized in the same way; to construct and operate one or more floating docks, than which no permit for the operation of another floating dock will be granted. The foregoing grants were to be free from competition save for existing grants, and rights needing no concession for their exercise. Concessionaire has right to erect tanks for liquid fuel for ships on these areas, right to give pilot service for the harbor, erect light-houses, free importation of his building materials, etc. The usual pilot and harbor dues, however, shall be paid into the harbor treasury according to the prevailing rates. Government had right to buy up concession at end of 60, 70, 80, and 90 years from date of completion of certain works, and also at expiration of concession at appraised value. Company had the preferential right to establish electric light and power plant, refrigerating plant, water-works, street-car power house, wireless stations, etc. on St. Thomas; and various other rights. This concession was totally annulled January 31, 1913.

After it became known that it would be unable to carry out the terms of the concession of July 7th, the West India Company, on January 6, 1913, requested the transfer to it of the more limited privileges granted to the consortium for the drainage and deepening of an area within St. Thomas Harbor mentioned in letters of the Minister of Finance dated October 2, 11, and 14,¹⁶ 1912, to the consortium. In reply, January 18, 1913,¹⁷ the Minister of Finance granted to a new company with a domicile in Copenhagen and the majority of the board of directors Danish subjects, permission "to embank the areas in St. Thomas Harbor which are marked in red on the plan which accompanied the concession of July 7th of last year * * * so that when these land areas are reclaimed, the company shall have free and unrestricted ownership thereof," subject to private rights, and granted "the exclusive right to utilize the basins dredged according to the aforementioned plan," and authorized company "to charge wharfage, stake dues, and other similar dues from vessels which come up to the wharves or otherwise utilize the basins * * * according to previously fixed rates which must be uniform to all," and gave permission "to erect tanks for liquid fuel for ships on the area belonging to it" subject to certain safety restrictions. Pilotage and harbor dues, however, are to be paid into the harbor treasury by ships coming into the harbor and using the facilities constructed by the company. The Minister referred to the law of January 1, 1913, giving the Government the right by decree to exempt from customs duties and harbor dues for ten years from January 1, 1913, all materials imported into St. Thomas for the installation there of considered plants intended to supply or serve ships entering the harbor, or which are otherwise calculated to further navigation in the harbor. On April 1, 1913, a decree was issued putting this law into effect. By letter of April 16, 1913,¹⁸ the Minister of Finance informed the company that the plans for the extension of the present area of St. Thomas Harbor by making Gregorie and the two Gregorie canals part of the harbor, would not be carried out, because the company regarded them as threatening to its purposes and future. The Minister of Finance expressed himself as "ready to give his permission that, with a certain period (regarding which we would ask the company for a suggestion) and provided that the company's establishment proves adequate to attend to the expected increased traffic, we will not give any other companies any concessions for commercial, industrial, or navigational establishments in St. Thomas Harbor." The Department is informed that this concession is without monopoly or promise of monopoly. The Danish Government states that period within which other companies should not be granted concessions in St. Thomas Harbor was never agreed upon, and that the letters of January 18, 1913, and April 16, 1913, mentioned above, set forth all of the rights of the West India Company.

ARTICLE III. (4b) Agreement between Communes of St. Thomas and St. Jan and the West Indies Company to furnish the City of Charlotte Amalie with electric light.

On August 10 and 14, 1914, the Minister of Finance of Denmark, apparently in behalf of the communes of St. Thomas and St. Jan, entered into an agreement with the West Indies Company, whereby the latter undertook from April 1, 1915, under certain conditions, to light the streets of Charlotte Amalie with electric lights and to furnish other current to private persons and the public. After ten years, if the commune desires to take over the lighting system or if the company desires to become free from its obligation, the commune may then take over the system upon a payment of a sum equal to the capital invested less a deduction of 5% at the end of each calendar year. The Company agrees to comply at all times with the laws and regulations in force in regard to establishments of this kind. (Contract of August 10 and 14, 1915.)

ARTICLE III. (4c) Floating Dock in St. Thomas Harbor.

Royal Decree of February 2, 1897, authorized the Government of the West Indian Islands to grant a concession for the exploitation of an iron floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor for 21 years to the "Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas, Ltd." On March 12, 1897, the West Indian Government granted the concession for a period of 21 years from March 12, 1897, to "Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas, Ltd." Later it was transferred to the St. Thomas Dock, Engineering and Coaling Company, Ltd. The proposed dock was to be 250 x 70 feet, with a capacity of 3,000 English tons. Company is to fix its own rules and fees for use of dock so long as they do not interfere with order and security in the harbor, and apply to vessels of all nations alike. Danish warships and mail ships of all nations have preferential right to use the dock. If there is no neglect in keeping the dock in a usable condition, the Danish Government will not permit any other floating dock in the St. Thomas Harbor for vessels over 200 tons, but the concession does not affect the floating dock already existing, or its improvement. If defects hindering the use of the dock are not remedied within a period to be set by referees, unless there is no negligence, the concession may be forfeited. The company may not move its dock away from the island unless it has failed to yield any profit for three consecutive years. Interpretation of concession rests with the Government. (Ministry of Finance, February 19, 1901; Original concession papers.)¹⁸

ARTICLE III. (4d) West India and Panama Telegraph Company, Ltd.

By Royal decree of November 30, 1914, the yearly subsidy hitherto granted to the Company, amounting to 15,000 francs, from the St. Thomas colonial treasury, and 5,000 francs from the St. Croix colonial treasury, was insured to the company for a period of 10 years from April 1, 1915, on conditions mentioned in the decree of November 2, 1885, provided the company maintains throughout said period the maximum prices for the transmission of telegrams stated in the decree. The decree also insured the company against competition from any other cable company for the same period of ten years (but the existing line on St. Thomas belonging to another company may be used whenever the connections of the West India and Panama Company are interrupted or deranged). The decree reserved to the Government the privilege to grant concession for wireless telegraphy. The company is subject to the decree of April 18, 1910, regarding telegraphs in the Danish West India Islands.

ARTICLE III. (4e) Concession to K. B. Hey for telephone system on St. Thomas Island. By Royal decree of September 18, 1906, and grant thereunder of the Governor of the Danish West Indies of November 3, 1906, K. B. Hey was given the exclusive privilege to establish and operate telephones on St. Thomas Island for a period of twenty years from November 3, 1906, subject to the right of the commune to take over the plant and concession upon the payment of indemnity. The concession was later transferred to "St. Thomas Telephone Company". This concession excepts telephone systems exclusively used by the commune or communal institutions, and under certain conditions private individual systems. The concessionaire is not obliged "to pay anything to the commune except such indemnities as may be due the commune" for damages, etc. There are restrictions regarding access to private property.

The Government reserved the following rights:

- To fix the maximum rates;
- To require extensions and improvements;
- To prescribe with respect to the operation of the plant;
- To require explanations about the plant and to have access thereto;
- To prescribe rules and conditions for connecting with telegraph companies;
- To approve in certain cases resort to proceedings to install on private property and to determine compensation therefor;
- To prescribe conditions for the acceptance of subscribers, if circumstances warrant;
- To determine disputes with other electric lines (telegraph, lighting, etc.) as to right of way, etc.
- To consent to complaints of violations of the provisions of the concession, punishable by fine;
- To supervise the installations and their operations;
- To decide upon complaints by the public regarding the attitude of the concessionaire or his employees;
- To determine further rules for supervision over the concessionaire;
- To approve bonds given by employees, not to divulge information, etc.;
- To demand the discharge of employees who have committed such acts which are described;
- To declare the concession forfeited if the concessionaire fails to comply with instructions lawfully given by the Government, or if he fails without necessity to operate the system; in either case the Government may operate the system;
- To impose a fine not over 500 francs upon the concessionaire for violations of the concession, and
- To construe the meaning of the concession.

The concession provides that the grant shall not be transferred or leased to any other party without consent of the "Government for the Danish West Indies." (Governor's grant of November 3, 1906.)

ARTICLE III. (4f) Grant to the St. Croix Commune to establish and operate telephones on St. Croix Island.

¹⁸ Idem.

In pursuance of authority in Ordinance No. 30 of August 21, 1908, the Governor of the Danish West Indies granted on February 28, 1913, to the municipality of St. Croix, an exclusive concession to establish and operate telephones in St. Croix Island for twenty years from February 28, 1913, upon certain conditions, and subject to the laws and regulations relative to telephones. Government-owned and certain private telephones are excepted, but otherwise any telephone lines erected may be confiscated, and owners fined, but complaint can only be entered at the request of the Government. Passage over or under private property is regulated, provision is made for indemnifying damages. A bond is required of employees not to divulge information from the telephones. Employees divulging such information are subject to fine and dismissal. There is a provision for the concessionaire to take over the telegraph systems of St. Croix. The concession shall not be transferred or leased without the consent of the Government of the Danish West Indian Islands. There is a provision that the concession can be declared forfeited by the Government if the concessionaire does not within the time allotted by the Government comply with its lawful orders. The concession is to be interpreted by the Government. (Governor's decree February 28 A1B)

ARTICLE III. (4g) Concession to Ejnar Svendsen for electric plant in Christianssted, St. Croix.

On July 16, 1915, the Minister of Finance granted to Ejnar Svendsen a non-exclusive concession for the establishment and operation of an electric plant for the supply of electric light to Christianssted, St. Croix. The remaining specifications for the execution of the concession are to be determined by the Government of the Danish West Indies. (Concession and letter of Minister of Finance, July 16, 1915.)¹⁹

ARTICLE III. (4h) Concession for the establishment of the Danish West Indian Bank of Issue. Acting under the Danish Law of March 29, 1904, the Minister of Finance on June 20, 1904, granted a concession for a period of thirty years to a group of banks consisting of the National Bank of Copenhagen, the Private Bank of Copenhagen, the Danish Farmers Bank, the Mortgage and Exchange Bank, and the Copenhagen Commercial Bank, for the establishment in the Danish West Indies of a joint-stock bank under the name of the Danish West Indian Bank of Issue, which will have for its object the promotion of the economic development of the islands, and which shall have the sole right for thirty years, upon showing specified specie reserve and realizable assets, to issue notes which shall be legal tender and exchangeable by the holder upon demand for gold coin. If the bank becomes unable to fulfill its obligations, the concession shall be forfeited.

The capital stock was 5,000,000 francs, at least one-quarter to be paid in cash, the remainder to be covered by certificates of guarantee of the four banks composing the group, which are to be deposited with the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, when he deems it necessary to fulfill the obligations of the bank, may require further cash payments on the capital stock, in which case the certificates of guarantee shall be credited with the corresponding amount. The Danish Government or the Minister of Finance reserve the right to consent to an increase of the capital stock, to call in the old Danish West India bills of credit of 1849 within a certain period (April 30, 1907), to prescribe rules for loan business, to choose two of the seven members of the bank council and one substitute member, to set aside resolutions of the council contrary to the by-laws, to appoint one of the two auditors of the bank, to prescribe rules to govern the auditors' supervision of the bank, to determine the by-laws of the bank, to withdraw or restrict the right to issue notes, in which case the bank is entitled to demand that the Government take over the bank, the assets and liabilities of the bank, redeem the capital stock at par plus the amount of profits received by stockholder over 4% per annum, but in no case over 125%—to construe the meaning of the concession.

The by-laws further reserve to the Minister of Finance or the Government the right to approve the form and denomination of the notes, to demand proof that the bank is observing the rules, by-laws, etc., to approve amendments to the by-laws, to annul resolution contrary to the by-laws, to decide questions arising out of the preparation of annual account of the bank, and to proceed against the bank for failure to live up to its obligations under the law of March 29, 1904, and the by-laws. The by-laws further provide that in case one-third of the capital stock is lost, the bank may relinquish the right to issue notes upon two years' notice to the Minister of Finance, and thereafter to pass a resolution for dissolution. The by-laws contain numerous other details.

The specie reserve shall consist of legal-tender coin of the islands, gold in bars, and foreign gold coin and bills payable on demand at the National Bank of Copenhagen. Other assets or securities may be pawn certificates, bills of exchange, debts in foreign banks, public interest-bearing paper, Danish West Indies Bill of Credit, and Bank's own mortgage bond.

The bank shall pay an annual tax to the Danish Government of 10% of the annual surplus of the bank, for which payment bank may use the old Danish West India notes of 1849 which it has redeemed. As long as the tax is paid in bills of credit, the bank may deduct from the tax a sum equal to the interest at 4% on three-eighths of the bills of credit held in the bank from the date of redemption to date of paying this tax. Denmark agrees, in a communication of July 18, 1916, to redeem the bills of credit redeemed by the bank, and amounting on March 31, 1916, to 442,610 francs. The bank shall be obliged to receive free of charge all revenues of the islands and make all expenditures in the islands on account of the Danish Treasury or the colonial treasury, under rules to be adopted by the Minister of Finance; shall not issue notes in excess of 10,000,000 francs under certain condition; shall keep a specie reserve amounting to 30% of the notes in circulation in the bank's main office, and the remainder in the National Bank at Copenhagen. (Concessions and by-laws of Bank; Danish note of July 18, 1916.)⁷

ARTICLE III. (4i) St. Thomas Harbor Loan, 1910.

Under authority of the law of April 30, 1909, No. 87, the Danish Government guaranteed the payment of the interest and redemption of a loan originally amounting to 500,000 fr. (the remainder on March 31, 1914, being 453,000 fr.) known as the St. Thomas Harbor 4% Loan of 1910, and made by the harbor council for the purpose of deepening the harbor of St. Thomas. The harbor council authorized the Ministry of Finance to conclude the loan agreement, which it did. The Danish West India Bank agreed to furnish the loan at 98% to be represented by 500 bonds of 1,000 fr. each, marked with the government guarantee and signed by the harbor council as debtor, and exempt from stamp tax. The loan runs 21½ years from December 11, 1910, and bears 7% interest and redemption per annum, of which 4% shall be interest and the remainder redemption. (Letters between Council of Danish West Indian National Bank and Ministry of Finance, February 3, August 6, August 13, 1910; copy of a bond.)²⁰

St. Croix Joint Sugar Boileries:

Under the law of February 25, 1876, the Danish Government granted a loan to the St. Croix Joint Sugar Boileries Corporation, which in the Government account for 1899-1900 amounted to 1,414,784.57 Kr., secured by first mortgage on all the property of the company in the West Indies, including operating equipment and inventory. The company was to make a yearly payment on the loan, of which 5% per year of the amount due was to be interest and the remainder sinking fund. The interest in arrears on March 31, 1900, was 878,436.67 Kr. One of the conditions of the Danish Government granting the loan was that the St. Croix Colonial Treasury should guarantee the fulfillment of the obligations of the company arising from the loan, and this was done by St. Croix Order No. 24 of June 16, 1876, "but it never became effective." (Ministry of Finance, February 19, 1901.)

The St. Croix Colonial Treasury also guaranteed to the stockholders of the company 5% per annum interest on their stock. The stockholders, however, have never received any interest or profit from the company, and the guarantee has never been made effective, as the colonial treasury was not able to satisfy it. It is suggested that this guarantee may be assumed by the Danish Government in case of a cession of the islands. The amount of interest due under this guarantee was 45,275.98 dollars in the 1899-1900 budget. But this figure in the budget is explained as including both the guarantee of St. Croix to the Danish Government and to the stockholders, this amount appearing in the budgets unchanged since 1884-5, but never being paid. (Minister of Finance, February 19, 1901.)

The Department is assured by the Danish Government that this matter is closed by the law of April 24, 1903, providing for a means of settlement whereby the shareholders have been fully satisfied in respect to all claims, including all claims against the St. Thomas Colonial Treasury on account of the interest guarantee under the decree of 1876. (Danish memorandum of June 28, 1916.)

²⁰Inclusures to despatch No. 915 March 27, 1916.

ARTICLE III. (5) This provision is practically the same as that in Article II of the unratified Treaty of 1902. Its object is to save to Denmark the private debts due her by individuals at the date of cession. In order to prevent future holdings of Danish property taken over for debts of private persons, a provision is added that any such property shall be sold within two years and the proceeds removed from the islands, or otherwise the United States will sell such properties on behalf of the Danish Government.

ARTICLE III. (6) This provision is almost exactly the same as that in Article IV of the unratified Treaty of 1902. The last budget, for March 31, 1916, provided for about 30,000 francs for such pensions.

ARTICLE VI. This article is taken almost bodily from Article III of the unratified Treaty of 1902—the only important differences being the provision that parents or guardians of children under eighteen years of age may make their declarations of allegiance, and the change of two years to one year within which the election of allegiance must be made.

The provision in the second sentence is the result of a compromise. The Danish Government objected to its subjects—the native inhabitants of the islands—being placed on a par with other aliens. The United States Government could not guarantee them the same rights which American citizens have in advance of the citizenship being conferred upon the inhabitants of the islands who transfer their allegiance to the United States. Consequently a middle ground was sought, by which aliens of Danish nationality in the islands will at least enjoy no fewer rights and privileges than at the present time. It seems that an effort was made to attain a similar object in the Treaty of 1803 ceding Louisiana to the United States. In this connection, it should be borne in mind that the Danish subjects in the islands have had no voice in the proposed transfer of the sovereignty of the islands to the United States, and that many inconveniences must necessarily result to them if they retain Danish allegiance after the transfer.

The second paragraph of this article is the usual one in cessions of territory to the United States. It is exactly the same as the corresponding provision in the unratified Treaty of 1902, and similar to that in the Treaty with Spain of 1898.

ARTICLE VIII. This article provides for the execution of judgments already rendered in both civil and criminal cases, and the continuance of civil and criminal suits still pending at the date of cession before the courts in the islands or before the superior courts in Denmark. These provisions are substantially the same as those of Article XII of the Treaty with Spain of 1898, except the second paragraph of Section I, which seems to be a reasonable addition.

ARTICLE X. The treaties extended by this article to the Danish West Indies as a part of American territory are:

Convention of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation of 1826;

Consular Convention of 1861; (Under the Seaman's Act this Government has given notice to Denmark that the articles of this treaty in conflict with that act will be abrogated. Denmark has accepted this condition of affairs).

Naturalization Convention of 1872;

Trade Marks Convention of 1892;

Extradition Treaties of 1902 and 1905;

Peace Treaty of 1914.

ARTICLE IX. This is the usual provision for securing the rights of copyright and patent upon change of sovereignty. It occurs in almost exactly this same language in Article XIII of the Treaty with Spain of 1898. Without such a provision, Danish subjects in the islands might be held to have lost whatever rights they now hold in patents and copyrights under Danish laws.

At this moment of difficulty when all our best interest points to the ratification of the treaty here such a communication does great harm and the impression that the treaty may not be ratified during the present session is rather embarrassing. The amount doubtless seems large but every diplomatist here admits the islands will be eventually absolutely necessary to us.

326. Your 153, August 22, 5 p. m. Foreign Minister informs me in writing.

The congregation of Christiansted represented by attendance board for the church society is the owner of a home for old people. Purchase money plus expenses for repairs amounts to twenty thousand francs. The fund for the relief of the poor owns a little more than half of the amount, the residue may be obtained fass from an irredeemable loan of public money amounting to nine thousand francs on which annual interest will be paid. The accounts of the fund for the relief of the poor are audited by the Ministry of Finance.

The congregation of Fredericksted owns a mission house valued at ten thousand francs which amount as far as I know has been paid. In addition hereto congregation owns a small home for old people, purchase money of which has been partly paid out of the fund for the relief of the poor. I am unable to state the amount—it may be estimated at about ten thousand Kroner.

The interest accruing from the aforesaid fund for the relief of the poor was formerly divided into small monthly payment, but of late years it has been thought a better plan to invest the money in buildings, thus procuring good and cheap or free habitations for old people.

The congregation of Saint Thomas represented by a board elected by the confirmed members of the congregation owns a mission house valued at twenty-two thousand francs which I suppose has been fully paid now. The house contains good premises in which large meetings may be held in addition to some small flats for old people.

The congregation of Saint Jan has a small mission house worth about three thousand two hundred and fifty francs which has been obtained out of public funds. This amount is being redeemed with three hundred Kroner annually in which is included interest, the building has been conveyed to the Lutheran Sunday School at Saint Jan.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Copenhagen, August 25, 1916, midnight.

329. Your 150, August 18, 5 p. m. Following is résumé of four letters referred to in the letter of the Ministry of Finance of April 16, 1913. Letter one:

Letter from the Government of Danish West Indies, Saint Thomas, February 12th, 1913, to Ministry of Finance submitting application dated 5th instant from the West India Oil Company of New York for permission to establish a station for liquid fuel at Saint Thomas and for this purpose to lay down the necessary conduct pipes from the shore to deep water and to build the requisite quays and docks with appliances, inter alia oil tanks. The said company is apparently almost identical with the Standard Oil Company, their representative, H. A. Lockhart, being the most important merchant of Saint Thomas. Government requests authorization to grant permission applied for, on conditions nearly identical with those on which Anglo-Mexican Oil Company—under which name Mexican Eagle Oil Company now appears—will be allowed if it desires to carry on business here in pursuance of permission contained in Ministry's cable of November 28th last.

Government is fully aware that the present arrangement whereby vessels must seek anchorage outside the area of the harbor and the roads only in case of distress, see Section 2 of regulations of March 5, 1908, for Saint Thomas Harbor, is narrowing the limits of the harbor, if the traffic should be increased to the degree expected. As may be remembered the western part of the hurricane hole in East Gregori Channel and the western part of Little Krum Bay in West Gregori Channel were mentioned by the Anglo-Mexican Oil Company as one of the places where it might desire to establish its plants; both these places are outside of harbor area.

By letter No. 254 of November 30th last you were informed that the permission granted had been drafted in such a manner that it only concerned the construction in Long Bay while at the same time the company's representative had been informed that if satisfactory settlement with the owners of the coast along Long Bay should prove impossible we would be inclined to try to settle the matter in some other way. When on January 10th last we received an inquiry from the company as to whether the permission was to be understood in the manner that they were not allowed to use Little Krum Bay which they would prefer, we replied that the permission could not be regarded as being strictly confined to Long Bay but that the Governor would prefer to see the company established there, it being the only tract along the harbor abutting on the coast which might be obtained for purposes of the nature contemplated and that large constructions far from the harbor would entail heavy expense in the shape of police and custom supervision for which the West India Company would probably be responsible.

If the Ministry should authorize the Government to grant the West India Company the permission applied for, such permission would be given on the condition that the place where the company would establish their plants should be previously sanctioned by us and if the company should adopt a place outside the area of the harbor we would furthermore reserve to ourselves the right of charging the company with the expenses to which the State or municipality might be put in consequence thereof.

As to how the constructions thus made outside the harbor are to be finally arranged is a question to which the Government's attention is already directed but about which no mention will be made until the question is brought into the foreground. At present we only beg to state that we would consider it the best solution that the Gregori and the two Gregori Channels be incorporated in the harbor under the control of the harbor authorities and that future harbor enlargements as far as practicable be constructed within the harbor area thus enlarged. We think it will be necessary to deepen the haulover, i. e., the channel between the harbor and the Gregori to such an extent that steam launches and lighters passing through this channel would be enabled to proceed from one part of the harbor to the other. We suppose that the expenses connected therewith may be defrayed out of the harbor fund. Finally we request the Ministry to state whether permission like the one formerly desired by the Anglo-Mexican Oil Company and now desired by the West India Oil Company may be granted by the local authorities—the Government or the harbor committee or both jointly—or whether the Ministry itself wants to decide upon this kind of application.

We beg to add that it is a matter of course that the Government is willing to support the West India Company in every way possible in so far as such support is compatible with the interests of the town and the harbor but it has often been very difficult because we are so rarely acquainted with the company's plans. Up to the present time we have only received a scheme for contemplated improvements of Long Bay—enclosed in communication number 483 from the Ministry dated December 5th last—but we know nothing about the other improvements comprised in the abandoned concession which the company intend to carry through now. We take it for granted, however, that the company will deal in liquid fuel but it is not known to what extent. Nor do the Government know whether the company is still desirous of establishing and carrying on a wireless telegraph station. This fact has had the unfortunate consequence that we, on receiving from other quarters a provisional application for the establishment and carrying on of such station, have been unable to take further steps in this matter of such vital importance to the island nor have we been able to give the applicant an encouraging reply. Also some days ago we received an application from E. Svendsen to establish and carry on an electric plant and to supply the town with electric light. Applicant stated that he had spoken to the directors of the aforementioned company on the subject and that they had informed him that they did not intend to supply the town with electric light but beyond this information we do not know anything about the company's attitude.

We are thus placed in a difficult position; we must either suffer applicant to wait for a reply during the time we apply to the company for information as to its future plans in the applicant's line, which is somewhat difficult for us to do, if we believe that applicant concerned seems capable of carrying through his proposed plans, and if the said plans seem beneficial to the islands, or, if we grant applicant permission applied for, we may foil the company's plan, inasmuch as a permission to execute some work is very likely in practice to have the effect of a monopoly although it has never been the intention to create any such monopoly.

Letter No. 2 in substance:

Letters of March 19th, 1913, from Ministry of Finance to the West India Company. Ministry of Finance states that an application from the West India Oil Company of New York has been made to construct a station for liquid fuel in Saint Thomas. It says that Government of Danish West Indies would assist Danish West India Company in every way possible if this Government were sufficiently informed as to the future plans and prospects of the Danish company. Therefore the Ministry of Finance asks the Danish company whether it has any objection to make against the permission being granted to the West India Oil Company of New York.

Letter No. 3 in substance:

Letter from the Government of Danish West Indies, Saint [omission] March 22nd, 1913, to Ministry of Finance stating that it, on application from Ejnar Svendsen, civil engineer of Roskilde, Denmark, for permission to establish and carry on an electric plant to supply the town with electric lights, has granted him said permission, the Committee for Buildings and Streets having previously sanctioned his application.

Letter No. 4 in substance:

Letter from Ministry of Finance, Copenhagen, April 10, 1913, to the West India Company, Limited. Referring to communications in writing of 26th and 28th ultimo dealing with plans referred to in communication of February 12, 1913, which plans you regard as dangerous to the future prospects and objects of the company, we beg to state as follows: If you wish that the West India Oil Company of New York should not be granted permission applied for to establish oil tanks, we are willing for the present to meet such wish on your part but in that case we must request you to state by whom and in what manner it is thought desirable to establish the oil tanks. Also please inform us of your plans if any to establish wireless telegraphy in Saint Thomas.

Concerning the establishment of electric plant, we do not at present intend to grant such permission except to you—a single person including a joint stock company may be allowed to procure their own supply—and upon the whole no permission will be given for the establishment of works of this kind without consulting you. Furthermore it will be out of the question under the present circumstances to undertake enlargement of Saint Thomas Harbor or its district.

In the opinion of the Government a postponement of the question until after the war would be in contravention of the conditions connected with the conclusion of the treaty. We will insist on a new election. After the election the treaty will again be placed before the Rigsdag. In view of the fact that the treaty was passed by the Folkething with the amendment of a referendum and that the Landsting feel that to postpone their decision until after the war or to have it reconsidered after a new election and further that three parties are in favor of the sale—Radicals, Socialists and the Left—it is believed that a new Rigsdag will ratify the treaty irrespective of the results of the election.

Election for members to the Folkething can only take place in October and for the Landsting in November.

Owing to the widely current rumor here that the United States is putting undue pressure on Denmark for the cession within a time limit of the islands, I have been obliged to say authoritatively that there is no such pressure. I referred to the words of the published treaty and said that the only pressure was the expressed wish that the matter might be expedited as soon as possible. [Inclosure 1—Translation]

The Government for the Danish West Indian Islands

ST. THOMAS, February 12, 1913.

The Government begs to submit application dated 5th inst. from the West India Oil Company of New York for permission to establish a station for liquid fuel at St. Thomas, and, for this purpose, to lay down the necessary conduct pipes from the shore to deep water and to build the requisite quays and docks with appliances, inter alia, oil tanks.

The Government begs to state that the said company, as far as we know, is almost identical with the Standard Oil Company, and that their representative, Mr. H. A. Lockhart, is the most important merchant of this town.

The company, being known as a large and influential concern, it may be taken for granted that, if it should make our city its place of residence, it will draw much shipping trade to this town, in consequence of which we beg to request that we should be authorized to give the permission applied for, on conditions nearly identical with those on which the Anglo-Mexican Oil Company, under which name the Mexican Eagle Oil Company now appears, will be allowed, if it desires, to carry on business here in pursuance of permission contained in the Ministry's cable of November 28 last.

If the Ministry of Finance might wish to comply with the said company's request, viz.: to be informed by wire of the permission, if such will be given, we beg to add that a cable containing the word "Grant" will be understood in the manner that we (the Government) have been invested with authority in this respect.

The Government is fully aware that the present arrangement whereby vessels must seek anchorage outside the area of the harbor and the roads only in case of distress, see Sec. 2 of regulations of March 5th 1908 for St. Thomas' harbor, is narrowing the limits of the harbor, if the traffic should be increased to the degree expected. As may be remembered, the western part of the "hurricane hole" in "East Gregori Channel", and the western part of "Little Krum Bay" in "West Gregori Channel" were mentioned by the Anglo Mexican Oil Co. as places where it might desire to establish its plants; both these places are outside the harbor area.

By letter No. 254 of November 30th last you were informed that the permission given had been drafted in such a manner that it only concerned the construction in "Long Bay," while, at the same time, the company's representative had been informed, that if a satisfactory settlement with the owners of the coast along "Long Bay" should prove impossible, we would be inclined to try to settle in some other way. When on January 10th last we received an inquiry from the company as to whether the permission was to be understood in the manner that they were not allowed to use "Little Krum Bay," which they would prefer, we replied that the permission could not be regarded as being strictly confined to "Long Bay," but that the Government would prefer to see the company established there, it being the only tract along the harbor abutting on the coast, which might be obtained for purposes of the nature contemplated, and that large constructions far away from the harbor would entail heavy expenses in the shape of police and custom supervision for which the West India Co. would probably be responsible.

If the Ministry should authorize the Government to grant the West India Oil Company the permission applied for, such permission would be given on the condition that the place where the company would establish their plants should be previously sanctioned by us, and if the company should adopt a place outside the area of the harbor, we should furthermore reserve to ourselves the right of charging the company with the expenses to which the State or municipality might be put in consequence thereof.

As to how the constructions thus made outside the harbor are to be finally arranged is a question to which the Government's attention is already directed, but about which no mention will be made until the question is brought to the fore. At the present we only beg to state that we would consider it the best solution that the "Gregori" and the two Gregori Channels be incorporated in the harbor under the control of the harbor authorities, and that future harbor enlargements, as far as practicable, be constructed within the harbor area thus enlarged. We think it will be necessary to deepen the "haulover," i. e. the channel between the harbor and the Gregori to such an extent that steam launches and lighters passing through this channel would be enabled to proceed from one part of the harbor to the other. We suppose that the expenses connected therewith may be defrayed out of the harbor fund.

Finally we beg to request the Ministry to state whether a permission like the one formerly desired by the Anglo-Mexican Oil Company and now desired by the West India Oil Company may be granted by the local authorities (the Government, or the harbor committee, or both jointly), or whether the Ministry itself wants to decide upon this kind of applications.

In this connection, we beg to add that it is a matter of course that the Government is willing to support the West India Company in every way possible, in so far as such support is compatible with the interests of the town and the harbor, but it has often been very difficult because we are so rarely acquainted with the company's plans. Up to now we have only received a scheme for the contemplated improvements of Long Bay—inclosed in communication No. 483 from the Ministry dated December 5th last—but we know nothing about the other improvements comprised in the abandoned concession which the company intend to carry through now. We take for granted, however, that the company will deal in liquid fuel, but it is not known to what extent. Nor does the Government know whether the company is still desirous of establishing and carrying on a wireless telegraph station. This fact has had the unfortunate consequence that we, on receiving from other quarters a provisional application for the establishment and carrying on of such station have been unable to take further steps in this matter of such vital importance to the island, nor have we been able to give the applicant an encouraging reply. We have also on another point been placed in a very difficult position on account of our lack of knowledge of the future plans of the company. Some days ago we received an application from a certain E. Svendsen, civil engineer, for permission to establish and carry on an electric plant, and to supply the town with electric light. Mr. Svendsen stated that he had spoken to the directors of the above-mentioned company about the matter, and that they had informed him that they did not intend to supply the town with electric light, but beyond this information we do not know anything about the company's attitude.

We are thus placed in a difficult situation; we must either suffer the applicant to wait for a reply during the time we apply to the company for information as to its future plans in the applicant's line, which it is somewhat difficult for us to do, if we believe that the applicant concerned seems capable of carrying through his proposed plans, and if the said plans seem beneficial for the islands, or, if we grant the applicant concerned the permission applied for, we may foil the company's plan, inasmuch as a permission to execute some work is very likely in practise to have the effect of a monopoly, although it has never been the intention to create any such monopoly.

MINISTRY OF FINANCE,
Copenhagen, March 19, 1913.

As will appear from the communication in writing of 12th inst. with various enclosures from the Government for the Danish West Indian Islands (No. 43a) an application from "West India Oil Company of New York" for permission to construct a station for liquid fuel etc. in St. Thomas has been lodged with the said Government.

The said Government has, on account of the above-mentioned application, found it opportune to express its willingness and its desire to support the West Indian Company in every way, provided it be compatible with the interests of the port and the town, in which connection the Government has stated that it is very insufficiently informed as to the future plans and prospects of your company. For the purpose of the above it has been thought desirable to place you in a position to set forth such plans as the aforesaid might give rise to.

You are requested to return the enclosures with your reply.

With reference to communications in writing of the 26th and 28th ult. from you in which various plans dealt with in a communication of February 12th from the Government of the Danish West Indian Islands regarding St. Thomas harbor, are treated more fully, which plans you regard as dangerous for the future prospects and objects of the company, we beg to state as follows:

If you wish that the company mentioned in the Government's aforesaid letter, viz.: the West Indian Oil Company of New York, should not be granted the permission desired, viz.: to establish oil tanks, we are willing, for the present, to meet such wish on your part, but in that case we must request you to state by whom and in what manner it is thought desirable to establish the oil tanks.

164. Department's September 8. Though the text of the treaty has not been modified by the Senate its resolution of ratification provided that the provisions of the convention relating to funds and property of the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indian Islands be interpreted by an exchange of notes between the High Contracting Parties so as to make it plain that the convention is clearly within the constitutional powers of the United States with respect to church establishment and freedom of religion.

In view of this and as I understand from your No. 323 of August 24, that the Foreign Minister is willing to enter into an exchange of notes of this sort, I propose that I write a formal note to the Danish Minister here in the following form.

I have the honor to inform you that the Senate of the United States by its resolution of ratification has advised and consented to the ratification of the convention between the United States and Denmark, ceding to the United States the Danish West Indian Islands, with the following provisos: "Provided, however, that it is declared by the Senate that in advising and consenting to the ratification of the said convention, such advice and consent are given with the understanding, to be expressed as a part of the instrument of ratification, that such convention shall not be taken and construed by the High Contracting Parties as imposing any trust upon the United States with respect to any funds belonging to the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indian Islands, or in which the said Church may have an interest, nor as imposing upon the United States any duty or responsibility with respect to the management of any property belonging to said Church, beyond protecting said Church in the possession and use of Church property as stated in said convention, in the same manner and to the same extent only as other churches shall be protected in the possession and use of their several properties. And provided further, that the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of said convention on condition that the attitude of the United States in this particular, as set forth in the above proviso, be made the subject of an exchange of notes between the Governments of the two High Contracting Parties, so as to make it plain that this condition is understood and accepted by the two Governments, the purpose hereof being to bring the said convention clearly within the constitutional powers of the United States with respect to church establishment and freedom of religion."

In view of this resolution of the Senate I have the honor to state that it is understood and accepted by the Government of the United States and the Government of Denmark that the provisions of this Convention referring to the property and funds belonging to the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indian Islands shall not be taken and construed by the High Contracting Parties as imposing any trust upon the United States with respect to any funds belonging to the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indian Islands, or in which the said Church may have an interest nor as imposing upon the United States any duty or responsibility with respect to the management of any property belonging to said Church, beyond protecting said Church, in the possession and use of Church property as stated in said convention, in the same manner and to the same extent only as other churches shall be protected in the possession and the use of their several properties.

I trust that your Government will in a formal reply to this communication accept this understanding as to the meaning and construction of the provisions of said convention in accordance with the foregoing resolution of the Senate.

Please bring foregoing to the attention of the Foreign Minister and use your best endeavors to obtain his agreement to an exchange of notes in this form between the Danish Minister here and myself.

The sole and exclusive privilege of supplying ships in St. Thomas harbor with liquid fuel has never been conferred on the West India Company.

In a written communication of April 16, 1913, from the Minister of Finance to the West India Company, of which communication a copy has been submitted to the Government of the United States by the Foreign Office, the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated "that the Ministry—within a period as to the extent of which the company is requested to submit a proposal, and provided that the company's plant proves sufficient to accommodate the expected traffic—will be willing to promise not to grant concession to other companies to carry on commercial or industrial enterprises or shipping trade in St. Thomas Harbor." The Ministry has not been called upon to give such promise, nor has it given any, and even if given it would not, according to the terms cited above, confer any privilege for the sale of liquid fuel but would only be a privilege to establish plants in St. Thomas Harbor of the kinds mentioned above.

No agreement has been made with the West India Company regarding the future water supply of Charlotte Amalie and St. Thomas Harbor.

The West India Company has not been especially exempted from paying dues but has, like other concerns, been granted opportunities for the payment of harbor dues in accordance with Section 30, Subsection 2, of Ordinance Number 24 of August 6, 1914, regarding payment of duty and harbor dues in St. Thomas and St. Jan and supplement of February 25, 1916, to the same ordinance; in addition thereto the Colonial Government has granted the company exemption from payment of duties and conceded to it the right to store goods in warehouses without payment of any dues on certain conditions, in pursuance of Section 7, Subsections 3 and 7 of Act Number 64 of April 1, 1914, regarding exemption from the payment of customs duty and harbor dues in St. Thomas and St. Jan. Finally attention is called to Ordinance Number 16 of April 1, 1913, regarding exemption from payment of duty and harbor dues for materials imported for the establishment plants in and near St. Thomas harbor. As stated before the West India Company has never been granted other concessions than such as might have been granted and actually have been granted to others.

Documents referred to are being sent by mail.

[Inclosure 1—Memorandum—Translation]

In a note of August 25th last the American Minister here stated that the American Consul in St. Thomas had reported:

(1) That the West India Company, according to a declaration from Captain Berg, maintains that the sole and exclusive privilege of supplying ships in St. Thomas' harbor with liquid fuel is vested in the said company,

(2) That the company has an agreement with the Government regarding the future water supply of the town and St. Thomas harbor and,

(3) That it is not subjected to taxation by the colonial Government. In pursuance of the aforesaid the Legation has requested the Danish Government to state whether it considers the said privileges as incorporated in the company's concession.

After having been in telegraphic communication with the Government of the Danish West India Islands in so far as question (2) and (3) are concerned, we beg to furnish the following information:

(1) The sole and exclusive privilege of supplying ships in St. Thomas harbor with liquid fuel has never been conferred on the West India Company.

In a communication in writing of April 16th 1913 from the Minister of Finance to the West India Company of which communication a copy has been submitted to the Government of the United States by the Foreign Office the Ministry has stated: "that the Ministry—within a period as to the extent of which the company is requested to submit a proposal, and provided that the company's plant proves sufficient to accommodate the expected traffic—will be willing to promise not to grant concession to other companies to carry on commercial or industrial enterprises or shipping trade in St. Thomas harbor." The Ministry has not been called upon to give such promise, nor has it given any, and even if given, it would not, according to the terms cited above, confer any privilege for the sale of liquid fuel, but would only be a privilege to establish plants in St. Thomas harbor of the kinds mentioned above.

(2) No agreement has been made with the West India Company regarding the future water supply of Charlotte Amalie and St. Thomas harbor.

(3) The West India Company has not been specially exempted from paying dues, but has like other concerns been granted reductions in the payment of harbor dues in accordance with Sec. 30, Subsection 2 of Ordinance No. 24 of August 6, 1914, regarding payment of duty and harbor dues in St. Thomas and St. Jan, and Supplement of February 25, 1916, to the said Ordinance; in addition thereto the Colonial Government has granted the company exemption from payment of duties and conceded to it the right to store goods in warehouses without payment of any dues on certain conditions (in pursuance of Sec. 7, Subsect. 3 and 7 of Act No. 64 of April 1st, 1914 regarding exemption from the payment of customs duty and harbor dues in St. Thomas and St. Jan); finally attention is called to Ordinance No. 16 of April 1st 1913 regarding exemption from payment of duty and of harbor dues for materials imported for the establishment of plants in and near St. Thomas harbor. Copies of the aforesaid ordinance are enclosed. As stated before, the West India Company has never been granted other concessions than such as might have been and actually have been granted to others.

[Inclosure 2—Translation]

1. * * *

2. To grant a reduction in harbor dues on goods transferred directly from ship to ship, made applicable also to goods such as those mentioned in S. 2, No. 4, of Law No. 64 of April 1, 1914, on customs duties and harbor dues in St. Thomas and St. Jan, even if they are not transferred directly from ship to ship, but are deposited meantime in a warehouse of a steamship company or wharf owner, provided the storage takes place under conditions guaranteeing against abuse.

The Government is authorized:

2. * * *

3. To grant exemption from customs duty on goods transferred directly from ship to ship and on goods such as those mentioned in S. 2, No. 4, even if they are not transferred directly from ship to ship, but are meanwhile deposited in a warehouse of a steamship company or wharf owner, provided the storage takes place under conditions guaranteeing against abuse.

4-6. * * *

7. To grant storage in bond (duty free storage under customs supervision) in private warehouses, of such goods as are imported for temporary storage and are intended for reexportation.

As security for the import duty to be paid on the stored goods if not reexported, the customs treasury shall have a first mortgage lien on the stored goods and a right of preference, for payment, over all other property, goods, and effects of the receiver of the goods. The Government may stipulate that further security shall also be furnished.

If the goods are not reexported within 2 years after importation, the import duty must be paid immediately; however, upon a request being presented in due time, the Government may grant an extension of duty free storage not to exceed one year at a time.

The receiver of the goods (consignee) must submit to such supervision over the stored goods and their importation and exportation as the customs authorities may deem necessary, and bear all expenses connected therewith. However, the Government may grant relaxations in this supervision, taking into consideration the rules of a like character prevailing in the surrounding harbors.

The consignee shall be responsible for any irregularities connected with the storage of the goods, in accordance with the provisions contained in laws or regulations.

No. 4 reads: 4. To grant duty-free importation of postal parcels sent to war-ships in sealed mail bags according to the Universal Postal Convention.

Ordinance No. 16 of 1913, on the exemption from customs duties and harbor dues of materials imported for the establishment of plants in and near St. Thomas harbor.

APRIL 1, 1913.

We, Christian Tenth, etc.

The Government is authorized, for a period of 10 years, beginning Jan. 1, 1913, to grant exemption from customs duties and harbor dues on all materials, including working tools and machinery, imported into St. Thomas for the establishment there of considerable plants which are designed for the purpose of supplying or serving ships entering the harbor, or which are otherwise adapted to promote navigation in the harbor, etc.

The crisis has now been solved through an understanding among the three political parties that one representative of each of the three parties be included in the Cabinet as Ministers without portfolios and further that the proposal of the Government as to the proceedings of the Committee in the West Indian question with a referendum to follow has been accepted. The time limit set for the work of the possible committee is six weeks and the referendum shall take place within fourteen days after the committee has submitted its resolution. However in the present circumstances I do not consider it out of the question that the time limit for the work of the committee be shortened.

The object of reaching an early understanding in the sale of the West Indian Islands is not only a question of great financial importance, but what is more important the bringing about of better conditions on the islands; most of all our obligation to a great Power like the United States which has ratified the treaty and which should not be kept waiting longer for an answer from a small State.

Neergaard, President of the Parliamentary Committee to examine the question of the sale of the islands, addressed the members as follows:

It is strongly desired that the findings of the committee be submitted as early as possible. The time limit of six weeks is the maximum time but there is every reason to believe that we can complete the examination at an earlier date.

The new Ministers appointed without portfolios are J. C. Christensen, Left, who is now for the sale; Rottboll, Conservative, who I am informed, will likewise approve the sale, and Stauning, Socialist. The Socialists have hitherto declined to take the responsibility of the Cabinet representation.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Since my letter to you of August 26th regarding the various steps taken by the Danish Government in order to obtain in due form the necessary legislative consent to the cession of the Danish West Indian Islands to the United States, the political crisis caused in Denmark by our Convention of August 4th, 1916 has further developed, and you have no doubt been kept fully informed by Mr. Egan of all the phases and provisional results of this crises.

By a cablegram received here on September 29th the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs has informed me that the crisis has now been solved by an agreement between the different political parties according to which a representative of each of the three political parties not now represented in the Government will be added to the Cabinet as Minister without portfolio, and the question of the cession of the islands will be submitted to a special commission and thereupon to a plebiscite, in accordance with the proposition of the present Danish Government.

The time limit within which the commission is to finish its work has been fixed at six weeks, and the plebiscite is to take place 14 days after the completion of the report of the commission, but the Minister of Foreign Affairs considers it quite possible that the commission will be able to finish its work within a shorter time than six weeks.

I thought that this information would be of interest to you, if only as a confirmation of your own reports from Copenhagen, and so am sending it to you, although without any special instruction to this effect.

It insists that the whole of the diplomatic correspondence pertaining to the sale be submitted to it. When the material has been considered by the committee the latter will decide upon what persons shall be called upon to furnish information. At the meeting yesterday telegrams were despatched to the West Indian colonial boards to the effect that the committee was desirous of conferring with members of the boards. They must be selected in such a manner that the prevailing views are represented. They are to arrive in Copenhagen within the time limit set for the work of the committee. Governor Helweg Larsen who has resigned is now in New York City. He is due here October 26th, also he will be requested to furnish information. This procedure does away with the demand of Socialist party for a referendum in the islands.

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, October 6, 1916.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Since writing you on October 2nd I have received by mail from the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs the text of the note from Mr. Egan to the Minister, dated September 11th, and of the reply of the Minister to Mr. Egan, dated September 13th, both relating to the property of the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indies.

I beg to enclose herewith copies of the two notes.

It appears from this that the reply of the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs was also in the English language, and I beg to propose that this English text should be used in the exchange of notes between us to which you refer in your letter to me of October 5th just received.

The reason for this request is, that the Danish text which I sent you on October 2nd is somewhat uncertain owing to errors of transmission in the corresponding cablegram. I note for instance, that when the Danish text in the last phrase but one says: forsaavidt angaaer dens Ejendoms—og Beskyttelsesret over den Kirkelige Ejendom, it should have been Benyttelsesret or Brugsret, in order to correspond to the now received English text.

I understand from your letter of yesterday that the note which you propose to hand to me will be identical with the note of Mr. Egan of September 11th, and as soon as you shall advise me of the exact terms of the text, I will obtain renewed authority from the Danish Government to proceed to the exchange.

DANISH LEGATION,
Washington, October 19, 1916.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By a letter of October 2nd I advised you of the proceedings in Denmark by which the Royal Government expects to obtain the necessary legislative consent to our treaty of August 4th, 1916 regarding the cession of the Danish West Indian Islands to the United States.

I mentioned the Special Commission of the Danish Parliament to which the question of the cession would be submitted, and that 6 weeks had been agreed upon as the time limit within which this Commission should complete its work.

I have yesterday received a cablegram from the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs in which he says that it has now been found necessary to extend the said time limit until the 25th of next month, and that the intended plebiscite can thereupon be held December 13th and 14th, so that the whole question can be settled before Christmas.

The reason for this extension of time is, so the Minister states, that the Commission desires to hear the Delegates from the islands, of whose mission I informed you by my letter of October 8th, and that these Delegates could not arrive in Copenhagen within the time at first fixed.

I may add that, as far as I have learned, these Delegates who were to sail from St. Thomas on October 10th, were delayed by the destructive hurricane which, as you know, struck the islands with disastrous results on October 9th.

I have learned from our Consul at St. Thomas of the proposed departure of the delegates from the islands for the purpose of presenting to the Special Commission the sentiment of the inhabitants of the islands in regard to the sale. Judging from the Consul's report, I conclude the sentiment in the islands is strongly in favor of the treaty of cession.

Resolution by the West Indian Committee (adopted by 22 members of the committee):

During the last thirty years conditions in the West Indian Islands have steadily grown worse. The decrease in the number of inhabitants furnishes sufficient evidence of this fact. Various theories may be advanced to account for this regrettable state of affairs. One of the main reasons, however, would seem to be the rapid development of the sugar beet industry in other parts of the world, which has caused a drop in the price of cane sugar. The changed shipping and trading conditions in the West Indies, during this period, have also had a disastrous effect on the islands.

We have arrived at the conclusion that the islands have not been administered in the proper manner. Many things have been omitted and neglected, and in cases where improvements have been begun, they generally have stranded on account of lack of experience. The fact is that Denmark has never possessed the means of supplying a staff, which could properly undertake to carry on an administration among the colored population.

We desire to state that, even if plans for the bringing under artificial cultivation of certain areas on St. Croix are carried out, and if other contemplated arrangements are completed, we do not believe the inhabitants would experience any improvement in economic conditions in the future. The idea seems to prevail in the islands that the only thing which might improve economic conditions on St. Croix would be accessibility to the American market, and exemption from duty. From the hearing, the Committee has come to the conclusion, that in the case the islands are sold, every facility will be granted for the carrying out of the above-mentioned plans.

The fact that the large majority of the population do not in any way feel bound to Denmark, but through their language and interests have always been drawn towards the United States, has played an important part in connection with the sentiment which now prevails in favor of the sale.

Under the circumstances it seems to us that the Danish Rigsdag and the population of Denmark ought to give their consent to the ratification of the treaty. To reject the treaty now, in spite of the firm desire evidenced by practically the whole West Indian population, would no doubt create difficulties for Denmark in the future; not only in the islands proper, but internationally. The fact that the West Indian population is so much in favor of the sale has been the main reason for our conclusion.

Resolution by the minority (adopted by 7 members of the committee):

The treaty should be rejected for the following reasons: We refuse to believe that the possession of the West Indian Islands will constitute an international danger for Denmark in the future.

It will be possible for Denmark, without any excessive expenditures, to establish prosperous industrial conditions in the islands. The opening of the Panama Canal will be of great assistance in this connection. The possession of these islands will be of considerable value to Danish shipping and trade in these remote parts of the world. It seems to us that it is necessary for Denmark to possess these islands, if the increasing population is not to be compelled to lower its standard of living.

The fact that the islands are situated on what will be one of the international highways of the future seems to us to be sufficient to substantiate our assertion that the islands will play a most important part in time to come and will also make it possible for Denmark to render what is necessary in order to enable the islands to take care of themselves.

If, on the contrary, the sale takes place it will be an indication of Denmark's desire to escape the inconveniences and expenditures connected with the problem. Such a step would not only give rise to thoughts of weakness in the Danish nation, but would at the same time encourage other parts of the kingdom, which differ from Denmark in race and speech, in their desire to separate from the mother country.

One member of the Conservative Party offered a resolution in which he reluctantly stated that the present state of affairs convinced him of the necessity of selling the islands.

411. I am requested to send the essential part of an interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs today. In Article 4, of the Convention of August 4th, 1916, respecting the cession of the Danish West Indies Islands, the Government of the United States has reserved to itself the right of immediate possession after the exchange ratification. The Danish Government is desirous that the matter should be settled as quickly as circumstances will permit. This wish on the part of the Danish Government is especially prompted by their desire to recall the cruiser Valkyrien from the islands.

If the formal delivery of the islands could thus be accelerated, it would present the advantage that the captain of the cruiser in his capacity of acting governor could perform the official act of delivery.

Further the Minister for Foreign Affairs requested me to say that King Christain X, moved by a petition from the people of the Danish West Indies asking him to use his good offices to prevent the islands being placed under Government of Porto Rico, has expressed the hope that the wishes of the inhabitants might be considered if such procedure be in accordance with the policy of the United States.

Say to the Foreign Minister that this Government will make every effort to expedite the formal delivery of the islands, but that he will realize the injurious effect that the premature delivery of the islands might have upon Congress, as it might regard such an act as an unwarranted and officious effort to bind it to an immediate appropriation of twenty-five million dollars. As soon as the ratifications of the treaty have been exchanged, it will be transmitted to Congress with a request for an immediate appropriation in conformity with the provisions of the treaty; and I have no reason to believe that the appropriation will not be made during the present session, which ends March 4th.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: Confirming what I had the pleasure to tell you verbally yesterday, I beg to say that I have yesterday received from the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs the Danish instrument of ratification relative to the treaty of August 4, 1916, for the cession of the Danish West Indian Islands to the United States, together with a Royal Full Power to proceed to the exchange of the ratifications as soon as possible.

You will remember that by Article 4 of the treaty it has been stipulated "that the cession with the right of immediate possession is to be deemed complete on the exchange of ratifications."

With regard to this point the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs in his dispatch to me adds that, in case the desire of the Government of the United States to hasten the actual taking possession of the islands should not now be present in the same degree as at the time, when the treaty was drafted, the Danish Government would nevertheless greatly appreciate if the remaining acts of the cession could be completed as soon as circumstances will permit. An important reason for this desire is, that the Danish Government would wish very much to recall, as soon as possible, the Danish Cruiser Valkyrien, at present at St. Thomas, but greatly needed in home waters and whose commander Captain Konow, acting Governor of the islands, could be authorized to formally deliver the islands to the United States, in accordance with Article 4 of the treaty, if you could see your way to make this formal delivery of the islands to the United States possible within a short time.

I am also authorized to add that, according to a recent report to me from the acting Governor of the islands, the uncertainty which now necessarily weighs on all conditions in the islands, until the time when the United States shall definitely have taken possession of them, has created a certain agitation and fermentation in the population, which it is difficult for him to cope with and desirable to put an end to as soon as possible.

Trusting that you may be able on the strength of these considerations to obtain the completion of the yet remaining acts of the cession at the earliest possible moment,

I am [etc.]

The Secretary of State to the Danish Minister

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 17, 1917.

DEAR MR. MINISTER: I have received this morning your note of January 16th quoting a telegram from the Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs regarding full powers to Governor Konow to make formal delivery of the islands and full powers to you to receive the sum stipulated in the West Indian Convention and in regard to leaving a special commissioner on the islands after the delivery in order to arrange details connected with the cession.

In reply I beg to say that, so far as I can foresee, the circumstances surrounding the delivery of the islands, I perceive no objection to the manner of proceeding proposed by the Danish Foreign Minister.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT LANSING

File No. 711.5914/190a

The Secretary of State to the President

THE PRESIDENT: The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the English text of a convention between the United States and Denmark, signed at the City of New York, August 4, 1916, together with copies of the notes exchanged between the High Contracting Parties in pursuance of the Senate Resolution of September 9, 1916, giving the advice and consent of that body to the ratification of the Convention. The exchange of the ratifications of the Convention took place on January 17, 1917, and the Convention is, therefore, now in force as a mutually binding obligation between the two countries concerned. By Article 1 of this Convention, Denmark cedes to the United States, in return for a money payment, all territory, dominion, and sovereignty of Denmark in the West Indies, including the islands of St. Thomas, St. John, and St. Croix, together with the adjacent islands and rocks. The succeeding articles specify in detail certain terms and conditions regarding the cession. By Article 5 the United States, in full consideration of the cession, agrees to pay within ninety days from the date of exchange of the ratifications, in the City of Washington, to the diplomatic representative or other agent of Denmark duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of twenty-five million dollars in gold coin of the United States. This amount is therefore due from the United States to Denmark within the period ending April 17th next.

This convention is responsive to the conviction of both governments, as well as of the people of the islands, that the Danish West Indies should belong to the United States. This conviction, as is well known, has been manifested in earlier treaties for the transfer of these islands to the United States. Without entering upon any extended historical review of the negotiations of these earlier treaties, it may be pointed out that the first negotiations for the purchase of the islands were initiated by Secretary Seward during the administration of President Lincoln, and before the close of the Civil War, culminating in the convention signed at Copenhagen, October 24, 1867, during the administration of President Johnson, for the cession of the Islands of St. Thomas, and St. John. It is the opinion of students of the subject that this convention was brought about through the conviction of the United States gained by its naval operations during the Civil War, of the need of a naval coaling, supply, and repair station in the Caribbean Sea, in order that the United States might be placed on a footing with other great powers owning islands in those waters. This conviction, no doubt, was strengthened by the fact that the United States emerged from that war as a maritime power, to whom a good harbor and depot in the West Indies had become a matter of so great importance, if not of necessity, that the United States could not wish to see the Danish West Indies fall into the hands of another power.

Although the plebiscite in St. Thomas and St. John, held under the Treaty of 1867, was overwhelmingly in favor of the cession, and the treaty was promptly approved by the Danish Rigsdag, and ratified and signed by the King, and although the period for ratification was extended from time to time to April 14, 1870, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations took no action until March 24, 1870, when Senator Sumner reported it adversely, and the Senate acquiesced in that opinion.

Prior to the Spanish War, overtures were again made for the cession of the islands—this time initiated by the Danish Government. During the Spanish War the question of the purchase of the islands was further agitated. Concurrently with the discussion of the Isthmian Canal and the protection of the islands obtained from Spain, a second treaty for the purchase of the Danish West Indies was signed at Washington, January 24, 1902. In reporting this treaty favorably to the Senate, Senator Cullom, of the Committee on Foreign Relations, stated:

These islands, together with Porto Rico, are of great importance in a strategic way, whether the strategy be military or commercial. St. Thomas is the natural point of call for all European trade bound to the West Indies, Central America, or northern South America. These islands, together with Porto Rico, form the northeastern corner of the Caribbean Sea and are of great importance in connection with the American isthmus, where a canal will be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific. They are of first importance in connection with our relations to the region of the Orinoco and the Amazon and with our control of the Windward Passage.

The treaty was approved by the United States Senate February 17, 1902, but failed of ratification, by a tie vote, in the upper house of the Danish Rigsdag.

All of the reasons upon which the two prior treaties were based, whether strategic, economic, or political, are of more force today than in previous years. There can be no question as to the value of St. Thomas harbor as a naval port, with its circular configuration, ample roadsteads, protection from prevailing winds and seas, and facilities for fortifications. Moreover, the advantages of the possession of a naval base off the entrance of the Panama Canal, and near the Island of Porto Rico, are self-evident.

The commercial value of the islands cannot be doubted. Lying in close proximity to many of the passages into the Caribbean Sea, the use of St. Thomas harbor as a supply station for merchant ships plying between the United States and South America, and for vessels in other trades, is of great importance. The existing modern harbor works, floating docks, marine slip and wharves, provided with electric cranes, oil-reservoirs, coal-depots, fresh-water tanks, machine shops and warehouses, contribute to the commercial advantages of St. Thomas Harbor as a port of call and transshipment for ships in the Central and South American trades.

The political importance of extending American jurisdiction over the islands is not to be overlooked. The Caribbean is within the peculiar sphere of influence of the United States, especially since the completion of the Panama Canal, and the possibility of a change of sovereignty of any of the islands now under foreign jurisdiction is of grave concern to the United States. Moreover, the Monroe Doctrine, a settled national policy of the United States, would have caused this country to look with disfavor upon the transfer of sovereignty of the Danish West Indies to any other European nation.

In view of these considerations, the treaty of cession of these islands to the United States is a matter of no small moment to this country. I do not hesitate, therefore, to recommend that the Congress be urged to take action during the present session to enable this Government to discharge its conventional obligation to Denmark by the payment to the Government of Denmark of the sum of $25,000,000 by April 17th next.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND DENMARK FOR THE CESSION OF THE DANISH WEST INDIES

Signed at New York, August 4, 1916; ratification advised by the Senate, September 7, 1916; ratified by the President, January 16, 1917; ratified by Denmark, December 22, 1916; ratifications exchanged at Washington January 17, 1917; proclaimed, January 25, 1917.

Treaty Series No. 629

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas a Convention between the United States of America and Denmark providing for the cession to the United States of all territory asserted or claimed by Denmark in the West Indies, including the islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix, together with the adjacent islands and rocks, was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries at the City of New York on the fourth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, the original of which Convention, being in the English and Danish languages, is word for word as follows:

The United States of America and His Majesty the King of Denmark being desirous of confirming the good understanding which exists between them, have to that end appointed as Plenipotentiaries.

The President of the United States:

Mr. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States, and His Majesty the King of Denmark:

Mr. Constantin Brun, His Majesty's Envoy extraordinary and Minister plenipotentiary at Washington, who, having mutually exhibited their full powers which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Article 1

His Majesty the King of Denmark by this convention cedes to the United States all territory, dominion and sovereignty, possessed, asserted or claimed by Denmark in the West Indies including the Islands of Saint Thomas, Saint John and Saint Croix together with the adjacent islands and rocks.

This cession includes the right of property in all public, government, or crown lands, public buildings, wharves, ports, harbors, fortifications, barracks, public funds, rights, franchises, and privileges, and all other public property of every kind or description now belonging to Denmark together with all appurtenances thereto.

In this cession shall also be included any government archives, records, papers or documents which relate to the cession or the rights and property of the inhabitants of the Islands ceded, and which may now be existing either in the Islands ceded or in Denmark. Such archives and records shall be carefully preserved, and authenticated copies thereof, as may be required shall be at all times given to the United States Government or the Danish Government, as the case may be, or to such properly authorized persons as may apply for them.

Denmark guarantees that the cession made by the preceding article is free and unencumbered by any reservations, privileges, franchises, grants, or possessions, held by any governments, corporations, syndicates, or individuals, except as herein mentioned. But it is understood that this cession does not in any respect impair private rights which by law belong to the peaceful possession of property of all kinds by private individuals of whatsoever nationality, by municipalities, public or private establishments, ecclesiastical or civic bodies, or any other associations having legal capacity to acquire and possess property in the Islands ceded.

The congregations belonging to the Danish National Church shall retain the undisturbed use of the churches which are now used by them, together with the parsonages appertaining thereunto and other appurtenances, including the funds allotted to the churches.

It is especially agreed, however, that:

1) The arms and military stores existing in the Islands at the time of the cession and belonging to the Danish Government shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it, unless they, or parts thereof, may have been bought by the Government of the United States; it being however understood that flags and colors, uniforms and such arms or military articles as are marked as being the property of the Danish Government shall not be included in such purchase.

2) The movables, especially silver plate and pictures which may be found in the government buildings in the islands ceded and belonging to the Danish Government shall remain the property of that Government and shall, as soon as circumstances will permit, be removed by it.

3) The pecuniary claims now held by Denmark against the colonial treasuries of the islands ceded are altogether extinguished in consequence of this cession and the United States assumes no responsibility whatsoever for or in connection with these claims. Excepted is however the amount due to the Danish Treasury in account current with the West-Indian colonial treasuries pursuant to the making up of accounts in consequence of the cession of the islands; should on the other hand this final accounting show a balance in favour of the West-Indian colonial treasuries, the Danish Treasury shall pay that amount to the colonial treasuries.

4) The United States will maintain the following grants, concessions and licenses, given by the Danish Government, in accordance with the terms on which they are given:

a. The concession granted to "Det vestindiske Kompagni" (the West-Indian Company) Ltd. by the communications from the Ministry of Finance of January 18th 1913 and of April 16th 1913 relative to a license to embank, drain, deepen and utilize certain areas in St. Thomas Harbor and preferential rights as to commercial, industrial or shipping establishments in the said Harbor.

b. Agreement of August 10th and 14th, 1914 between the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John and "Det vestindiske Kompagni" Ltd. relative to the supply of the city of Charlotte Amalie with electric lighting.

c. Concession of March 12th 1897 to "The Floating Dock Company of St. Thomas Ltd.", subsequently transferred to "The St. Thomas Engineering and Coaling Company Ltd." relative to a floating dock in St. Thomas Harbor, in which concession the maintenance, extension, and alteration of the then existing repairing slip are reserved.

d. Royal Decree Nr. 79 of November 30th 1914 relative to the subsidies from the colonial treasuries of St. Thomas and Sainte Croix to "The West India and Panama Telegraph Company Ltd."

e. Concession of November 3rd, 1906, to K. B. Hey to establish and operate a telephone system on St. Thomas island, which concession has subsequently been transferred to the "St. Thomas Telefonselskab" Ltd.

f. Concession of February 28th 1913 to the municipality of Sainte Croix to establish and operate a telephone system in Sainte Croix.

g. Concession of July 16th 1915 to Ejnar Svendsen, an Engineer, for the construction and operation of an electric light plant in the city of Christiansted, Sainte Croix.

h. Concession of June 20th 1904 for the establishment of a Danish West-Indian bank of issue. This bank has for a period of 30 years acquired the monopoly to issue bank-notes in the Danish West-India islands against the payment to the Danish Treasury of a tax amounting to ten percent of its annual profits.

i. Guarantee according to the Danish supplementary Budget Law for the financial year 1908-1909 relative to the St. Thomas Harbor's four percent loan of 1910.

5) Whatever sum shall be due to the Danish Treasury by private individuals on the date of the exchange of ratifications are reserved and do not pass by this cession; and where the Danish Government at that date holds property taken over by the Danish Treasury for sums due by private individuals, such property shall not pass by this cession, but the Danish Government shall sell or dispose of such property and remove its proceeds within two years from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention; the United States Government being entitled to sell by public auction, to the credit of the Danish Government, any portion of such property remaining unsold at the expiration of the said term of two years.

6) The Colonial Treasuries shall continue to pay the yearly allowances now given to heretofore retired functionaries appointed in the islands but holding no Royal Commissions, unless such allowances may have until now been paid in Denmark.

The Danish Government shall appoint with convenient despatch an agent or agents for the purpose of formally delivering to a similar agent or agents appointed on behalf of the United States, the territory, dominion, property, and appurtenances which are ceded hereby, and for doing any other act which may be necessary in regard thereto. Formal delivery of the territory and property ceded shall be made immediately after the payment by the United States of the sum of money stipulated in this convention; but the cession with the right of immediate possession is nevertheless to be deemed complete on the exchange of ratifications of this convention without such formal delivery. Any Danish military or naval forces which may be in the islands ceded shall be withdrawn as soon as may be practicable after the formal delivery, it being however understood that if the persons constituting these forces, after having terminated their Danish service, do not wish to leave the Islands, they shall be allowed to remain there as civilians.

Article 5

In full consideration of the cession made by this convention, the United States agrees to pay, within ninety days from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, in the City of Washington to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty the King of Denmark duly authorized to receive the money, the sum of twenty-five million dollars in gold coin of the United States.

Danish citizens residing in said islands may remain therein or may remove therefrom at will, retaining in either event all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or its proceeds; in case they remain in the Islands, they shall continue until otherwise provided, to enjoy all the private, municipal and religious rights and liberties secured to them by the laws now in force. If the present laws are altered, the said inhabitants shall not thereby be placed in a less favorable position in respect to the above mentioned rights and liberties than they now enjoy. Those, who remain in the islands may preserve their citizenship in Denmark by making before a court of record, within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a declaration of their decision to preserve such citizenship; in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it, and to have accepted citizenship in the United States; for children under eighteen years the said declaration may be made by their parents or guardians. Such election of Danish citizenship shall however not, after the lapse of the said term of one year be a bar to their renunciation of their preserved Danish citizenship and their election of citizenship in the United States and admission to the nationality thereof on the same terms as may be provided according to the laws of the United States, for other inhabitants of the islands.

The civil rights and the political status of the inhabitants of the islands shall be determined by the Congress, subject to the stipulations contained in the present convention.

Danish citizens not residing in the islands but owning property therein at the time of the cession, shall retain their rights of property including the right to sell or dispose of such property, being placed in this regard on the same basis as the Danish citizens residing in the islands and remaining therein or removing therefrom, to whom the first paragraph of this article relates.

Article 7

Danish subjects residing in the Islands shall be subject in matters civil as well as criminal to the jurisdiction of the courts of the Islands, pursuant to the ordinary laws governing the same, and they shall have the right to appear before such courts, and to pursue the same course therein as citizens of the country to which the courts belong.

Article 8

Judicial proceedings pending at the time of the formal delivery in the islands ceded shall be determined according to the following rules:

(1) Judgments rendered either in civil suits between private individuals, or in criminal matters, before the date mentioned, and with respect to which there is no recourse or right to review under Danish law, shall be deemed to be final, and shall be executed in due form and without any renewed trial whatsoever, by the competent authority in the territories within which such judgments are to be carried out.

If in a criminal case a mode of punishment has been applied which, according to new rules, is no longer applicable on the islands ceded after delivery, the nearest corresponding punishment in the new rules shall be applied.

(2) Civil suits or criminal actions pending before the first courts, in which the pleadings have not been closed at the same time, shall be confirmed before the tribunals established in the ceded islands after the delivery, in accordance with the law which shall thereafter be in force.

(3) Civil suits and criminal actions pending at the said time before the Superior Court or the Supreme Court in Denmark shall continue to be prosecuted before the Danish courts until final judgment according to the law hitherto in force. The judgment shall be executed in due form by the competent authority in the territories within which such judgment should be carried out.

The rights of property secured by copyrights and patents acquired by Danish subjects in the Islands ceded at the time of exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, shall continue to be respected.

Article 10

Treaties, conventions and all other international agreements of any nature existing between Denmark and the United States shall eo ipso extend, in default of a provision to the contrary, also to the ceded islands.

Article 11

In case of differences of opinion arising between the High Contracting Parties in regard to the interpretation or application of this convention, such differences, if they cannot be regulated through diplomatic negotiations, shall be submitted for arbitration to the permanent Court of Arbitration at the Hague.

Article 12

The ratifications of this convention shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible after ratification by both of the High Contracting Parties according to their respective procedure.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed and sealed this convention, in the English and Danish languages.

Done at New York this fourth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and sixteen.

And whereas in giving advice and consent to the ratification of the said Convention, it was declared by the Senate of the United States in their resolution that "such advice and consent are given with the understanding, to be expressed as a part of the instrument of ratification, that such Convention shall not be taken and construed by the High Contracting Parties as imposing any trust upon the United States with respect to any funds belonging to the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indian Islands, or in which the said

Church may have an interest, nor as imposing upon the United States any duty or responsibility with respect to the management of any property belonging to said Church, beyond protecting said Church in the possession and use of church property as stated in said Convention, in the same manner and to the same extent only as other churches shall be protected in the possession and use of their several properties";

And whereas it was further provided in the said resolution "That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the said Convention on condition that the attitude of the United States in this particular, as set forth in the above proviso, be made the subject of an exchange of notes between the Governments of the two High Contracting Parties, so as to make it plain that this condition is understood and accepted by the two Governments, the purpose hereof being to bring the said Convention clearly within the Constitutional powers of the United States with respect to church establishment and freedom of religion";

And whereas this condition has been fulfilled by notes exchanged between the two High Contracting Parties on January 3, 1917;

And whereas the said Convention has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the City of Washington, on the seventeenth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and seventeen;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof, subject to the said understanding of the Senate of the United States.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Provided, however, That it is declared by the Senate that in advising and consenting to the ratification of the said convention, such advice and consent are given with the understanding, to be expressed as a part of the instrument of ratification, that such Convention shall not be taken and construed by the High Contracting Parties as imposing any trust upon the United States with respect to any funds belonging to the Danish National Church in the Danish West Indian Islands, or in which the said church may have an interest, nor as imposing upon the United States any duty or responsibility with respect to the management of any property belonging to said church, beyond protecting said church in the possession and use of church property as stated in said Convention, in the same manner and to the same extent only as other churches shall be protected in the possession and use of their several properties. I trust that your Government will in a formal reply to this communication accept this understanding as to the meaning and construction of the provisions of said Convention in accordance with the foregoing resolution of the Senate.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

MY DEAR MR. MINISTER: The Congress of the United States having provided the $25,000,000 which, under Article 5 of the Convention of August 4, 1916, the Government of the United States, in full consideration of the cession of the Danish West Indian Islands to the United States, agreed to pay in the City of Washington, to the diplomatic representative or other agent of His Majesty, the King of Denmark, duly authorized to receive the money, within ninety days from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the convention, I have the honor to inquire to whom it is the desire of the Danish Government the money should be paid.

As the convention provides that the $25,000,000 shall be paid in gold coin of the United States, I beg also to inquire whether a Treasury warrant, payable in gold coin will be acceptable to the Government of Denmark. It may be, in view of the manifest risks involved that the Government of Denmark would not care to undertake to make gold shipments at the present time, and I would, therefore, be further obliged if you will kindly advise me whether it is the purpose to ship the gold out of this country or whether a credit of the amount would be all that the Government of Denmark would require for the time being.

Requesting that I may receive your replies to these inquiries at your earliest convenience,

Duties and taxes collected will be used and expended under the President for benefit such islands.

Upon Commander Pollock's arrival and assumption charge you will immediately close consulate, turn furniture over to Naval authorities together with archives, if they desire them; otherwise they should be packed and shipped Washington. You and Zabriskie will proceed Washington with seal, fee stamps, codes. Messenger services will terminate March 31st.

Washington, April 2, 1917.To the Diplomatic Officers of the United States

GENTLEMEN: By the convention concluded between the United States and Denmark on August 4, 1916, the ratifications of which were exchanged at Washington on January 17, 1917, the Government of His Majesty the King of Denmark ceded to the United States "all territory, dominion and sovereignty, possessed, asserted or claimed by Denmark in the West Indies, including the Islands of St. Thomas, St. John and St. Croix, together with the adjacent islands and rocks," in consideration of the payment by the United States within 90 days from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the convention of the sum of $25,000,000, in gold coin of the United States. The payment of this sum was made at Washington on March 31, 1917, to the agent authorized by the Government of Denmark to receive the money; and on the same day the islands were formally transferred by Denmark to the United States, and possession effectively taken.

You are instructed to communicate officially the above information to the Government to which you are respectively accredited, advising them at the same time that in the opinion of the Government of the United States it would be desirable for existing foreign consuls in the islands ceded by Denmark to the United States to receive new commissions from their Governments upon which the Government of the United States could issue its exequatur.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the Royal Resolution of March 9th, 1917, concerning the inhabitants of the Danish West Indies. The resolution was in the form of an open letter and was published a few days ago in St. Thomas, St. Croix and St. Jan. As soon as the official copy is issued it will be forwarded to the Department.

MAURICE FRANCOIS EGAN

[Inclosure]

The following open communication, addressed to the inhabitants of the Danish West Indies, was published a few days ago in St. Thomas, St. Croix and St. Jan.

We, Christian the Tenth, King of Denmark, etc., extend our Royal Greetings to our dear and loyal citizens of St. Thomas, St. Croix and St. Jan.

Being convinced that the Islands will have a better prospect for developing their interests under the United States, We have, with the consent of Parliament, concluded a convention with the President of the United States, concerning the cession of the islands to the afore-mentioned States.

We have made a point of securing for you, through exact and specified rules—which are contained in the convention—protection in the exercise of your freedom, religion, property and other rights. You are at liberty to remain upon or leave the islands at any time. In either case you will maintain your rights of possession, and have the right to sell or dispose of any property you may own, or the proceeds thereof. If you remain on the islands you will continue, until otherwise concluded, to enjoy all such private rights as are provided by the present laws, and in case the present laws are changed, such change will cause no retrogression in the aforementioned rights or freedom. Those who remain on the islands have the right to preserve their Danish citizenship. This should be done by making a declaration before the Court of Record within the expiration of one year after the ratification of the treaty, (January 17, 1917) to the effect that you desire to preserve your relation to Denmark. The parents or guardians of children under eighteen years should make the declaration on the latter's behalf.

The decision about such citizenship, however, will constitute no hindrance, after the expiration of the above-named time limit, for giving up your Danish citizenship and becoming a citizen of the United States on such conditions as may have been prescribed to other inhabitants of the islands in accordance with the laws of the United States.

While parting with you, We express the hope that you will bear in kind memory the centuries during which Denmark was your mother country. We express to you Our Royal Gratitude for the loyalty and sincerity you have shown us and the population of Denmark, and extend to you the best wishes for a happy and prosperous future.

Santo Domingo, January 5, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that conditions here are growing better daily. The people have accepted the Military Government with remarkably good grace, and throughout the Republic a feeling of security obtains not experienced for some time. The payment of past due salaries and the regular disbursement of funds for services rendered have helped enormously.

The reconstruction work is a serious matter, as all departments of the Government were absolutely at a standstill when we took possession. The reforms to be instituted are many, and constant and careful study of the problem is necessary. The Military Government will have to continue for a considerable time before the country will be in a position for a de facto government of its own. The head of the Military Government, as well as all of the officers in charge of the departments, should be absolutely free from all other duties in order to conduct the government business. Captain Knapp as commander of the cruiser force has very important duties in connection with the fleet, and the naval officers in charge of the Executive Departments have their own ships to look after. The details of this important governmental work are vast and require constant attention and study, and there are so many opportunities for failure unless a thorough and well organized system of provisional government is established.

¹Continued from For. Rel. 1916, pp. 220—248.

The plan for the establishment of the constabulary has not yet been completed. Various conferences on this subject have been held, and the organization as proposed by the military was found to be entirely too expensive for the revenues of the country, considering the other pressing needs.

Referring to my telegram of December 28, 4 p. m.,² and the reply of the Department of January 2, 4 p. m., I have to report that Captain Knapp, acting on my advice, had already issued an executive order suspending the functions of Congress and eliminating the emoluments of the Senators and Deputies. A copy of this order, No. 18, will be found amongst enclosures.

I enclose herewith copies² of the Official Gazette containing all executive orders issued since the establishment of the Military Government.

As no quorum of the Dominican Congress exists, due to the expiration of the terms of office of certain members of the Senate and House of Deputies, and to the fact that such elections as may have been held to fill vacancies so caused will not be recognized as valid by the Military Government, having been held under the direction of an administration not recognized by the United States, and to the further fact that all elections have been suspended for the present by Executive Order No. 12, of December 26, 1916; it is ordered:

First: That the sessions of Dominican Congress are suspended until after elections shall have been ordered and held to fill vacancies now existing; and Second: That the Senators and Deputies whose terms have not expired are likewise suspended from office until the full Congress shall be called into session, and that in the meantime their emoluments shall cease.

[Inclosure—Extract]

The Annual Report of the Military Government of Santo Domingo up to end of fiscal year, June 30, 1917

SANTO DOMINGO, July 21, 1917.

Although Military Government in Santo Domingo was not proclaimed until November 29, 1916, this report includes a brief record of events with which I was concerned and which occurred prior to that date.

While awaiting Rear Admiral Pond's convenience to relieve him, I made such study of the conditions here as were proper in his presence, and immediately after relieving him, I pursued my investigation of the conditions and the attitude of the Provisional Government.

The result of my investigations convinced me by November 27, that there was no real change in the attitude of the Provisional Government, the unsatisfactory nature of which had been impressed upon me in Washington, and that it either would not or could not undertake the measures of reform desired by the United States Government. This fact I reported to the Department, together with my opinion that the conclusion reached in conferences in Washington was correct.

On November 28, at 2 o'clock p. m., I received a radiogram from the Secretary of the Navy, directing me to issue, with one excision, and put into effect, the Proclamation of Military Government that had been prepared before I left Washington, a copy of which I had.

The Proclamation was received without outward disturbance, except in the City of San Francisco de Macoris, Province of Pacificador, in the northern part of the Island.

Since the proclamation of Military Government up to the present time there has been no political disturbance of any magnitude. The nearest approach was the uprising in Azua Province, which was suspected, but not with absolute proof, of being fomented by one of the professional political leaders of the country. This was promptly handled by the forces at the disposal of the Military Government which were dispatched to the scene; quiet now reigns in that Province.

In January troops were sent to San Pedro de Macoris, in the south of the Island, where the sugar estates were practically being blackmailed by a desperado named Cha-chá. At the time when Military Government was proclaimed there were not sufficient troops to garrison Macoris, and for some time after that the managers of the sugar estates themselves requested that no troops be sent for fear it would occasion an outbreak; but General Pendleton and myself, after waiting to see that conditions were generally quiet in other parts of the country, determined that this condition could not be allowed to go on, and troops were sent to Macoris. During this operation Captain John R. Henley was wounded and Lieutenant James K. Bolton was killed while taking luncheon on board a small vessel at the wharf of Macoris. This act was murder pure and simple by a half-grown boy. Except for the excitement attendant upon such an affair, there was no real opposition in Macoris City. Out in the Province, Cha-chá and a number of his followers took to the woods and were vigorously pursued. After a very short time he surrendered and his band was broken up.

There was, however, another bandit, Vicentico Evangelista, a man of more commanding personality than Cha-chá, who, after the latter surrendered, gradually gathered about him a band of marauders whose depredations have been the occasion of considerable anxiety to the Military Government. He has been operating in the northern part of Macoris Province and in the adjacent Province of Seibo where he has terrorized the Dominicans to the extent that it is almost impossible to get accurate information from them. The country is very difficult to operate in, but at the date terminating this report, he is being vigorously pursued.

With the exception of Vicentico Evangelista's activities, the country is quiet at the end of June, in so far as any known organized bands are concerned. There are in Santo Domingo, as in every country, lawless individuals, but there is not believed to be now any organization of armed men of any considerable numbers who are in opposition to the Military Government or to the general peace of the country.

The disarming of the population of Santo Domingo has gone on steadily from the first days of Military Government. There are doubtless still many arms in the country that have not been turned in, which is evidenced by the fact that arms are being slowly collected even at this time and that the band of Vicentico Evangelista is known to have a considerable number of rifles, some of which are apparently quite new. As a whole, however, the country has been disarmed, to the very great advancement of general tranquility. The good effect has been evident from the first. The holiday season has usually been one when in the cities and larger towns there was much shooting, and when violent deaths were always expected to occur. During the holidays of the end of 1916, excellent order was maintained in Santo Domingo City, and I heard later on that the same was true of the rest of the Republic, in marked contrast to previous years. On later holidays that have occurred up to the present time, the same conditions of good order have obtained. It has been a matter of remark to me by Dominicans that the disarming of the populace was one of the best things that ever occurred in Santo Domingo.

While, from all indications, there is now no armed revolutionary uprising to be feared so long as the military forces of the United States are in occupation, it must not be inferred that the political leaders have given up their ambitions; or that, if left to themselves, the tranquillity of Santo Domingo has been permanently assured. On the very day of this writing, shortly after the end of the fiscal year, I am assured by a Dominican of wide acquaintance and great experience, that the ambitions of the leaders are only dormant, that they are still cherished, and that if the United States were to withdraw its forces conditions would shortly become as bad as they were before. With every day of tranquillity, however, conditions are bound to mend; and if the Guardia Nacional, now being organized, can be indoctrinated properly, and especially if it can be given the example of the United States Marines serving alongside of it for a considerable period, there is hope that in the long run the people of Santo Domingo will appreciate so thoroughly the advantages of a stable condition of good order that, with the aid of the national police force, they will themselves not further permit the revolutionary movements that have done so much in the past to retard the country's development.

As a measure of coercion, payments of the Dominican Government under the Budget of January 1, 1916, were suspended on August 18, 1916, through the action of the United States Government. This suspension of payments had caused a great deal of real distress, and its effect was probably on the whole unfortunate. Many people were deprived of their income who were themselves in no position to force the Dominican Government to meet the wishes of the United States; and a feeling of resentment was engendered which could not help having a bad effect. I had learned of this condition before leaving Washington, and after arriving here I learned much more about it. The resumption of payments seemed not only a proper measure, but one that was demanded by the situation. I was informed that if it was made simultaneously with the declaration of Military Government, it would probably have great effect in quieting the opposition that was naturally to be expected, in thought if not in deed. The resumption of payments was provided for in an announcement issued simultaneously with the Proclamation, and in addition I wrote a letter to the Receiver General of Customs requesting that all checks drawn for payment of salaries be made payable only to the individuals in whose favor they were drawn and that they should not be transferable by endorsement. This precaution was rendered necessary owing to the practice of loan sharks of buying up salary claims at a great discount, sometimes as high as eighty percent. The method had been found to work well in Haiti, and on the whole it has worked well here and is still in effect. On December 2, three days later, I wrote a letter to the General Receiver exempting from the payment of salaries the Provisional President, the members of his Cabinet, members of Congress and the major officials appointed by the Provisional President. It required some time to catch up with the back payments, but they have, for a considerable period now, been out of the way. The good effect of these measures met anticipations.

After the issuance of the Proclamation of Military Government, I waited for some days to see if the members of the Provisional Government would in any way cooperate with the Military Government in carrying on the ordinary administration of affairs. The hope that I had in this direction proved to be unfounded; and I was assured by persons most familiar with conditions here that I could expect no assistance of the kind. I established the offices of the Military Government in the Government Palace. Upon taking possession, it was found that the President and all of the members of the Cabinet had come to their offices after the Proclamation of Military Government, had cleaned out their desks, and had not since appeared in the Government Palace. It was an evident case of desertion. Under the circumstances, as the affairs of government had to go on under intelligent administration, I placed the several Departments of the Dominican Government in charge of officers under my command. The first of these Departments to be placed in charge of an American officer were those of War and Navy, and of Interior and Police, which were put under the administration of Brigadier General Pendleton. Four days later Commander B. B. Bierer was designated to administer the Departments of Foreign Relations, Justice and Public Instruction, Agriculture and Immigration, and Fomento and Communications; and Paymaster Hagner to administer the Department of Exchequer and Commerce. This action did not meet the immediate approval of the Department which was, however, eventually given. Since that time changes have occurred in the officers administering the Departments as has been made necessary by detachments. At the present time the Departments of War and Navy, and Interior and Police, are being administered by Lieutenant Colonel W. N. McKelvy in the absence of Brigadier General Pendleton, on sick leave. The Departments of Justice and Public Instruction, and of Foreign Relations are being administered by Colonel R. H. Lane; and the Departments of Fomento and Communications, and of Agriculture and Immigration, are being administered by Lieutenant C. C. Baughman, of my Staff; while Paymaster Hagner has continued from the outset to administer the Department of Exchequer and Commerce.

This action was forced upon me by the attitude of the members of the Dominican Government. It did not appear possible to get Dominicans of the proper caliber who would accept these high administrative offices, for they were afraid of the criticism that they would receive from their own people. I could not force Dominicans into office, but I was able to direct officers under my command to assume these duties.

The action taken prevented the utter disorganization of governmental administration. There were, moreover, some particular reasons why it was necessary to have some of the Cabinet offices promptly filled. It was desirable to begin, as soon as possible, public works which had been interrupted by the state of turmoil that had existed, and by the arrangements under the Treaty of 1907, the necessary funds required the signature of Dominican officials before they could be withdrawn from the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, which is the depository of the Dominican Loan.

The result has been most fortunate. Unforeseen as the action taken was to me when I came to Santo Domingo, looking back I now consider that it has helped enormously in the progress of the objects for which the occupation was undertaken. The American officers have been administering their departments with a high degree of intelligence and zeal, and, of course, with integrity and freedom from affiliations here that have never been questioned in them but could not have been counted upon with Dominican officials. Had Dominicans remained in office, I should have had to have their actions constantly observed in any event; but the advantage of having officers actually administering, instead of observing and checking the administration of others, has been evident. Not only is this true from the point of view of the Military Government, but it is true also from the point of view of many disinterested Dominicans. I have myself been asked, almost begged, by Dominicans not to disturb the existing order of things for a long period; not to think of putting Dominicans in these offices, but to continue the administration of affairs through the American officers, whose work is giving such great satisfaction to all disinterested people, and whose presence in the responsible Dominican offices is resented only by the class which has brought the Dominican Government to the low plane which has made it a reproach. I cannot claim any prevision leading up to my action; but I regard that action, taken by force of circumstances, as the most fortunate thing that could have happened.

The sessions of the Dominican Congress by the Constitution in effect begin on the 27th of February, which is the day celebrated as the anniversary of Independence. The sessions last for ninety days and may be prolonged for sixty days more. Every two years the terms expire of one-half of the Deputies and one-third of the Senators. Upon the advent of Military Government, there were calls for election which had been issued by the late Provisional Government to fill these vacancies. The holding of elections at that time was out of the question in the minds of all persons whom I consulted, including Dominicans themselves. I therefore issued Executive Order No. 12 on the 26th of December, 1916, after I had had sufficient time to familiarize myself with conditions and to receive reports from the Marine officers in the more distant parts of the country, none of whom believed in the elections being held. The executive order met the approval of all who wished well to Santo Domingo.

One of the reasons that led to the intervention was the great increase in the public debt that had taken place without the consent of the United States, despite the provisions of Article III of the Treaty of 1907. This debt has been accumulated in various ways, from positive graft to real necessity for the suppression of revolution; some of it is for unpaid bills of the Dominican Government, some of it for unpaid salaries and some for claims for damages due to seizures by revolutionary bodies. The present acknowledged public debt, made with the consent of the United States, consists of a $20,000,000 bond issue at five per cent interest and one per cent amortization annually, and of an additional issue of $1,500,000, which will be extinguished, it is expected, in September. Thus, after September, the public debt will consist of the $20,000,000 loan made under the Treaty of 1907, plus such further indebtedness as will result from the work of the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917. Needless to say, the government is being administered within its income at the present time.

In connection with the $20,000,000 bond issue, I invite attention to a feature of the agreement with the bankers that appears to me to be vicious. Provision is made for the purchase from time to time of outstanding bonds by the Dominican Government from surplus funds; after November, 1917, the purchase of such bonds will become obligatory as funds are available, the bonds to be retired by lot at the price of 102½. Bonds that have been, or may be, so retired, are simply retired from the hands of investors by whom they were being held, and are then placed in the sinking fund. Interest does not cease on them, but instead of accruing to the outside bond holders, it accrues to the sinking fund; in other words, the monthly charge upon the Dominican Government, instead of gradually decreasing by the absolute retirement of funds, goes on at the uniform rate of $100,000 per month, five per cent interest and one per cent amortization on the $20,000,000 loan. The result will be that Santo Domingo will go to bed one night with a $20,000,000 loan extant, and will wake up the next morning with the whole loan extinguished at once. On the day when the loan is extinguished, the income of the Government will be $100,000 a month greater than it was the day before. Such a temptation to waste and corruption would be a bad thing if it existed in any government in the world; for the government of a country like Santo Domingo it is hard to conceive of anything worse. The arrangement is an admirable one for the bankers but a very bad one for the good of Santo Domingo; and is one that should not be entered into, in my opinion, in any future loan floated for the benefit of the Republic.

It has been stated above that the Government has been administered within its income by the Military Government. Not only has this been the case, but great savings have been effected, which can be devoted to such matters as education, public health, maintenance of public works and general projects for the benefit of the country. As an illustration of honest administration, the collection of internal revenue may be cited. For the month preceding the placing of the collection of internal revenue under American auspices, May, 1916, the return was $23,687.24. Mr. J. H. Edwards assumed charge of the collection on June 26, 1916, in which month collections rose to $34,320.64, since when they have rapidly increased. The collections for June of this year were $125,000 in round numbers, more than five times what they were thirteen months previous. The customs collections have been honestly made under the Receivership since its creation. What is worthy of note here, however, is that in the past few months they have risen remarkably. This is due to a number of causes, but I feel that it is due in large measure to the confidence felt in the stability of conditions due to Military Government, resulting in an increase of business. During the first month of Military Government (December) customs collections jumped over $92,000 above those of the preceding month. In January they fell again over $79,000 to $340,000 but since then they have increased steadily, except for one month, until for the month of June, 1917, the collections were $545,000 in round numbers, the largest in the history of the country. A table follows, showing the collections of customs and internal revenue for the year, including May and June, 1916, for the purposes of comparison.

As a consequence of increased collections, on the one hand, and of honest and economical disbursements, on the other hand, the Dominican Treasury has over $500,000 in hand on June 30, accumulated since November 29, 1916. When the Military Government was proclaimed, the Provisional Government had just borrowed several thousand dollars for daily needs, salaries had been unpaid for a considerable period, and a debt of about $230,000 had accumulated by overpayments on the budget item 456 "Gastos Imprevistos, $50,000." Since then back salaries have been paid from June 1, 1916, current salaries have been paid as they came due, current expenses have been met, the overpayment on "Gastos Imprevistos" has been liquidated, about $240,000 has been spent or obligated for repairs, upkeep of roads and the like, not included in the budget, $500,000 has been set aside for the first year's expenses of the Guardia Nacional, and the $500,000 in hand, mentioned above, has been accumulated. Such a showing would have been impossible under old conditions, but it goes to show the possibilities under conditions of tranquillity and honest and economical administration.

The condition of education in the Republic is deplorable. On January 19, I appointed a commission to take up the subject of public instruction and make a report. The commission is composed entirely of Dominicans, for I thought it was wise to have their own views uncolored by any appearance of pressure from outside. The head of the commission is the Archbishop of Santo Domingo. The work before the commission has been a great one and its report has not been presented, but I am informed by the Archbishop that he expects to present it within a few days. After there has been time to digest it, I hope to put in motion measures to improve the status of public education. I am convinced that here, as has proved to be the case in Porto Rico, the Philippines and Cuba, the solution of the problem of good government will be found in the better education of the people. There is no accurate census showing the proportion of illiteracy in the country, but I have had it variously estimated from eighty-five to ninety-five per cent; at any rate it is very high.

The lack of a census was mentioned in the preceding paragraph. It is my intention, if funds can be found, to have a census taken at as early a date as arrangements therefor can be made. The subject is under investigation and I hope soon to be in a position to know whether the census can be undertaken or not.

The future material prosperity of Santo Domingo will be, I believe, principally dependent upon agriculture. There is said to be much valuable timber, and there is known to be some mineral wealth; but the rosy reports about the latter that have occasionally been published need confirmation. Nothing new points to the expectation of anything further than the most modest industrial development. Agricultural possibilities are known to be great, although there are still largely undeveloped methods and tools are archaic; there are rich, semi-arid lands but irrigation has not yet been resorted to in any considerable degree. There are some large foreign corporations engaged in agriculture, chiefly sugar raising. That they increase the business and prosperity of Santo Domingo to some degree is undoubted; that their presence here is not altruistic is equally undoubted. The desirable thing is to show the Dominican people how to raise larger, better and more varied crops, the proceeds of which will accrue to Dominicans themselves and not go in large measure to foreign corporations. A start in this direction has been made by the employment of traveling demonstrators who are especially fitted by education to show the Dominican farmers how to improve their methods. There is much still to do; and now that it has been apparently shown that the Dominican finances will permit of greater expenditures than hitherto for this object, it is hoped in the near future to make further progress than has been possible up to this time.

Another thing that will be of great value to the country, if it can be brought about, is a survey of the whole country. The question of land titles is a burning one. The manufacture of false titles has been a thriving industry, and there are very many false titles in the country. As all titles must rest on surveys, the need is apparent of a general survey of sufficient accuracy to serve as a groundwork for the final surveys for titles. I have already written to the Director of the United States Geological Survey in regard to the matter, and have received from him estimates of the cost of the survey of Santo Domingo. The sum needed is beyond the possibilities from current revenue; but if it can be provided from Public Works funds I consider that a survey is one of the prime public works that should be undertaken here.

When I arrived in Santo Domingo, public works were almost at a standstill. The Department of Public Works, which is in reality not a department, but a division of the Cabinet Department of Fomento and Communications, is presided over by an American engineer, nominated by the United States. Monies for the public works undertaken by the Department are appropriated for in the first instance by the Dominican Congress and the appropriation, if from the Dominican loan, must be approved by the State Department in Washington before the money can be made available. After giving myself time to understand the situation I took the necessary measures to get funds for the prosecution of such works as had already been authorized, and to undertake certain new works. This included the completion of the bridge over the River Ozama at this city which has been finished and is now in daily use; the repair, and the elimination of rack sections, of the Ferrocarril Central Dominicano, the national railway in the North, which was in a state of decrepitude by reason of revolutionary activities; the completion of a road between Moca and La Vega now under construction; the completion of a bridge over the Nigua River for which preparations are going on; the improvement of the water front of the Ozama River at Santo Domingo City, for which plans have been made and which will be shortly undertaken; and an audit of the accounts of the Public Works Department which is in progress; the completion of a road from Santo Domingo City to the town of Los Alcarrazos which had been suspended at a distance of about three miles from the latter place owing to the lack of funds; and for the completion of harbor improvements at Puerto Plata now in progress.

The audit of the Public Works Department was spoken of in the preceding paragraph. In my earlier days here many reports were rife about the necessity for a thorough investigation of the Public Works Department, whose system of accounting, I was told, was faulty and not modern. I heard many stories of questionable accounts for work that had been ordered by Dominican officials to be done by the Director of Public Works or his subordinates, and even of the diversion of Public Work's material to private use. I have had, and have now, no occasion to believe that the actions of the present Director of Public Works have been other than entirely above suspicion; but, for his protection and also for the clear record of the Military Government, I considered that it was necessary that a thorough audit by trained auditors should be made of the Public Works Department, in order that the actual status of affairs at the present time might be known; that any instance in the past of an improper nature might be brought to light, and that a modern and satisfactory system of accounting should be established for the Public Works Department in the future. That audit is now in progress.

Another matter connected with the Public Works Department has been rectified recently. I found that there was no appropriation for the standing expenses of the office and field organization of the Public Works Department, and that, in consequence, the expenses of the office and general field work had to be provided for from the appropriations for specific projects. Such a condition of affairs was not business-like, as it did not permit the making of proper surveys as a basis of estimates for work to be done; and it further tended to enhance the cost of individual projects when the number of projects under way was reduced for any reason. I therefore communicated on this matter with the Department and the State Department, and received authority to make an appropriation for the standing expenses of the Department, which was done on the 27th of June.

I have received the impression, since being in Santo Domingo, that Public Works projects have not always been conceived for the best interests of the country as a whole, and on mentioning my impression to the American Minister, he informed me that the same impression existed in the State Department, which desired to have a broad scheme of public works laid out upon which the remainder of the loan available for public works may be spent in a manner that will be to the greatest advantage of the whole country. I have desired, if possible, before finally advising upon such a scheme, to visit the particular parts of the country, either in person or through officers on my Staff, especially Civil Engineer Whitman, but have been so closely tied down myself hitherto, as have also all the officers on the Staff, that this has not yet proved to be practicable. With a view, however, to getting a general consensus of the Dominicans themselves, representative bodies in different parts of the country have been asked to submit reports stating first, what they consider necessary for the general good of the country, and second, any projects that they may regard as necessary for the improvement of their own especial locality. These reports have been received and analyzed, and in a short time I hope the comprehensive scheme desired by the State Department may be ready to submit. I find much confusion in the minds of the Dominicans regarding the distinction between national and municipal works. All municipalities are very anxious to have certain local municipal public works undertaken by the national government. This I have consistently discouraged, as it appears to me that the funds provided by the national loan cannot properly be expended on projects other than those of national advantage.

There is nothing in the organization of the Dominican Government that provides any adequate public health service. This subject has been under investigation by P. A. Surgeon P. E. Garrison, U. S. Navy, since the first days of the occupation. In Santo Domingo City, he has cooperated with the municipal government and with the medical fraternity to as great an extent as has been possible. On December 13, he was made the head of the Board of Sanitation authorized under the Dominican law but which was found then to be inactive in its operations. Since that time progress has been made, but slowly. In the first place, there was for a considerable time doubt as to the possibility of having the necessary funds for any far-reaching project; then also it was considered advisable to proceed with some deliberation in order to adapt any scheme that might be adopted to the local conditions. It is hoped soon, as in the case of education, to be able to apply some thorough going measures. Meanwhile, the time has not been lost.

The railroad from Puerto Plata through Santiago to Moca is government owned. Due to the revolutionary habit of the country, the railroad had gone into a state of such decrepitude that it was unsafe to run trains. At the time of the proclamation of Military Government, the railroad had been placed in the hands of an American engineer nominated by the State Department. Immediately upon taking charge of affairs, reports began to reach me of the unsatisfactory condition of the railroad; and, what was worse, of the apparent lack of energetic steps on the part of the manager to put it on a working basis. Capital for that purpose had been furnished by an arrangement whereby funds from the loan were made available, but the work did not get ahead. I caused an inspection to be made of the road and based on the report of that inspection, and of a later one and upon the universal testimony of people from the northern part of the country, I reluctantly reached the conclusion that the American manager was not the proper man for his office. I therefore reported these facts and was authorized to remove him, which I did. The railroad is now under the management of Mr. J. T. Collins, an American, who has shown every indication of energy and ability. He has moved all the freight that was congested at the terminals at either end, has cared for the current business, and is in the meantime making repairs and betterments at a satisfactory rate of progress. The change has been a happy one for the country served by the railroad, and particularly for the good name and good faith of the American Government.

One of the most important matters to be taken up by the Military Government was the establishment of a constabulary force. The word "constabulary" itself does not appear to be acceptable to the Dominican people, and the word "guardia" has been substituted for it. The Dominicans are familiar with the word, as there was a Guardia Republicana in existence when Military Government came in. That force has now been entirely disbanded, and the new Guardia has been named "Guardia Nacional Dominicana." The organization of the Guardia and its recruitment have not yet been fully established; but its strength is now about sixty percent of the enlisted force contemplated at the beginning, and recruiting is going on all the time. In the early days of the occupation many conferences were had between the American Minister, the marine officers at headquarters, the officers on the staff and myself, to which were invited also Mr. Baxter, Receiver General of Customs, and Mr. Edwards, the Deputy Receiver General in charge of the Contaduria de Hacienda. It was a very important matter to form an estimate of the funds that would be available for the Guardia, and the two last-named gentlemen were those best qualified to look forward to possible revenue in the future. These gentlemen also have a wide knowledge of Dominican affairs which was most useful in considering the purposes for which the Guardia was to be established. It was almost the unanimous opinion that twenty-five percent of the current revenue was the maximum which should be devoted to the support of the Guardia, and as much less than that as might be possible, in order that other important matters such as education, agriculture, public works including means of communication, and not excluding a proper salary list for high officials, might be able to be cared for by the remainder of the available current revenue.

After reaching some conclusions I reported to the Department, and in March I was authorized to organize and establish the Guardia at my discretion. After receiving these instructions work was taken up immediately; but owing to changes of personnel here, and also to the failure to receive any confirmation of names submitted for commandant, the work was not as rapid as could have been desired. Finally Lieutenant Colonel Thorpe was detailed as acting commandant, which he remained until he took the field in pursuit of Vicentico Evangelista, when Major Ramsey was detailed in his place. Both of these officers had the work of the Guardia in addition to the other duties that they had hitherto performed. This has, of course, militated against the rapid development of the organization. It is now, however, in a fair way to be completed within a reasonable time, and when the details are ready the Department will be informed of the full organization of the Guardia. The officer whom it is intended to request the Department to detail as the commandant is on his way here to take charge temporarily, and the other officers and non-commissioned officers will be named as soon after his arrival as matters can be arranged with him. The organization is one that will readily admit of expansion if necessary. The number allowed has been deemed sufficient by the officers in conference, provided the full strength of the Guardia takes charge when the country is in a condition of tranquillity, and further provided that the Guardia has had sufficient indoctrination and training alongside of the marines. This last will not be the case for many months to come.

Owing to the withdrawal of marines from Santo Domingo at two different times, it has been necessary to rush the half-trained men of the Guardia into the field before they were ready for service. The withdrawals of marines each happened to take place at a most unfortunate time, and in order to have sufficient forces to meet emergencies it was necessary, as just said, to call upon the Guardia. On the whole they have done as well as could be expected and perhaps even better than could be expected under the circumstances; and I am very hopeful that when the men can be drawn in for the first period of intensive training and indoctrination, they can be trusted then to go out and perform their functions excellently. One idea will be to place the men of the Guardia in parts of the country which are not their homes, in order to remove, as far as possible, the influences that might be brought upon them by people who knew them or could bring influence to bear upon their families. I believe Dominicans are capable of producing a body of excellently trained police; and in my opinion police are what are needed in this country, not an army.

There are still many things that need the attention of the Military Government to a greater degree than has yet been given to them, and which will receive attention as rapidly as well digested programs for their betterment can be thought out. Among these are the administration of justice and the personnel of the courts; the question of taxes, both national and municipal; the settlement of the boundary between Santo Domingo and Haiti; the establishment of a national prison on modern lines; the establishment of a leper hospital; the further improvement of means of communication; and the improvement in education and agriculture already mentioned.

Some minor things that have been done and that have not been mentioned are the creation of an auditing department for the Dominican Government and the continuation of the budget for 1916. The budget should be entirely revised, but the revision needs all the experience that has been gained hitherto, and even more, before a new budget can be intelligently made. In the meantime the old budget serves sufficiently well for all practical purposes. In addition to these matters just mentioned, there has been much work done in the repairing of public buildings that have been destroyed in revolutions, repairing of roads, rehabilitating the telephone service of the Government and the wireless station at Santo Domingo City, in the improvement of jails and in municipal sanitation. Government offices have been in a number of cases consolidated with excellent results. A postal convention has been concluded between the Dominican Government and the United States, extending the domestic rate of postage in each country to first-class mails destined to the other country. Standard time has been established for the first time in Santo Domingo, the standard time for the country being that of the 70th meridian, which passes almost exactly through the center.

*The Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of State*NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 15, 1917.

The Secretary of the Navy presents his compliments to the Honorable the Secretary of State, and desires that I forward herewith for the information of the Department of State a copy of the Quarterly Report of Military Government of Santo Domingo, from July 1, 1917, to September 30, 1917, from the Head of the Military Government.

Very respectfully,

C. BELKNAP
Lieutenant Commander, U. S. N.

[Inclosure—Extract]

The Quarterly Report of the Military Government of Santo Domingo for the months of July, August and September, 1917

SANTO DOMINGO, October 27, 1917.

The conditions have continued to be quiet, and good order has been maintained throughout the country, speaking generally. There has been occasional lawlessness which must be expected in any country. Conditions are improving every day and are such now that reasonable security of life and property appears to be assured. There have been rumors from time to time of uprisings supposed to be fomented by German influence. Up to this date none of these reports has proved to have any foundation; all such reports are, however, made the subject of careful investigation.

As was reported, the bandit Vicentico Evangelista was killed while endeavoring to escape from the guard having him in charge. His death and the capture of his band have resulted, as was expected, in the resumption of peaceful conditions in Seybo Province and the adjacent part of Macoris Province. He had kept his band together by fear, and had imposed his will upon the parts of the country where he operated by the same means. He had achieved an extraordinary influence, which was manifested in many ways. With his death, however, and the surrender of his band, the entire atmosphere changed; and report after report from that section of the country shows that the people are going back to their peaceful occupations, that crops are being grown and products moved to the sea, where everything had been in a state of stagnation. A number of the principal lieutenants of Vicentico have been, or are being, tried by military commission. The records will be forwarded together, as they are so interrelated that it appears advisable to have them all reach the office of the Judge Advocate General at one time.

The disarming of the population has continued; a very interesting report upon the subject was made recently by the Brigade Commander, which has been forwarded. A résumé of that report shows that since the institution of Military Government, the following total number of deadly weapons has been turned in.

	Revolvers.	Rifles.	Knives.	Swords.	Machetes.	Pate de mules.	Shot-guns.	Rounds ammunition.
Northern Dist.....	19, 419	5, 493	735	257	2	474	111	100, 160
Southern Dist.....	10, 530	4, 412	-----	-----	776	1, 038	1, 389	87, 560
Total.....	29, 949	9, 905	735	257	778	1, 532	2, 000	187, 720

The custom revenues of the country have continued to show a gratifying increase over previous years, although they have somewhat fallen off from the collections of May and June. This, however, is an annual occurrence, the months of late summer and early fall invariably showing a decrease of customs revenues.

In no month have the customs revenues fallen below $415,000 and the average for the three months covered by this report is $462,000. The internal revenue collections have also kept up to a gratifying figure. The result is that with economical administration about one and one-half million dollars have been received in the Dominican Treasury, during the ten months since the advent of Military Government, in excess of the current demands under the budget that has been in effect. A revised budget will soon be issued.

In the matter of education progress has been made. The report of the Commission on Education has not yet been submitted, but the main features of it, as applied to present conditions, have been decided upon. Much discussion apparently seems to be required before the final report can be prepared. In the meantime, however, the secretary of the commission has been appointed Superintendent of Education in the place of the incumbent found when Military Government was declared. A considerable increase in budget will be made, unworthy teachers will be weeded out, less attention will be paid to higher education and much more to primary and secondary education. One of the two so-called universities will be suppressed, and efforts will be bent toward reducing illiteracy rather than to providing for the needs of a limited class of students in professional and literary subjects.

The question of agriculture has continued to receive the attention of the Military Government. The employment of traveling demonstrators has continued and the results obtained are very encouraging. It will be a matter of time, however, to find a sufficient number to cover the whole Republic, because the men employed must, in addition to their technical education, be able to speak the Spanish language. Negotiations are under way to employ a Director of Agriculture. The gentleman in mind is now in Porto Rico, serving under the Island Government, and is highly recommended by the Director of Agriculture of that Island. He has been here for a conference with the officers of the Military Government while this report was being prepared. He is expected to return here shortly for a six months' engagement, at the end of which time, if his services prove satisfactory and nothing arises to prevent, he will be permanently employed. His opinion coincides with that already formed by the Military Government, that it is wiser to employ traveling demonstrators than it is to attempt anything at present in the way of agricultural schools. Probably it will be wise in time to have also one or two experimental farms; but the character of the people is such, and their illiteracy is so great, that any attempt to convey agricultural information to them by written matter would be almost entirely lost. Added to this is the conservatism always found in the agricultural classes, but which will, it is believed, yield here most readily to practical demonstrations where the advice of traveling demonstrators is followed. The appropriation hitherto made for the Department of Agriculture will be considerably increased in the new budget under consideration at the present time.

The comprehensive scheme for future public works is not ready, but will be, I trust, very shortly. Preliminary studies have been made, and the formulation of the scheme is, in its general features, already well decided upon. It has, however, seemed wiser to wait until the new budget could be formulated and published, as the two matters will be somewhat connected. It will be my intention to use a certain part of the funds that have accumulated since the advent of Military Government in smaller items of public works, as has been done in the past months, for instance, for the repair and maintenance of public roads. The amount that will be available for such use will have its bearing upon the balance left from the $20,000,000 loan; therefore the scheme for the employment of the latter funds will be withheld until the new budget can be formulated.

No final scheme for the organization of the Public Health Service of the Dominican Republic has, as yet, been adopted, but preliminary steps have been taken in ways that will fit into such an organization when it shall be put into effect. Matters concerning the Quarantine Service have been put on a more satisfactory basis; and the medical officers of the occupation have rendered much valuable service in the localities where they have been stationed. There will be an opportunity for thorough cooperation between the Public Health Service and the Guardia Nacional, which should become closer and closer as time goes on.

The Dominican Central Railroad has continued to improve under the management of Mr. J. T. Collins; and all reports from the region served by it go to show the satisfaction of the people in the bettered conditions. An attempt is being made, from earnings in excess of amounts needed for ordinary running expenses and repairs, to put the road in first-class condition and to build up the working capital of $75,000 which was approved by the State Department in Washington. It will take some time to do this; but the receipts of the road have shown a gratifying balance over expenditures for the past few months.

The Guardia Nacional Dominicana, the constabulary force of the country, has been recruited and trained thus far under the direction of officers and non-commissioned officers detailed from the Marine Corps, with the exception of a few officers of experience and knowledge of Spanish who have come from civil life. In every case the last named have previously been in either the Army, the Marine Corps, or the constabulary of some of the dependencies. At the end of the quarter, the strength of the Guardia has reached twenty-one American and seventeen Dominican officers, and 691 enlisted men. The necessities of the case have continued to demand that detachments of the Guardia be sent out into the country to preserve order before they have had the thorough training that would have been desirable, but they will be drawn in from time to time for further training and replaced by trained men. In the larger places considerable bodies of the Guardia are kept assembled, and are not only being trained under military discipline but are being instructed in the necessary laws and other matters which will enable them to carry on in a proper manner their general police duties.

By Executive Order No. 66, steps were put in motion to establish a civil service for government departments. It was considered wise in the beginning to leave the initiative very largely in the hands of the officers administering the different departments rather than to attempt the formulation of a series of rules that would apply to the whole number of government employees, in the belief that after some experience a body of civil service rules applicable to the whole scheme of government could be evolved that would require less readjustment than would have been the case by starting out with a theoretical organization. The first body of government employees to come under civil service rules will be those of the postal administration. A date for examination has been set, and a commission is being provided for to conduct the examination. The head of the commission will be Mr. Terry, Chairman of the Porto Rican Civil Service Commission, whose services have been kindly lent by the administration of that Island. The services of one of the United States Postal Inspectors of Porto Rico have also been secured while this report has been in course of preparation. The third member of the commission will be a Dominican. By the first of the year practically every postal employee in the country will be holding his position under civil service rules. The service will be extended to other departments as rapidly as the officers administering them can make the proper arrangements. It is contemplated at a later time to appoint a civil service commission which shall have cognizance of all civil service employees of the country.

There are two other matters of interest that may be briefly mentioned: The original proclamation of Military Government did not reserve the power to remove unworthy judges. This power has recently been given to the Military Governor in cases where constitutional methods cannot be followed, and in which the unworthiness of the judge is proven beyond a doubt. In the earlier days of the war I represented the dependence of Santo Domingo upon the United States for certain foodstuffs, and the Export Board has adopted the very liberal policy of giving a blanket license for both Santo Domingo and Haiti, provided that measures were taken in both countries to prevent the reexport of the foodstuffs to the enemies of the United States. These steps have been taken, and there has been no shortage of any necessary foodstuffs to my knowledge.

SANTO DOMINGO, June 26, 1917

Executive Order No. 65

The Dominican Claims Commission of 1917, organized as announced in Executive Order No. 60, will have vested in it the powers, and will be governed in the performance of its duties, as hereinbelow prescribed.

Upon being convened, and prior to entering upon its duties, the Commission and each member thereof individually shall take oath before the Supreme Court of Santo Domingo to the faithful and proper performance of duty. The Secretary and the clerical staff shall take oath of similar effect administered by the President of Commission before the entire Commission. The oaths of the Commission shall be registered in the archives of the Supreme Court, and all oaths herein prescribed shall be recorded in the record of the Commission.

The Commission shall have its seat at Santo Domingo City, Dominican Republic, but may in its discretion and as may be necessary hold special sessions at other points in the Republic.

The President of the Commission shall be the presiding officer and shall have a vote in all proceedings. The Secretary of the Commission shall maintain complete records of all the proceedings and awards of the Commission; he shall not have a vote. All resolutions, acts and business transacted by the Commission shall be by a majority vote of the members of the Commission present, but no award shall be valid unless subscribed to by at least three members of the Commission.

In case any member of the Commission is interested directly or indirectly, or related in any degree to any person who is interested directly or indirectly, in any claim brought before the Commission, he shall bring the fact to the notice of the Commission, which will, as a whole, determine his eligibility to sit in the case.

The first duty of the Commission shall be to prepare and submit to the Head of the Military Government a plan to provide for the necessary means of liquidating the awards upon claims approved by the Commission.

The Commission shall have complete and final jurisdiction as a Dominican Government agency in the matter of adjudicating claims against the Dominican Government coming before it. The decisions rendered and awards made by the Commission shall not be subject to review or appeal before any Dominican court or other Dominican authority.

Any claimants who do not submit their claims to this Commission for adjudication on or before December 31, 1917, shall be deemed to have forfeited and relinquished all rights to such claims. Claims shall be submitted to the Commission in the form and manner prescribed by the Commission.

For the prosecution of its business the Commission is vested with the powers of Dominican courts to subpoena and compel the attendance of witnesses; to administer oaths and examine witnesses under oath; to punish contempt and perjury; to call for the presentation of documentary evidence, public or private; and to these ends its orders shall be binding on all Dominican authorities. Such assistance as may be necessary to attain any of its objects will be rendered to the Commission by the police agencies of the Dominican Government and if required, by the forces of the Military Government.

Any person who refuses or neglects to appear before the Commission when subpoenaed, or who refuses to produce any documentary evidence in his possession when such evidence is called for by the Commission, or who attempts improperly to influence the Commission or to obstruct its proceedings in any way, shall be guilty of contempt. Any person who gives false testimony before the Commission, under oath, shall be guilty of perjury. Any person who signs a name other than his own on any document submitted to the Commission shall be guilty of forgery. Any person who signs any voucher, receipt, certificate or other document representing a claim against the Dominican Republic, in which any false statement is made to the prejudice of the Dominican Republic, shall be guilty of falsification with intent to defraud. The Commission shall try and pass judgment upon all such cases; and the offenders, upon conviction of any such offenses, shall be punishable by a fine not less than fifty dollars ($50) nor more than five thousand dollars ($5,000) or by imprisonment for not less than one (1) month nor more than five (5) years, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the Commission.

The Commission shall consider as a notification only any claim heretofore submitted to or filed with any Commission or official appointed for the purpose of receiving and recording such claims, or which may have been presented to any other office of the Dominican Government; provided, however, that any claimant or interested party who may so desire shall be permitted, upon making written application and renunciation to the Commission, to withdraw in whole or part any claim or document supporting such claims filed by him prior to the creation of this Commission; provided further that the Commission shall, prior to the return of any such claim or document, cancel same by appropriate notation thereon in such manner as to render it of no further value as a claim.

The Commission shall not consider nor approve for payment, in whole or in part, any expenditures made for the purpose of or in connection with a revolutionary movement against a legally constituted government of the Dominican Republic.

lic, or any claim representing money, materials or supplies furnished in support of such revolution, unless so furnished in submission to force majeure, of which the Commission shall be the final judge.

Such travel as may be required in the performance of the duties of the Commission is hereby authorized. Any member of the Commission appointed from abroad shall be entitled to salary from the date of leaving his home for Santo Domingo and up to the date upon which he could arrive at his home after dissolution of the Commission, using the first available transportation in either case. Members of the Commission appointed from abroad shall also be reimbursed for their actual and necessary travel expenses in coming to and returning from Santo Domingo, provided that such expenses shall represent only the travel from their homes and return thereto by the most direct route.

During its life the offices of the Commission shall be open for the transaction of business during the regular office hours observed in the Dominican Government offices on all days excepting Sundays and legal holidays.

The Commission shall cease to exist when the object for which it is created shall have been attained.

The Dominican Claims Commission to Admiral Knapp

SANTO DOMINGO, August 11, 1917.

In compliance with paragraph 6 of Executive Order No. 65 of the Military Government of Santo Domingo, dated July 9, 1917, the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917 respectfully submits the following memoranda and recommendation regarding the means of liquidating the awards upon claims approved by the Commission.

In its study of this subject the Commission has given due consideration to the three essential points:

First: The amount of the floating indebtedness;

Second: The resources of the Government; and Third: The requirements of the Government for ordinary annual expenditures.

The total amount of the floating indebtedness cannot be ascertained with any degree of certainty at present, and the total amount of awards to be made by the Commission will remain an unknown factor until all of the claims have been presented and adjudicated. The reports of previous commissions, and the records of claims filed subsequently with other offices of the Government, indicate that the total of such claims is approximately $12,000,000. Without in any sense presuming to prejudge any of such claims, the Commission is inclined to accept the opinion of others who have made a study of the matter and whose conclusions are that, in all probability, all of the claims against the Dominican Government can be equitably liquidated within a total of not to exceed $5,000,000.

The resources of the Government consist of customs and internal revenues; other sources of revenue may be developed but the levying of new taxes should, and doubtless will, permit modification and reduction of existing customs and internal revenue tariffs. The average amounts per month received by the Government from its customs revenue since 1910, in round figures show as follows: 1911, $160,000; 1912, $169,000; 1913, $139,000; 1914, $97,000; 1915, $137,000; 1916, $139,000; and during the six months, January to June, 1917, $194,000. Since 1912, $30,000 per month has been required from customs revenues for the payment of interest and amortization of the loan of $1,500,000 of that year. That loan will be canceled within a few months, and the $30,000 per month heretofore applied to it will again revert to the Government. The internal revenues prior to July 1916 averaged about $50,000 per month; from July to December 1916 they averaged $63,000 per month; and from January to June 1917 the average was $96,000 per month. A very conservative estimate for the future is that the customs revenue (accruing to the Government) will not average less than $160,000 per month, and the internal revenues not less than $90,000 per month, a total of $250,000 per month or $3,000,000 per year.

The present budget, exclusive of the items which have been eliminated and inclusive of those which have been specially appropriated by the Military Government, provides for an annual expenditure of approximately $2,120,000. The Commission assumes that a new budget will be prepared in the near future and that provision will be made for certain necessary purposes not heretofore covered by appropriation, so that the budgetary requirement should be estimated at not less than $2,500,000 per year. Our conclusions are therefore based upon an estimated income of not less than $3,000,000 per year, a probable budget of $2,500,000, thus leaving $500,000 or more per year available for the service of a loan or bond issue.

Apparently the only means of liquidating the awards on claims to be made by the Commission will be the issuance of bonds, as it is obvious that such liquidation could not be made from current surplus revenues without discrimination and preferential treatment. In the opinion of the Commission, the adjudication of claims and the awards made thereon will constitute incurring new indebtedness within the meaning of the provisions of the American Dominican Convention of 1907 and the issuance of bonds for the liquidation of awards will therefore require the consent and approval of the United States Government. In order to make such bonds acceptable and attractive to investors, the payment of interest and amount required for amortization would have to be provided for from the revenues of the Dominican Government, preferably the customs revenue. The Dominican Government would have to authorize, and the United States Government instruct, the General Receiver of Dominican Customs to segregate and pay the required amounts each month to such agency as may be decided upon as the custodian of the sinking fund for amortization and the medium through which interest payment would be made.

The Commission recommends that the Government arrange for the issuance of bonds in the principal amount of not to exceed $5,000,000, such part thereof as may be necessary to be applied to the liquidation of awards upon claims to be approved by the Commission. Such bonds to be in coupon form, not registered, to bear interest at the rate of 5% per annum, interest payable semiannually on January 1, and July 1, the bonds to be dated and draw interest from January 1, 1918, and to mature on January 1, 1938, but to be redeemable at par on any first day of January beginning January 1, 1919, in such amounts as the funds available in the sinking fund provided for the purpose will permit, the bonds to be redeemed to be drawn by lot and when so redeemed to be permanently retired and canceled; the payments into the sinking fund for the purpose of amortization to be not less than five per cent of the principal amount each year.

Two methods of issuing such bonds are suggested: first, by advertising and inviting bids, and second, by issuing the bonds direct to creditors in settlement of the awards.

The first method would mean, in effect, selling the bonds to bankers and others at the prices offered by them; the Government would then be in position to pay the amounts of the awards to the creditors in cash, and this method would doubtless prove more satisfactory to the greatest number of creditors. It is considered advisable to call attention to the fact, however, that the specific amount which will be required cannot now be determined and that feature may offer some difficulty in placing the bonds; also that, in view of the large bond issues now being made by various countries and the condition of the financial markets of the world it is possible the bonds offered by the Dominican Government may not attract advantageous offers; and also that, if the ordinary procedure is followed, the negotiation of the sale through any one bank or firm of bankers would involve considerable expense. It is deemed proper, in this connection, to suggest that if this plan is adopted it might be possible to obtain the assistance of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, Washington; it is understood that the Bureau has sold most of the bonds issued by the Government of Porto Rico in a very satisfactory manner and with a considerable saving in expense.

The second method would enable the Government to issue only the amount of bonds actually required for this specific purpose, and would avoid much of the expense incidental to selling the bonds as suggested in the first method; it would also have the effect of placing the bonds in the hands of Dominican citizens thus giving them a greater direct interest in the affairs of their Government. The objections to this method are: first, the possibility that some of the creditors might object or decline to accept the bonds; and second, the probability that the small holders of such bonds would find themselves at the mercy of local speculators unless the Government took some precautionary measures to protect them. It is believed that the great majority of creditors would accept the bonds, and that it would be practicable for the Government to protect the small holders against speculators by providing for the investment of surplus treasury funds in the purchase of such bonds in such amounts as might be possible and necessary. Provided the Government can afford this protection, the Commission recommends the second method in preference to the first.

The attached memorandum shows the amounts which would be required annually for the payment of interest and amortization of a bond issue such as suggested; the expenses incidental to the operation and the interest which would accrue on the sinking fund are not shown as they would more or less offset each other

Respectfully submitted.

*The Secretary of the Navy to the Secretary of State*NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 15, 1917.

The Secretary of the Navy presents his compliments to the Honorable the Secretary of State, and desires that I forward herewith for the information of the Department of State certain correspondence from the Military Governor of Santo Domingo and the Military Representative of the United States in Haiti, under date of July 30, 1917, relative to the inauguration of the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917, and desires that the enclosed correspondence be returned to this Department when it has served its purpose in the Department of State.

Very respectfully,

C. BELKNAP
Lieutenant Commander, U. S. N.

[Inclosure]Admiral Knapp to the Secretary of the Navy

SANTO DOMINGO, July 30, 1917.

With the arrival from Puerto Rico on Saturday of Mr. Martin Travieso, Jr., the only member of the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917 who up to that time was not present in Santo Domingo, the entire personnel was assembled in this city and ready to begin work. It was accordingly arranged to have the Commission sworn in by the Supreme Court of Santo Domingo this morning, and later to have the Secretary and clerical force sworn in by the President of the Commission.

It was my desire to make the occasion as impressive as circumstances permitted, and I therefore invited the Governor of the Province of Santo Domingo, the Archbishop, the American Chargé and several Dominican gentlemen having important administrative posts, to be present. I was myself present with all the members of my staff, and the commander of the Second Provisional Brigade with members of his staff, was also present. The officers of the Navy and Marine Corps present included among their number all who are now administering Dominican Government Departments. I would gladly have included many more people, and especially all of the diplomatic corps, but the very small capacity of the room in which the Supreme Court holds its sessions prevented a larger attendance than was present. The proceedings were very simple, but dignified and impressive. When the oaths had been taken and subscribed to by the members of the Commission, the presiding Justice made a few remarks in excellent taste in which he assured the Military Government that the Supreme Court stood solidly behind it in its efforts for the betterment of conditions in Santo Domingo. This was a most gratifying public announcement. After a short reply by myself, the assembly adjourned to the room where the Commission is to sit and witnessed the administration of the oath to the Secretary of the Commission and the clerical force. Upon the conclusion of this part of the proceedings, Mr. J. R. Edwards, President of the Commission, made a short address to which I replied, which ended the ceremonies.

I am very glad to announce the beginning of the labors of the Commission which are of the greatest importance for the welfare of the country. I had hoped that the Commission might have started its work sooner, but circumstances beyond my control have prevented its inauguration before this time.

Whereas, in Executive Order No. 60, dated June 26, 1917, "The Dominican Claims Commission of 1917" was created for the purpose of investigating and adjusting "all outstanding claims which had their origin after the adjustment made to conform with the terms of the American-Dominican Convention of February 8, 1907"; and

Whereas, it is essential for the guidance of the Dominican Claims Commission and for the information of the public in general to fix the specific date of the plan of adjustment above referred to; and

No. 275

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Santo Domingo, December 15, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917 has registered, up to and including November 30, 4256 claims with a nominal value of $5,854,662. There are in addition about 700 claims presented that have not been registered. It is thought that the total number of claims will be greatly increased by December 31, the last date upon which claims may be presented.

The Commission has made every effort, through a daily notice in the local press and direct correspondence with all claimants listed with previous Commissions, to bring to the attention of everyone having accounts against the Government the fact of the existence of the Commission and the nature of the claims it is empowered to consider and adjudicate. The following American claimants listed in the report of the Johnston Commission (refer to Legation's No. 71 of March 2, 1916),² have not as yet been heard from by the present Commission:

Johnson y Johnson	362. 57
Parke Davis & Co	701. 84
Dominican Trading Co.....	4, 934. 34
Moore and Company	8, 265. 80

The following claims, brought to the attention of the Commission under instructions from the Department, and through the medium of the Foreign Office, will be duly presented by me on December 31 for the purpose of reserving the right of the claimants to properly present their claims at a later date and in the manner and form prescribed by the Commission:

American Trading Company
Dominican Trading Company
J. L. Mann
A. G. MacDonald

In this connection I call to your attention General Rule No. 1 adopted by the Commission in regard to the presentation by foreign representatives of the claims of their nationals, copy and translation of which is herewith enclosed. I respectfully suggest that the Department notify the parties above-named of my intended action and advise them to immediately supplant this action in the proper way.

The Claims Commission has not actually arrived at a definite adjudication of any of the claims submitted to it, and it is thought that the nominal value of the claims now registered will be easily reduced to $2,000,000 in the final settlement. The work of the Commission is very exhaustive, and involves the examination of nearly all of the Government records. There is every evidence of fraud in the preparation of many accounts. This is especially true of salary claims for military service and supply claims during the term of office of ex-President Bordas, the evidence acquired pointing to collusion and culpability on the part of high Government officials.

The Claims Commission has already sentenced one witness for a jail term of two years for perjury, and a claimant has been found guilty of contempt and sentenced to a fine of $1000 and a jail term of one year. Both of these sentences have had an exceedingly good moral effect on the public, and in general the serious character of the personnel and work of the Commission, together with the rigid rules established for the substantiation of claims presented for its consideration have served in a large measure to deter the presentation of many fictitious accounts, but which would undoubtedly have been settled under the old régime in this Republic.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, February 6, 1917.

SIR: Referring to the several telegrams which have passed between the Department and this Legation on the subject of interest due on prior lien bonds of the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Co., since, and including Department's telegram of December 14, 1916, 5 p. m.,² I have the honor to report as follows:

As stated in my telegram of January 3, 1917, 1 p. m., I brought the subject to the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs by memorandum dated December 18, which I presented in person, and of which I enclose herewith duplicate copies.

On that occasion the Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me that, by reason of the absence from Quito of the Minister of Hacienda, it would be necessary to delay answering until his return. He returned on Saturday evening December 30, and on January 2, I again brought the matter to the attention of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, who agreed to answer within two days. This time was extended, at his request, until Tuesday, January 9, to enable the Minister of Hacienda to study the subject. On January 12, I again called upon the Minister to urge an answer, and was promised that the answer would be delivered in the afternoon of that day. It was so delivered, and duplicate copies of it together with translation are herewith enclosed.

On January 13, 10 a. m., I telegraphed the Department the substance of its contents, wherein I said that owing to the unsatisfactory answer of Ecuador, I would immediately prepare and file a note with the Foreign Office, restating the case, and basing the note upon the telegram of the Department dated December 31, 7 p. m.² Accordingly, on January 15, I prepared and presented my note No. 219 to Foreign Office, of which duplicate copies are herewith enclosed. To that note, the Minister for Foreign Affairs replied in his note No. 10, of January 16, 1917, and I am enclosing herewith duplicate copies of same, together with translation.

The offer by Ecuador to contribute 1,000 tons of coal at 57 sucres per ton towards the payment of said interest, provided the railway company would pay the balance, was telegraphed by the local office to the New York office of the railway about January 18, but no reply had been received up to yesterday afternoon. In the absence of Mr. Norton, the controller of the railway, Mr. Dobbie, and Dr. Leroux, its general counsel, have been in frequent consultation with me on this subject and have been of much assistance.

I regret very much that the results of our efforts in the matter, have, thus far, been so disappointing; but in reviewing the several steps taken in the case, I am unable to discover where I could have taken a different course to advantage.

I therefore submit the foregoing report and respectfully await the further instructions of the Department.

[Inclosure 1—Memorandum]

Minister Hartman to the Minister of Foreign Relations

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, December 18, 1916.

The American Minister respectfully salutes his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs and has the honor to submit for the information and consideration of his excellency the following data:

Upon receipt of his excellency's note No. 48, of November 4, 1916, the American Minister transmitted to his Government, by mail, copies of that note and of the Legation's note No. 210 to his excellency, of date October 3, 1916.

On December 16, 1916, the Legation received a cable from the Department of State at Washington in relation to the subject of said notes.

My Government is particularly gratified at that portion of your excellency's said note which follows:

"After the Government was changed, as your excellency is well aware, the Esmeraldas revolution having been in fact ended, a new, reasonable and economic budget having been issued, which will be in force after January 1, 1917, it is very probable that the economic situation will be adjusted without having to appeal for a loan, and when this occurs, Ecuador will be able, and that is what my Government desires, to meet its obligations fully and completely. The President and his Cabinet have the firm disposition to do this, and I hope that this attention will be accomplished to the satisfaction of all those who have interest in the national revenues."

Though not so definitely stated, the views expressed in the foregoing quotation appear to be in harmony with those orally expressed by his excellency to the American Minister in the interview at the Foreign Office a few days before said note of November 4 was written, in which interview his excellency expressed the hope and belief that in January the Government of Ecuador would resume deposits. This fair and just attitude of the Government of Ecuador in the premises is especially gratifying to the Government of the United States, because a duly certified statement has been presented to the Department of State by the President of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company, stating that, owing to unfavorable exchange and the great cost of coal, the railway company will not be able to pay interest on the prior lien bonds in January as it did last year. Entertaining, as it does, a most friendly feeling for the Government and people of Ecuador, and earnestly desiring that nothing may occur to injure or impair the credit of Ecuador, the Government of the United States sincerely hopes that the Government of Ecuador will be able to make payment of the interest on said bonds in January, in accordance with the above-expressed desires of his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The American Minister believes that the Government of Ecuador will concur with the Government of the United States in considering that it would be most regrettable if payment of the interest on prior lien bonds should go by default.

In view of the deep interest felt by the Government of the United States in the welfare of Ecuador, and of the common desire of both Governments to maintain and strengthen the credit of Ecuador, the American Minister will take pleasure in transmitting to his Government, by cable at the earliest possible moment after notification thereof by his excellency, the news of the prompt payment of the interest on said bonds by the Government of Ecuador.

Fully appreciating the honorable intentions and desires of the Government of Ecuador, so well expressed by his excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the American Minister indulges the hope that those desires may soon be realized.

[Inclosure 2—Memorandum—Translation]

The Minister of Foreign Relations to Minister Hartman

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Quito, January 12, 1917.

In reply to the memorandum of his excellency, the Minister of the United States in Quito, the Minister of Foreign Relations, after duly greeting him, has the honor to repeat what has been stated in several previous communications to that Legation, namely; that it is the intention of the Government, which coincides with the national will and with the international juridical rules and customs, not to discuss through diplomatic channels anything relating to the private contracts it may have entered into with private parties or persons. This general doctrine is the same it has observed in the particular case of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway, and which has been followed invariably, with unusual uniformity, by the Ecuadorean Governments and by the different Ministers who have held the portfolio of Foreign Relations.

The Government of the United States which, on many occasions, has made statements that honor it, with respect to the rights of the weaker nations, statements which the Secretary of State has recently repeated, in so clear and commendable a manner, in the name of the President, can not ignore the right Ecuador has in its desire to deal, on the only grounds possible—those of simple justice—with the different discussions that have arisen between it and the railway company or its legal representatives.

Since, neither in the original contract, nor in the successive reformatory contracts with the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company, no foreign government took part; since it is an invariable rule in this country not to admit of diplomatic intervention in agreements of that kind; since there was explicitly rejected a certain proposed protocol, in which the American Secretary of State was made to figure, even though only in a passive character and extra-officially, in connection with these affairs of the Southern Railway; since, only the other day, the Minister of Foreign Relations stated to his excellency, the Minister of the United States, that the attitude of the Ecuadorean Government had not changed with respect thereto, because it could not change; his excellency, the Minister of the United States can not wonder at the surprise the Ecuadorean Government has felt at the renewed attempt to employ a method of procedure it does not consider the most adequate for many reasons of justice and convenience.

If this Ministry answers the memorandum of the 18th of December last in the form in which it does, this reply can have no other character than that of an unofficial communication, since it is given, very largely, on account of the courtesy due to the very worthy Mr. Charles S. Hartman.

The Government's purpose, set forth in an official communication from this Ministry, No. 48 of November 4, 1916,³ has not changed; its firm and resolute intention, its irrevocable will is to comply with its obligations, with all its obligations, however burdensome they may have been in their constitution, and of complying therewith in the shortest possible time, according to the measure of its ability.

It has been stated to his excellency, Mr. Hartman, and to-day it is regarded as a great honor to repeat to him, that the present Ecuadorean Government entertains hopes that the financial situation of the country will improve, from the first day of the present month of January; that is to say: from the date on which the new budget became effective; and it is a pleasure to inform the Minister that those hopes, up to date, can not be held to have been frustrated, since, as the month of January has just begun, it is not yet possible to talk of immediate payments, since it will first be necessary to collect the money before disbursing it. Will three, four, six, ten weeks be necessary to meet such and such a payment? Probably; we can not give assurance thereof.

With respect to the particular case of the deposit for the prior lien bonds, it is to be observed that the president of the railway company has requested of the Government its mere assistance as such for the January payment; it is not therefore comprehensible how, at the same time, the company should have addressed the American State Department explaining something only pertaining to the Ecuadorean Government, namely, that, on account of the present unfavorable rate of exchange and the high price of coal, the said company is not in a position to pay the interest on the prior lien bonds as it did last year.

No one is more interested than the Ecuadorean Government in maintaining and strengthening its credit; and for that very reason it will spare no effort to assure it permanently and definitely.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, January 15, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's memorandum dated January 12, 1917, relating to the inquiry submitted by me to your excellency in my memorandum dated December 18, 1916, as to the approximate date when the Government of Ecuador would be in position to pay interest due January 1, 1917, on the Guayaquil and Quito prior lien railway bonds, and resume daily deposits pursuant to contract, and in accordance with its laudable purposes, so clearly announced to me by your excellency in the interview with your excellency referred to in my said memorandum of December 18, 1916.

I was greatly gratified, but not surprised, to read again the clearly expressed unalterable purpose of your excellency's Government to meet all Ecuador's obligations as soon as possible, but I note, with considerable disappointment, that your excellency has overlooked stating in said memorandum any date, either definite or approximate, when the interest due January 1, 1917, on the prior lien railway bonds will be paid, or daily deposits resumed.

I have of course assumed that the failure to furnish this information was not intentional on the part of your excellency, but was inadvertent, and I am therefore respectfully calling your excellency's attention to the apparent oversight, and, at the same time, I have the honor to present for the consideration of your excellency's Government, some additional views of my Government on this important subject, which were received January 1, 1917, by cable from the Department of State. I therefore, by way of supplement to my said memorandum of December 18, have the further honor respectfully to impress upon your excellency's Government the necessity of the payment of the interest on the prior lien bonds, due on January 1, 1917, as soon as possible after said date, and to suggest to your excellency that definite assurances that said interest would be paid at a fixed date ought properly to be cabled to the council of foreign bondholders by your excellency's Government.

In addition to the great desire which the Government of the United States has in seeing that these American interests are given that adequate and proper protection, to which they are entitled, by the Ecuadorean Government, its feeling of sincere friendship for Ecuador compels it to point out the very unfortunate position in which she would place herself if she made default in this payment—a position which might indeed lead to many complications and especially to the impairment of her credit.

In bringing this note to a close, it gives me great pleasure to express my sincere appreciation of the sentiments of personal friendship for me, so generously stated by your excellency, and to assure your excellency that those sentiments of personal esteem are fully reciprocated by me towards your excellency, and that I personally and officially deeply desire the welfare and prosperity of your excellency, and the Government and people of Ecuador.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Quito, January 16, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to make an answer to the note No. 219, dated yesterday, in which your excellency insists regarding the approximate indication, by my Government, of the date on which it will be able to carry out the payment of interest on the prior lien bonds of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company, due January 1, 1917, and also asks assurances that the daily deposits will be hereafter effected in accordance with the contracts.

Your excellency adds that since the memorandum of December 18, already answered in similar form by me, your excellency has received instructions from the Government of the United States to point out to my Government the necessity that the payment of the interest on the bonds, due January 1, 1917, be made as soon as possible, and that the dates on which payments are to be made, be fixed, the Ecuadoran Government having to cable its decision to the council of foreign bondholders.

I have expressed to your excellency in my previous communications, in accordance with the doctrine very justly observed by my predecessors in the portfolio of Foreign Relations, the surprise with which my Government sees the intervention of the American Legation in a matter which exclusively relates to fulfilment and interpretation of a contract.

I might, within the strict right which Ecuador enjoys, excuse myself from making an answer to the concrete points contained in the communication of your excellency; this case not being one of denial of justice, it cannot be explained, in the light of international law and of usage justly and reasonably adopted by civilized countries, that a foreign Legation may officially subject a Government to interrogations of the kind contained in the note to which I answer.

This attitude is all the more surprising, since it is adopted just now, when the Ecuadoran Government has just reestablished peace, and has adopted as its rule the fulfilment of its obligations—all the obligations which belong to it—and when, in order to achieve that end, it has adopted for itself a system of economies, which may enable it to do that promptly.

In previous years no deposits were made nor coupons paid, and nevertheless, the intervention of the American Legation was never so pressing as now; indeed, Mr. Minister, I am unable to understand what is the reason for the proceeding now taken, of asking immediate answers and demanding the fixing of terms incapable of extension.

As to the balance, I repeat what has been said every time that I have discussed this point with your excellency: the Government is disposed to comply with all its proper obligations; but not to fix dates nor give other explanations than those already stated.

The Secretary of State to Minister Hartman

[Telegram]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 13, 1917, 5 p. m.

Your January 13, 10 a. m. and January 18, 11 a. m. For your information. Ecuadoran Chargé d'Affaires called at Department January 18 and challenged statement of railroad company that it could not pay interest on prior lien bonds at this time on account of company's present financial position. He stated that in report of Price, Waterhouse and Company, of January 1916, [sic] it was made clear that management of railroad was not on economical basis and that for that reason company was not in position to pay interest as it did last year. He further desired that a commission composed of one engineer, one financial expert and one legal expert be sent to investigate all controversies between Government and railroad. The Secretary of State informed Mr. Carbo that payment by Ecuadorean Government of interest on prior lien bonds and commencement of daily deposits was of first importance and that after this was done it would then be time enough to have investigation of outstanding controversies and as to whether management of railroad company was not economical and that if proven that railroad company owed money to Government matter could then be adjusted. The Secretary of State impressed upon Mr. Carbo the importance of payment by Ecuadorean Government of interest and commencement of daily deposits at this time and stated that he insisted on this being done before any question of investigation was taken up.

Mr. Carbo may have misinterpreted this interview to his Government or have misconstrued statement by Secretary of State to mean that this Government would forego diplomatic action and not insist on Government meeting these obligations. You should take steps to correct any erroneous idea upon this point apparently entertained by authorities.

Advise Foreign Office that its reply to your note of January 15 is wholly unsatisfactory to Government of United States which finds ample warrant for its diplomatic intervention in the needed protection for large American interests threatened with destruction through failure of Government of Ecuador to respect its contractual obligations, and in the whole record of the dealings by that Government with these American interests. You will say that the railroad company finds itself unable to accept the offer of coal in part payment interest, and you will add that the Government of the United States in your note of January 15 attempted to point out to the Government of Ecuador in a most friendly manner the desirability of the early payment of the interest on the prior lien bonds of the Guayaquil and Quito Railroad Company and the wisdom of immediately cabling to the bondholders that the payments would be made promptly.

In giving this friendly advice to the Government of Ecuador, the Government of the United States did not consider it necessary to recall the arbitration proceeding of 1908⁴ to which the Government of the United States was a party, nor the contract of that year in which the Government of Ecuador bound itself in any event to make daily deposits for the payment of the interest on all railway bonds as these facts were too well understood to necessitate further mention, but it was clearly set forth that in the event of failure on the part of the Government of Ecuador, many complications might arise, notably the impairment of the Government's credit.

Besides sending this advice through the Legation at Quito, the Government of the United States took pains to impress upon the Chargé d'Affaires of Ecuador in Washington the necessity for the payment of the interest and commencement of daily deposits, on account of the American interests involved.

Four weeks have elapsed since this friendly advice was sent to the Government of Ecuador in the two ways outlined above and it is understood that neither has the interest on the prior lien bonds been paid nor the daily deposits been resumed in spite of the assurance given October 30, 1916.

In the absence of any definite assurances as to the time the interest will be paid or the daily deposits resumed, and in view of the statement of the Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Minister to the effect that the economic conditions of the Republic had greatly improved only one conclusion may be reached and that is that the Government of Ecuador is not willing to live up to her contractual obligations toward the Guayaquil and Quito Railroad Company, an American corporation, in which large American interests are involved, and is willing to permit through her default great losses to be occasioned to these American citizens.

Therefore the Government of the United States, unless a definite statement is received in the very near future as to the date when the interest will be paid and the deposits resumed, will be forced to give consideration to the question of taking such action as may be necessary properly to protect these American interests.

You may intimate orally to the Minister for Foreign Affairs that in no case will the Department give its approval to any loan by American bankers to Ecuador until interest is paid and daily deposits resumed.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, March 4, 1917, 1 p. m.

My February 17, 5 p. m. I now have reply to my note last Friday. The Minister for Foreign Affairs again denies right of diplomatic intervention, but reaffirms the unalterable purpose of Government of Ecuador to pay all its obligations as soon as possible. Referring to the demand that a definite time be fixed for payment of interest and resumption of deposits, he says that my note was transcribed to the Minister of Interior, who will very soon answer regarding that subject.

I have some hope that the Minister of the Interior will make satisfactory answer as to time of payment of interest and resumption of deposits, but realize the embarrassments under which Government of Ecuador labors not only in its shortage of money but in the attitude of the people toward the subject and their disposition to start a revolution on the slightest provocation.

In consultation with British Chargé d'Affaires, he informed me that he has [apparent omission] the advisability of Mr. Cooper, of the council of foreign bondholders, and some representative of Bankers Trust Company, coming to Quito to deal directly with the Ecuadorean Government on the subject of existing indebtedness and proposed loan. He says that he has been reliably informed that the Ecuadorean Government would agree to such a proposition. He also suggested to his Government that if this arrangement be agreed to, further diplomatic pressure by the United States might be held in abeyance pending negotiations.

SIR: Referring to my telegram of March 4, 1917, 1 p. m., and to other correspondence relating to the subject thereof, I have the honor to enclose herewith, duplicate copies of my note No. 227, dated February 16, 1917, and duplicate copies, together with translation, of note No. 37, dated February 28, 1917, from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in reply thereto. I especially desire to direct the attention of the Department to that portion of the note of the Minister of Foreign Affairs wherein he suggests or raises the question that Ecuador is not responsible for the failure of the arbitration of 1908, and leaves the implied impression that such a charge was made by me in my note. The Department will observe that instead of indicating a failure of the arbitration of 1908, I impliedly recognized its consummation in the following language, which is substantially the language used by the Department in its telegram of February 14, 1917, 5 p. m., to wit:

In giving this friendly advice to the Government of Ecuador, the Government of the United States did not consider it necessary to recall the arbitration proceeding of 1908, to which the Government of the United States was a party, etc.

Up to this date I have not received the report of the Minister of Public Works indicated in the note of the Minister of Foreign Affairs of February 28, 1917, and bearing the No. 37. As soon as it is received, I will forward it to the Department, and in the meantime will defer answering the note No. 37, of February 28, 1917, until further instructed by the Department.

MR. MINISTER: Referring again to my note No. 219, of January 15, 1917, and to your excellency's esteemed note No. 10, of January 16, 1917, in reply thereto, I have the honor respectfully to inform your excellency that the contents of both of said notes were promptly transmitted by me to my Government, and that I am now in receipt of telegraphic instructions from the Secretary of State relating to the subjects treated of in said notes, with which instructions I now have the honor to comply and submit their contents to your excellency:

The Government of the United States regards the reply of your excellency to my note of January 15, 1917, as wholly unsatisfactory to it, and it finds ample warrant for diplomatic intervention in the needed protection for large American interests, threatened with destruction through failure of the Government of Ecuador to respect its contractual obligations, and in the whole record of the dealings by that Government with the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Co.

The railway company finds itself unable to appreciate the offer of coal in part payment of interest due.

In my note of January 15, 1917, the Government of the United States attempted to point out to your excellency's Government, in a most friendly manner, the desirability of the early payment of the interest on the prior lien bonds of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Co., and the wisdom of immediately cabling to the bondholders that the payments would be made promptly. In giving this friendly advice to the Government of Ecuador, the Government of the United States did not consider it necessary to recall the arbitration proceeding of 1908, to which the Government of the United States was a party, nor the contract of that year, in which the Government of Ecuador bound itself in any event to make daily deposits for the payment of the interest on all railway bonds, as these facts were too well understood to necessitate further mention; but it was clearly set forth that, in the event of failure on the part of the Government of Ecuador, many complications might arise, notably the impairment of the Government's credit.

Besides sending this friendly advice through this Legation, the Government of the United States took pains to impress upon the Chargé d'Affaires of Ecuador in Washington the necessity for the payment of the interest, and commencement of daily deposits on account of the American interests involved. More than four weeks have elapsed since this friendly advice was given by my Government to the Government of Ecuador in the two ways outlined above, and it is understood by my Government that, neither has the interest on prior lien bonds been paid, nor the daily deposits been resumed, in spite of the assurances given October 30, 1916.

The Government of the United States feels that, in the absence of any definite assurances as to the time the interest will be paid, or the daily deposits resumed, and in view of the statement of your excellency to me to the effect that the economic conditions of the Republic had greatly improved, it can only reach one conclusion, and that is that the Government of Ecuador is not willing to live up to her contractual obligations toward the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Co., an American corporation in which large American interests are involved, and is willing to permit, through her default, great losses to be occasioned to these American citizens.

Therefore, the Government of the United States, unless a definite statement is received in the very near future as to the date when the interest will be paid and the deposits resumed, will be forced to give consideration to the question of taking such action as may be necessary properly to protect these American interests.

I therefore entertain the sincere hope that your excellency's Government will, under all the circumstances, find it quite convenient to arrange for the prompt payment of said interest, and the resumption of daily deposits, and that I may receive early notice thereof, for transmission to my Government.

The Minister of Foreign Relations to Minister Hartman

No. 37

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Quito, February 28, 1917.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: The note number 219, [227] of February 16, addressed to this office by your excellency, has been received. In that note, after informing me that your excellency has transmitted by cable to the Government of Washington a résumé of the note of that Legation, No. 219, and of mine, No. 10, your excellency advises me that, therefore, your excellency's Government has informed you that it regards my note as wholly unsatisfactory, and that it finds itself amply warranted diplomatically to intervene in order to protect large American interests, which are threatened through failure of the Government of Ecuador to comply with its obligations toward the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Co. Your excellency adds that the railway company finds itself unable to appreciate the offer of coal which was made to it, in part payment of interest due it. Your excellency tells me that more than four weeks have elapsed since a friendly suggestion was made to Ecuador by the American Government to the effect that the Government of Ecuador should resume daily deposits and payment of interest, and that in spite of the assurances given, your excellency's Government knows that none of them has taken place.

Your excellency closes notifying that unless a definite date for the payment of interest or resumption of daily deposits is fixed, the Government of the United States, in view of the statement which I made to your excellency as to the hope entertained by my Government relating to the improvement of the economic conditions of the Republic, will reach the conclusion that the Ecuadorean Government does not wish to live up to its promises regarding its obligations toward the railway company, an American corporation in which large American interests are involved. Therefore, the Government of the United States, unless a definite statement is received as soon as possible as to the date when the interest will be paid and the deposits resumed, will be forced to take such action as may be necessary to protect the American interests.

Your excellency's note, therefore, contains two parts: One devoted to asserting that the Government of Washington regards that it has the right diplomatically to intervene in Ecuador on account of the contract entered into by an American company with the Government of this country for the construction and operation of a railroad; and the other confines itself peremptorily to demand the payment of the debts which, it is said, Ecuador owes the company, having to state the date in which said payment will be made, because if that is not done your excellency's Government will take certain action.

The position taken by your excellency in the name of the American Government surprises me, inasmuch as it relates to the legality of diplomatic intervention in this matter. In reply I have to express, with deepest repugnance, of course—that the opinion of my Government is entirely opposed to that one. This Ministry in fact, feels the necessity of rejecting the legality of said diplomatic intervention, and with much more reason that of the later position announced by your excellency, and it (the Ministry) rejects them because it regards that to accept them, even tacitly, would be contrary not only to the national dignity and its sovereignty, but also to the rules of law and justice which govern those matters in international life.

It is the matter of a contract of private law and of mutual obligations derived therefrom, and the fact that one of the contracting parties is a person of public law can not give the contract the character of a contract of public law. The doors of the courts of justice are open for the railway company or any other third person to demand access to the Ecuadorean Treasury, if it believes that the latter does not comply with its obligations; but it (the company) has no reason to appeal, on account of a controversy or even in the event of an evident failure, unless denial of justice might have taken place, to the American Government in order that that Government intervene in favor of the company's interests.

Diplomatic intervention in a case like this would not be justified in any way, and much less the action of the American Government in favor of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Co., in an action which your excellency announces as a possible one. Among the fundamental principles of international law, one of the most excellent is that which establishes equality of nations, excluding power, prestige and influence available; any action on the part of a powerful country that would pretend, in a given moment, to demand in a coercive and peremptory manner, the payment of a debt which is not even between nations, but the results from a contract signed by the nation and a private party, would be contrary to that principle. If it should be otherwise, if perhaps, I desire to believe it improbable, it would be a matter of making use of national aid to help the private contracting party on his just or unjust pretensions against a nation also contracting, then that would mean to establish by that fact as principle and rule the ruin of weak countries and their absorption by the powerful ones, and if this should occur it would be better to forget that the law and only the law should govern the relations of countries.

I do not think that President Wilson's Government which in a very important document of recent date just declared, in a noble manner, that

"the interest of the Government and people of the United States, in the means which might be adopted to relieve the damages caused to small and weak peoples is as deep and sincere as that of another people and Government could be,"

I do not believe, I say, that that Government intends to ignore, because we of Ecuador are concerned, that rule of the illustrious Hamilton, which Drago reproduced, according to which "the contracts entered into between a nation and private parties, can not be the subject of a compulsory force."⁵

Mr. Root, the eminent American Secretary of State, stated in a notable speech that

"to try to obtain by means of force the payment of debts resulting from contracts, is equivalent to justifying abuses, the unavoidable result of which is far worse and more lamentable to humanity than if the payment of the debts of one nation were delayed. We regard, he added, that the use of the army or navy of a great power to cause pressure upon a weak nation, on account of contracts entered into with a private party, tends to encourage the exploitation of the urgent necessities of a country and to attack its sovereignty."

The form of intervention,—I imagine of course that your excellency could not refer to coercive and forcible measures,—does not change the essential character of the impairment of the sovereignty of the country bound with the contract. If the United States have courageously and energetically supported the principle of non-official intervention for the payment of contract debts of States, when the big countries of Europe have tried to demand by force from weak countries of America, payments of that nature, I suppose that they (the United States) will not desire to be inconsistent by using means of pressure to enforce themselves in this country the same thing which they condemned in the other ones.

I have understood the value of the citation appearing in the note to which I refer, relating to the arbitration of 1908; but whatever may be the effect to be obtained from the lack of success of that arbitration, I beg leave to record that the failure should not be attributed in any way to Ecuador: this country could not abdicate its dignity and its sovereignty, by waiving a form prescribed by its institutions, a form which, in other respects, neither concerned the essence of the question submitted to judgement nor the main part of the arbitration.

I do not find the present attitude of the American Government in harmony with the policy observed by the Government of your excellency, a policy which was set forth by the Secretary of State Fish in 1871:

"Our policy followed long time since and permanently observed, has been that of avoiding the formal intervention of the Government, in matters relating to claims based upon contracts, except in cases of injuries and damages which common law calls injustice and regards as inflicted by force and not as the result of voluntary obligations or contracts. In contract cases, the practice of the American Government has been limited to permitting its Minister to exercise friendly good offices, recommending the claim to an equitable examination by the debtor, without compromising the Government with any future action."

In 1881, Secretary Blaine established as a universally accepted and practiced rule that "a person who voluntarily compromises himself in a contract with the Government of a foreign country, is submitted, in order to secure compensation of all complaints he might allege or losses he might sustain resulting from the contract, to the laws of the country of the Government or the citizens with whom he contracted."

The representatives of the United States to the Third Pan American Conference at Rio Janeiro in 1906, had, among their instructions, the following ones, which give honor to the American Government:

"It has been for a long time the permanent policy of the United States not to use force to obtain the payment of ordinary contract debts of other Governments to citizens. We have felt that to use force with such a view was incompatible with the respect to the independent sovereignty of the other members of the family of nations, a most important principle of international law, and which is a guaranty of weak peoples against oppression of strong ones."⁶

After having set forth the general doctrine on the matter, a doctrine which has been especially observed by your excellency's Government, I do not believe that those general and noble principles of justice and law may or should be broken in the present case; Ecuador does not wish nor ever intended to cause the least damage to the legitimate interests of the railway company; it is her intention scrupulously to comply with the obligations imposed upon her by the respective contracts, as far as she can; the diplomatic intervention in matters relating to the railway, I repeat, is not legal because no denial of justice exists. The failure of the arbitration of 1908 is not due to it (Ecuador). It is necessary also that the company comply with its obligations; it has not up to date complied with its obligations in a satisfactory manner. Until the mutual claims between the Government and the company are determined it is not possible to talk of failure on the part only of the Government of Ecuador, nor of damages sustained only by the company, because it, being the manager and operator, is more properly bound to carry out the payment of debts and coupons, and not to take for itself alone the profits leaving only the responsibilities to Ecuador. If the American Government would perhaps intervene in these matters, that should be perhaps with a view that the American citizens, of the railway company, fulfill their obligations toward the bondholders and the Ecuadorean Government in a proper and full way.

As to the essence of the note to which I refer, notwithstanding the statement made in my previous note, as to the effect that no dates or terms could be fixed for the payments and deposits, I have the honor to inform your excellency that your note has been transcribed to the Minister of Public Works, who announces a reply, which will be received by your excellency as soon as possible.

The hopes which my Government entertains, regarding the improvement of the economic conditions of the Republic, can not serve as a pretext to allege that the Ecuadorean Government does not wish to live up to her contract obligations toward the railway company, and much less to serve as a basis to imagine that a big or small failure in this regard can be intentional; from the fact that those hopes were stated, no assurance of immediate and necessary nature may be inferred, respecting their realization and much less under the present conditions of ineffectiveness of the commerce and the consequent and unavoidable lessening of every custom income.

In other respects, the responsibility on account of losses and damages, never can, in accordance with the doctrine of the Institute of International Law, which is the reasonable and universally accepted one, be considered established by the sole claims of the one party to that contract who declares himself as the victim, as it occurs in the present case of the railway company; the Government of Ecuador has examined the accounts of the company and has objected to the debts and their amount; it has believed and so has stated on repeated occasions, that the company has not complied with its obligations, neither as the constructor of the railroad, nor as the partner of the State in its operation; hence it is necessary that the mutual claims be previously ascertained in order to be able to talk of damages caused to only one of the parties by the other one and to allege denial of justice.

For the responsibilities which may result to my Government, on account of the announcement contained in the note which I answer, I have the honor to inform your excellency that I am of the opinion that the communications exchanged between that Legation and this Ministry, regarding the railway from Guayaquil to Quito, be given the publicity which the matter requires and that, in consequence, this Ministry reserves to itself the authority of publishing them whenever it regards it proper.

On this opportunity I extend to your excellency the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Quito, September 3, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor respectfully to invite the Department's attention to its telegram of February 13, 1917, 5 p. m., and to my telegram of February 17, 1917, 5 p. m., and other correspondence relating to the failure of the Ecuadorean Government to pay overdue interest on Guayaquil and Quito Railway bonds and to resume daily deposits.

I respectfully point out to the Department that in spite of repeated assurances from the Foreign Office that a definite statement from the Minister of Hacienda as to when deposits could and would be resumed, would soon be forthcoming, no such statement has been made.

Since receiving and examining the President's message to Congress, and the recent reports of the Ministers of the Interior and of Hacienda, I think the reason for the failure of the Minister of Hacienda to furnish the reply requested by me is apparent.

Those documents show that from July 1916 to June 30, 1917, there was expended for public works the sum of 2,054,101.69 sucres. Of this amount the sum of 727,817.31 sucres was devoted to the sanitation of Guayaquil and 1,127,552.75 sucres to new railway construction. And the report of the Minister of Hacienda for the fiscal year 1916 shows a net cash balance of 863,692.96 sucres after the payment of all expenses. This being the case it is apparent that, when I presented my memorandum of December 18, 1916, and my note No. 219, of January 15, 1917 (enclosures in my despatch No. 205, February 6, 1917),⁷ the Government of Ecuador had on hand much more than sufficient money in the Treasury to pay the January 1917 interest on the prior lien bonds, and therefore, it would be very embarrassing for the Government to disclose that condition of affairs, unless it intended in good faith to carry out its purpose, as declared by the Minister for Foreign Affairs in his note No. 48 of November 4, 1916, and reiterated in his memorandum of January 12, 1917, from which I quote:

The Government's purpose set forth in an official communication from this Ministry, No. 48, of November 4, 1916, has not changed; its firm and resolute intention, its irrevocable will is to comply with its obligations, with all its obligations, however burdensome they may have been in their constitution, and of complying therewith in the shortest possible time, according to the measure of its ability.

I have recently called twice on the Minister for Foreign Affairs to ascertain when I could expect to receive the reply to my inquiries, but he has each time said that the Minister of Hacienda had not yet responded, but that he would again bring the matter to his attention and urge an early reply.

The whole record indicates that the President does not intend to pay, but is endeavoring to shift the burden to the railway company.

Mr. Norton informs me that the railway company is unable to pay, and in support of that statement he has submitted to me the following in writing:

It is not very difficult to understand the railway company's inability to make any payments on account of the bond service when the following conditions are taken into consideration:—

(a) The railway company's entire working capital has been absorbed by the unpaid Government account, and it has no reserve funds.

(b) For the first six months of the present year, the actual loss in operation amounted to S/.52,898.95, excluding depreciation, which was met by a loan of S/.50,000 from the Pichincha Bank, which loan is still unpaid.

(c) The fuel expense for 1916 was S/.356,705.46 in excess of the previous year, an increase of 80%, while at the rate coal is now costing us, our annual fuel expense based on an average consumption of 2,000 tons per month, would be S/.1,355,000 as against a normal cost of S/.397,000, an increase of almost a million sucres. Also all other materials and supplies have greatly increased in price.

(d) The increase in the rate of exchange results, in effect, in a decrease in our tariff of 25%.

In this connection I wish to say that the railway company has furnished me an official statement of its receipts and disbursements for the period beginning January 1, 1917, and ending June 30, 1917, which completely verifies the foregoing statement of Mr. Norton. I am thoroughly convinced that the company is confronted with serious difficulties in obtaining sufficient money to defray its current expenses, notwithstanding the fact that a number of substantial economies have been effected. Mr. Norton and I have had frequent consultations on these matters, and, in one of them, he informed that, in a conversation between the President and himself, he expressed the hope that the President could assure him that, in view of Ecuador's improved financial condition, the Government would resume deposits on the railway bond service. The President treated the matter as a joke, and replied, "Oh, the country is very poor."

Department has received reports that Ecuadorean Government has instructed defensor begin proceedings at once against Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company in courts of Ecuador. If this report correct you are instructed to lodge a protest with the Ecuadorean Government against taking such action against this American corporation, as it would be regarded by Government of United States as a violation of the rights of American interests. DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, November 26, 1917, 5 p. m.

Your despatch No. 213, March 27, 1917, enclosing note of February 28 from the Ecuadorean Minister of Foreign Affairs, contending that the case of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway Company is not a proper one for diplomatic intervention. In view of the fact that the original contract of 1897 between the railway and Ecuador contemplates that such differences as might arise between the parties would be matters of diplomatic concern of sufficient importance to be settled by arbitrators to be appointed by the President of the United States and the President of Ecuador; that by the arbitration agreement of 1908 the contract was given the value and status of an arbitral award, which has been repeatedly violated by Ecuador and which it is now apparently the desire and intention of the Ecuadorean Government to violate again; that the daily allotment of customs receipts to be set aside according to the arbitral agreement of 1908 from the customs revenues, and to be placed "to the credit of the Council as representing the holders of the bonds," places the Ecuadorean Government in the position of a trustee, as it were, of such funds for the bondholders, which trusteeship the Ecuadorean Government now wholly disregards and violates; and that finally the failure of the two attempts at arbitration in 1913 and 1914—the method of procedure specifically provided in the contract for the settlement of disputes thereunder—constitutes a denial of justice, the Government of the United States perceives nothing in the Ecuadorean note of February 28, 1917, to occasion any change in the attitude of this Government, which has for years been repeatedly made known to the Government of Ecuador, namely that it has and intends to exercise its undoubted right to interpose diplomatically to protect American interests involved in the Guayaquil and Quito Railway controversy.

This Government is constrained, therefore, to notify the Government of Ecuador that the resumption of deposits which it is in duty bound to make under the arbitration contract in the service of the railway bonds, or otherwise, should be immediately resumed, and to invite the Government of Ecuador to fix a date in the near future when such payments will be resumed.

As to other matters of differences between the railway and Ecuador the Government of the United States withholds comment, pending the outcome of the negotiations between the Ecuadorean Government commission and the railway.

You will bring the foregoing textually to the notice of the Ecuadorean Government in a formal communication, and emphasize orally the gravity with which the Government of the United States views the situation into which Ecuador has allowed the disregard of its solemn obligations to bring the relations of the two Governments. You may add that this Government cannot permit the destruction and annihilation of this important and legitimate American enterprise.

[Inclosure—Translation—Extract]

Message of President Manuel Estrada Cabrera to the Congress

The Finance Commission which the Government of the United States appointed to return the visit which our Committee made to the above-named Republic to attend the Pan American Financial Conference which was held in Washington during the month of May 1915, was welcomed and entertained during the days the Commission remained in this country. Ideas were exchanged tending to make closer the commercial relations of both countries; and in the meeting of the International High Commission for uniform legislation celebrated from the 3d to the 12th of April, where we were represented by our delegates Doctor Juan J. Ortega and Mr. Francisco Sanchez Latour, matters of importance were discussed and resolutions were taken looking to the accomplishment of a closer commercial and financial understanding between the American nations by the use of uniform methods. The Guatemalan Financial Commission is at present studying the above-named resolutions and is already in touch, through the channel of the Central Executive Council at Washington, with the proper Committees operating in the other Republics of the Continent. * * *

I saw with deep concern the development of events which nearly caused a state of war between the United States and Mexico on account of the difficulties created by the occurrences which took place on the boundary line between the two countries, a concern which was turned into gratification on learning that the respective governments had arrived at an understanding which reconciled their mutual interests.

Guatemala continues to cultivate with the United States of North America the most frank and cordial relations on the traditional foundation of friendship and mutual respect. The Great American Nation reelected to the Presidency in November last, the Honorable Woodrow Wilson; and the Guatemalan Government, wishing to give a new proof of its sympathy with the Government and people of that Republic, resolved that an Extraordinary Mission should attend in the name of Guatemala the solemn inauguration ceremonies prefacing the Second Presidential Term of Mr. Wilson.

The personnel of the Commission provided for in the Treaty of Peace entered into with the United States on September 20, 1913, was completed by Guatemala. * * *

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Guatemala, July 30, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department of an unpleasant incident that occurred on Friday morning, the 27th instant, and to forward copies of the communications relating to it which passed between this Legation and the Foreign Office of the Government of Guatemala. I am enclosing a copy of my note to the Foreign Minister, a copy, with translation, of his reply, and a copy of my acknowledgment of that reply.

While these several notes explain the occurrence and record the very full and complete apology given, I think it well to say this much further in reference thereto: Immediately upon receiving my note the Foreign Minister informed President Estrada Cabrera of the occurrence and he instructed the Minister to call personally on me at once and express to me the very profound regret of the President, the Government and the Minister, and to offer the most complete apology, and to say that orders were immediately issued to punish the officer responsible for the occurrence as soon as the identity of that officer shall be determined.

Later in the day the President himself sent his Chief of Staff, General Haeussler, and his Official Secretary, Mr. Saenz, to convey his own personal and official regret and to extend his personal apology. And very soon thereafter came the note of the Foreign Minister referred to above. As the foregoing seemed to me entirely adequate I declared myself perfectly satisfied.

Both the President and the Foreign Minister expressed their very profound thanks that I took the matter up with the Government directly and personally and afforded the immediate opportunity for the expression of suitable apologies.

I am informed the law requires that all exemption papers shall be officially examined at this time of the year whether carried by natives or foreigners, and unfortunately I did not have with me at the time the identification and immunity card furnished me by the Foreign Office when I came here as Minister.

It seems to me that the President, the Government, and the Foreign Minister have done all that could be expected of them, and I have expressed my entire satisfaction.

When first stopped I told the officer that I was the American Minister, but that seemed to make no difference to him. On arriving at the barracks I handed the officer my card and demanded to see the colonel in charge. He went to the rear and did not return for some little time; and so getting tired of waiting, I started to come away, whereupon a soldier raised the butt of his gun over me and other soldiers got in front of me and prevented my leaving.

GUATEMALAN LEGATION,

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: By a cablegram received today the President of Guatemala directs me to offer to your excellency and through your worthy medium to the American Government the most earnest and heartfelt thanks for the great sympathy it has kindly manifested on the occasion of the misfortune that befell the City of Guatemala as a sequel of the earthquakes that laid it in ruins.

In the midst of the consternation that spreads over my country at this time on account of the destruction of its capital in which we all fondly saw the fruit of the sociability and work of several generations, most gratifying is the solace that comes to Guatemala from the United States not only in the shape of words teeming with affection but also through prompt and efficient relief of the sufferings of the victims.

All this constitutes a lien upon the gratitude of my country and Government and your excellency will permit me to beg you to accept the expression of the most profound and sincere gratitude which I have the honor to address to your excellency with a request that you convey it to the Government of the United States whose ever cordial friendship manifests itself in the present circumstances in so many delicate ways which my Government and country highly appreciate and most thankfully acknowledge.

I have seen and been deeply moved by your excellency's instructions to Mr. Thurston, Chargé d'Affaires at Guatemala, to tender the sympathy and aid of the United States, and I have read, again moved by the same sentiment of affection for the great American Republic, the message which His Excellency the President was pleased to send to the President of Guatemala and in which I found the true expression of the noble altruistic soul of this admirable people. All this has left a deep impression in my heart.

The activities of the American Red Cross in sending relief to Guatemala to the full extent of the State Department's recommendation is a new page added by the venerable institution to its record of service to mankind throughout the world and my Government appreciates and is thankful for its efforts in behalf of a suffering people.

I beg your excellency to accept my reiterated sincere thanks to your excellency for your kind, delicate attentions in my country's distress. The Department of State further supplied me with the news it received until the Legation could communicate with Guatemala. The Latin American Division under the very able and faithful direction of Mr. Jordan Herbert Stabler has also earned our gratitude for its most intelligent activity and zeal.

I renew to your excellency [etc.]

BOUNDARY DISPUTE BETWEEN GUATEMALA AND HONDURAS.

CEPTANCE BY GUATEMALA AND HONDURAS.

File No. 714.1515/12

Minister Ewing to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

No. 416

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Tegucigalpa, February 15, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report a difficulty between the Cuyamel Fruit Company, operating in northwestern Honduras, and officials of the Guatemalan Republic which may reach a serious stage unless promptly adjusted.

The Cuyamel Fruit Company is an American concern, being the property of Messrs. Hubbard and Zemurray, and engages in the growing and export of bananas for the United States markets. While its holdings are principally in northwestern Honduras and most of its shipments are made from the port of Omoa, the company has also been accepting fruit from planters along the National Railroad, thus providing that section of Honduras with a sorely needed market for fruit.

Some time ago the Cuyamel Company decided to extend their railroad to the Motagua River. As the Department is probably aware, there is a dispute between Guatemala and Honduras over the boundary between the two Republics, Honduras claiming territory north of the Motagua River, while, according to my understanding of the contention, Guatemala claims that the river itself is the boundary between the two Republics. In the present instance, Guatemalan officials are attempting to interfere with construction of a railroad several miles south of the Motagua River.

My attention was called to the matter by Mr. Zemurray of the Cuyamel Company, who had also conferred with the Honduran Government over the matter. President Bertrand is reported to be greatly wrought up over the matter and has instructed that soldiers be sent to this section with orders to fire upon any Guatemalan forces who may attempt to interfere with the work under way.

Mr. Zemurray is under the impression that a treaty celebrated between Honduras and Guatemala in 1915 provides that in the disputed territory between the two Republics each shall respect concessions granted by the other and that after final settlement is made all concessionaires shall acknowledge the authority of the government awarded the territory and shall enjoy the privileges granted, no matter from which government they received their original concession. As this dispatch is being written a half hour before the closing of the mail pouch there is no time to investigate this treaty and its bearing on the present case.

More and more it is becoming apparent that these unsettled boundary disputes constitute a grave danger to the peace of these Republics and it is earnestly to be hoped that a final and amicable settlement of them can be made in the near future.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Tegucigalpa, February 19, 1917, 9 a. m.

Guatemalan authorities served notice upon the Cuyamel Fruit Company, American company, to stop work on railroad northwestern Honduras and upon refusal ordered a military occupation of the above territory. Honduran Government telegraphed immediately requesting explanation but without reply from Guatemalan Government.

The President desires Department advised that this would be invasion of territory always within Honduras' jurisdiction and never before now claimed by Guatemala, being some miles from Motagua River and company in undisputed possession fourteen years. The President denies that large force has been sent ordered to attack invaders, but only one hundred men for the protection of company's property as concession obligated.

Honduras has been ready to arbitrate boundary dispute but declares Guatemala evades the issue and declares present difficulty an attempt to exploit company. This despatch is repeated Guatemalan Minister.

LEGATION OF HONDURAS,
Washington, February 19, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: The Republics of Honduras and Guatemala have been unable to demarcate the boundary of their territories. A commission of Hondurans and Guatemalans met last year, under the terms of a convention, to mark out the dividing line at points agreed on, and, at points not so agreed on, to draw maps showing the claims of both parties. The commission separated without having done anything, because Guatemala opposed any survey of the land lying beyond the line it had fixed itself, that is to say, would have the dividing line laid down wherever it desires. On June 30, 1916, the Government of Guatemala by a decree ordered the township of Amates to be established with territory lying largely in Honduras and in the possession of that Republic. The decree, which caused uneasiness in Honduras where it was regarded as an act of violence and which I made known to the Department of State, was not carried out in the end, thanks to the labors of the Minister of Guatemala here and mine.

Now, as your excellency will see from the four cablegrams of my Government of which a copy is enclosed, Guatemala again is trying to place by force authorities in parts of Honduras that have never been in dispute.

Furthermore, the Cuyamel Fruit Company which holds near the land in dispute very valuable agricultural property and would improve it by means of a railway to the Copan Department cannot carry on its work because prevented by the Government of Guatemala.

The Government of Honduras, in view of the foregoing and the urgency of the case bespeaks the good offices of your excellency's Government to the end that the Government of Guatemala, its friend and neighbor, remain in statu quo so as to prevent armed conflicts and so as to enable the Cuyamel to carry on uninterrupted the work that is so beneficial to both countries.

Tegucigalpa, Hond. (February 14). Membreño, Minister of Honduras, Washington. President of Guatemala insists on occupying Honduran territory; is giving military and peremptory orders to set up Guatemalan authorities in Cuyamel jurisdiction and threatening to use force. Government of Honduras is resolved to resist with arms if necessary to defend its rights. Inform Government of the United States. BERTRAND

Tegucigalpa, Hond. (February 16). Membreño, Minister of Honduras, Washington. It is not a boundary question but a threat of violent military aggression in Honduran territory contrary to reason and right, casting aside regular and diplomatic channels. In this light I do not doubt the Government of the United States, conformably to its pacifist policy would intervene to prevent armed conflicts. Government of Honduras will perform its duty in defending its rights and national dignity, and lay the responsibility on the unjust assailant. BERTRAND

SIR: With further reference to this Legation's cable to the Department of February 19, last, dealing with the threatened interference of the Guatemalan Government with the work of the Cuyamel Fruit Company in northwestern Honduras, I have the honor to report that the excitement has subsided and I believe that there will be no serious encounter for the present.

However, the undefined boundaries between Honduras and Guatemala and between Honduras and Salvador are constant causes of irritation and may at any time seriously threaten the peace of these Republics, and I would most respectfully recommend that steps be taken to secure a permanent settlement of the question. In an informal conversation regarding this interference with the Cuyamel Company, President Bertrand admitted that the mixed commissions appointed to meet upon the boundary were always failures and that the final adjudication of the contention would have to be through the medium of an umpire in the person of a disinterested third party.

Your cipher telegram of March 3, 5 p. m. Guatemalan interference took place at Cuyamelito River ten kilometers east of Motagua River and thirty from the sea. When Guatemala threatened invasion Honduran troops started for scene but they were recalled at the suggestion of this Legation. Only fifty soldiers permanently stationed at Omoa and sixty others reaching the scene for the protection of company property as required by concession and these sixty were withdrawn immediately.

This has not been disputed territory until now and has been under the jurisdiction of Honduras always, a title deed having been granted by the Government sixty years ago and the present company having operated peacefully fifteen years. The only Guatemalan settlement east of Motagua is known as Sinchada where four families settled two years ago and where Guatemala established garrison of ten men and a telegraph line eighteen months ago.

Honduras claims that rightful boundary line is far from Motagua to the west. Honduras suggests that the United States appoint impartial engineers, preferably from the United States Army, to meet with the boundary commission, being entirely confident that she can prove her claim and convict Guatemala of bad faith.

REPORT ON THE BOUNDARY QUESTION BETWEEN THE REPUBLICS OF GUATEMALA AND HONDURAS

The discovery and conquest of the territory now comprising Central America was effected almost simultaneously from various directions. Gil Gonzáles Dávila overran Costa Rica and Nicaragua during the years 1522 and 1523, and on his second voyage entered Honduras as far as Olancho. In 1524, on his third visit, hereached Puerto Caballos, established a colony there near Cape Tres Puntas and then retired to Olancho, for purposes of personal profit.

¹Not printed.

Francisco Hernández de Córdoba, who, in 1523, took the same route as Dávila had in his first voyages, founded several villages.

Cristobal de Olid, sent in 1523 by Cortés to the north coast of Honduras, followed the footsteps of Dávila on his last trip, founded in 1524 the settlement of the Triunfo de la Cruz and took formal possession of the territory in the name of Cortés.

Pedro de Alvarado, who in 1523 and 1524 left Mexico by order of this same Cortés, effected the true conquest of Guatemala from Soconusco to the kingdom of the Quichés, the Cachiqueles and the Tentuhiles; he traversed, conquering at the same time, the southern section of Guatemala and Salvador, to the extreme eastern end and then returned for the purpose of establishing the capital of the province.

The excursions of Dávila served only to open the way for those who followed in his footsteps, conquering these lands. He left no other proof of his passage than that of the establishment of a colony, probably with the only object of getting rid of certain useless individuals who accompanied him, whom he left in an exposed location on the coast, on boggy soil, and isolated from the native settlements where they might have been able to encounter means of subsistence. To this colony he gave the name of San Gil de Buenavista; it was situated close to Cape Tres Puntas, and it was so short lived that when two years later Cortés arrived in Honduras, it had been for a long time abandoned by its settlers. Bancroft, in Vol. VI of his history says:

San Gil de Buenavista was settled near Cape Tres Puntas in 1523 by Gil González Dávila, before possession of these lands had been taken by Cristobal de Olid, in the King's name.

It was, in reality, Cristobal de Olid who established the Province of Honduras and not Dávila, as has been stated by some Honduran writer, claiming that the King had assigned to that province all the lands discovered by Dávila; this is all the more incorrect because the territory of Costa Rica and Nicaragua traversed by Dávila, without authority to take possession of them, did not form part of the province, by consent of the King; he was only given the government of Nicaragua, which he never took possession of, due to the fact that he died previous thereto.

Cristobal de Olid was desirous of disavowing the authority of Cortés, and upon the latter learning of this he sent Francisco de las Casas to punish him. After various incidents, foreign to the matter in question, Olid imprisoned las Casas and Dávila, but shortly afterwards they escaped from him and then executed him in the village of Naco. They then left for Mexico, leaving Juan López de Aguirre, as governor of the district, who was substituted a few days after by Captain Juan Ruano, who was soon deposed by the colonists.

Acquainted with the treachery of Olid, Cortés marched into Honduras from Mexico, which latter country he had succeeded in subduing, arriving more than two years later at the village Nito, located on the edge of the Dulce River, near its mouth, the spot which the colonists left by Gil González at San Gil de Buenavista, had chosen for their refuge, and who, assisted by Cortés, were removed to Trujillo and to Naco. Cortés appointed Hernando de Saavedra governor of Honduras, and then returned to Mexico.

In the meantime Alvarado was engaged in the conquest of Guatemala, carrying it to the north as far as Huehuetenango and Uspantan; later on he carried it to the Canales Mountains to the east of what is now the capital, and even later yet effected the conquest of Chiquimula, Copán, Mictlán and Esquipulas as far as Citalá in the now Republic of Salvador, close to the Lempa River.

The Government of Honduras in the hands of Saavedra was disputed by Pedrarias Dávila, claiming that it belonged to Nicaragua. Dávila also disputed the matter with Saavedra's successor, Diego Lopez de Salcedo, and the result of these squabbles among the Spaniards was an uprising of the natives, who killed a number of the Spaniards in Trujillo, Natividad (formerly Puerto Caballos) and in Olancho. Salcedo, taking the position that Gil González Dávila was the first to visit Nicaragua, marched to Leon and took possession of the government for several years until 1530, when he returned to Trujillo, dying there, and leaving the Government of Honduras in the hands of Andrés de Cereceda.

Disputes regarding the Government of Honduras continued among the Spaniards which caused new uprisings among the natives who engaged in serious conflicts with the Spaniards.

The abuses committed by Cereceda in Honduras forced his colonists to ask for assistance from Guatemala; but Alvarado had already made up his mind to take possession of the province. He marched into Honduras and arrived at Naco, took charge of the government, and ordered the founding of the city of Gracias, conquering at the same time a multitude of villages. This conquest was authorized by Real Cédula of 1532. Alvarado left immediately for Spain and a short time after Francisco de Montejo arrived at Naco, appointed by the King as governor of the province. Montejo founded the town of Comayagua and tranquilized a part of the country until the return of Alvarado from Spain in 1539.

By this time the governments of Nicaragua and Honduras had been separated. Gil González Dávila was made governor of the first in 1526, but due to the fact that he died during the meantime the government was left in the hands of Pedrarias Dávila from 1527.

The conquest of the rest of Guatemala was carried as far as Verapaz. Alvarado upon his return to this province, restored to its government in 1538, opened up in his passage the road from Puerto Cortés to Sula, from which point he went on to Gracias. In the latter place he arranged with Montejo for an exchange of governments, giving that of Chiapas for that of Honduras, by which means the latter was united to Guatemala.

After the death of Alvarado in 1541 the Government of Honduras and that of Guatemala were separated in 1542, and both countries from that time were definitely separated.

The foregoing is a résumé of existing conditions up to the time the Provinces of Honduras and Guatemala were constituted as such, and the boundaries separating them were in fact determined. The conquered territory of Guatemala included the villages of Chiquimula, Copán and Esquipulas to Citalá. That of Honduras extended to Sula, Naco and Gracias. The boundary between the two sections is the mountain ridge of Merendén in its greater part, or in other words that part which extends to the southwest; and if in the northeastern extremity, that is, along the coast, Gil Gonzáles Dávila established the village of San Gil de Buenavista to the west of it, near Cape Tres Puntas, and which was made to appear as of Honduras in an allotment of villages made by Alvarado when he subdued this Province, yet its existence was of such short duration, as has been stated above, that when Cortés reached Honduras from Mexico it had already ceased to be, and its discouraged colonists, some 60 men and 20 women, according to the account of Cortés to the King, had taken refuge in Nito in order that they might exist by the assistance of the inhabitants of that village, not being able to do this by themselves. There remains no vestige of the exact spot where the settlement of San Gil was made, and it is probable that it did not exist at the time Alvarado made his allotment. In any event, even if the settlement had existed, it should not form part of the territory of Honduras, because the taking of possession of these lands by Olid and his conquest effected subsequent to the arrival of Cortés, was made from Puerto Cortés southward and eastward, and did not extend to the west of that port and from the village of Naco.

Among the native groups populating Central America when the Spaniards arrived there were the Chortis, descendants of the Yucatan Indians, who had settled the locality now known as the Department of Chiquimula, extending throughout the valleys of Copán as far as the mountain range. The ruins at Quiriqua, Chapulco and Copán show that they belong to a single epoch in history and to a certain specific civilization of that race.

Bancroft, in his History of America (Vol. I, Wild Tribes) says:

The Chortis live on the banks of the Motagua River. The Chiquimula Indians belong to the Chorti nation. * * * The Xicaques exist in the district lying between the Ulua River and the Tinto River. * * * It seems probable that the Xicaques were once much more widely diffused, extending over the plains of Olancho and in the Department of Nueva Segovia in Nicaragua. * * *

From this paragraph it is to be inferred that the boundaries of the aboriginal races on these lands was fixed by the Merendén ridge of mountains.

The consecutive acts of dominion in the Provinces of Guatemala and Honduras, by the civil authorities as well as by the ecclesiastical, were not extended by either parties beyond the mountain range.

Only on the coast, where the mountain range spreads out, forming the group of mountains known by the name of Omoa, the jurisdiction of Honduras hugs the slopes of these to the west as far as Omoa, these lands reaching to the mouth of the rivulet Cuyamel and even to the mouth of the Motagua, but without exercising any control whatever of the interior lands to the northwest of the valley of the Chamelecón River. This is inferred from several documents from which we have taken the following information:

At the instance of the President of Guatemala, by virtue of a Real Cédula, there was made in 1684 a list of the villages and of the inhabitants of all the provinces and Alcaldías Mayores. In that of Comayagua are to be found the cities of Gracias and San Pedro, and in the latter the ports of Caballos, Omoa and Trujillo and the mouth of the Ulua River. The fact that no mention is made of the mouth of the Motagua, a river as important as the Ulua, proves that the jurisdiction of San Pedro did not extend to that point. In another list of the cities, towns and places in the Province of Honduras, made in 1689, the same reference is made to these places and ports, and to the Ulua River alone.

Again, in 1772, the Governor of Honduras wrote an account of a visit he had made through his province, and it shows that he did not cross the Chamelecón River, which he ordered to be guarded, probably as the boundary of his authority.

In 1792, under orders from President Don Bernardo Troncoso, the engineer Antonio Perta, made a survey of the coast from Omoa to Manabique Point and from the mouth of the Motagua River to where it joins the River Chico Zapote, fourteen leagues from Guatemala. The statement is made in this account:

From Punta Gorda to the mouth of the Motagua River are found the Chachagual, Cuyamel and Tinto Rivers. * * * From the mouth of this river (the Motagua) to where it joins the river Nuevo is a distance of ten leagues. * * * The River Nuevo, given this name by the inhabitants of the village of Gualán, who go there every year to fish. * * * There is also to be found the valley of Santa Catarina, where the ranches and haciendas of the inhabitants of Gualán begin to appear, and these people go down the river in canoes to do their planting and where they remain a good part of the year. * * * Both banks of the River Grande (the Motagua) are covered by ranches or haciendas of the inhabitants of Gualán.

From this survey there resulted the formation in Guatemala of a navigation company on the Motagua, which was carried through by means of a Real Cédula, and considerable success was obtained by it in the movement of merchandise from Gualán to Omoa. In none of the documents which treat of the subject is the least mention made of the River Motagua belonging to Honduras, nor yet that it constitutes the dividing line between that province and Guatemala; and if either one of these circumstances existed it would have been so stated, in view of the prerogatives each exercised over its own territory and the lack of authority each had over the territory of the others, without previous and explicit royal authority.

Going back to the seventeenth century, it would be well to mention that in 1604, there was discovered, by order of Alonzo Criado de Castilla, Governor of Guatemala, the port of Santo Tomás, which formed part of this territory. The Bishop of Comayagua claimed that these lands pertained to his jurisdiction, but when the President of the Audiencia communicated to the King the knowledge of its discovery he asked that the port be made an Alcaldía Mayor and of the jurisdiction of Guatemala, as was the gulf, and not that of Honduras. And this must have been confirmed by the King, because from that time to the present authority direct from the capital has been exercised there. In his report the President adds:

Near this new port it will be possible to effect navigation along a river there located to any point where merchandise may be had to bring and carry same to and from this city (Guatemala) in this way saving a great deal of travel by land.

This, without doubt, refers to the Motagua River, there being no other such in that section and still less with such qualifications; from this it may be inferred that the dominion of Honduras did not extend to this river, and even its name does not appear sure.

There exists other good proof of the rights of Guatemala to all this territory, which is the following: In 1856 there was published a book entitled "Notes on Central America, particularly the States of Honduras and San Salvador" by E. G. Squier, translated by a Honduran, in which are set forth very important data, as follows:

Much of the data given on the map (made by the author) within the limits of the Department of Gracias, are taken from that made by José María Cacho in 1834, now Secretary of State of Honduras. * * * The Republic of Honduras comprises the territory which belonged to it as a province. Its boundary on the north and east is the Bay of Honduras and the Caribbean Sea, extending from the mouth of the Tinto River to Cape Gracias a Dios (referring to Guatemala) * * * along the Merendén mountain chain and that of Grita, embracing Copán ruins, almost fifteen miles to the southeast to the head of the little River Tinto which flows into the Bay of Honduras. * * * Leaving the high plateaus of Guatemala this line (the mountain range) follows a course almost easterly until it reaches the frontier of Honduras, from whence it goes to the southeast, where a great spur, not inferior in elevation to the Sierra Madre, runs from the east northward to the Bay of Honduras. At the point of separation this line is called the Merendén mountain, in other places La Grita and down near the coast the Mountain of Espíritu Santo. On the same coast where it reaches the majestic altitude of seven or eight thousand feet they are called the mountains of Omoa. Along its northern base runs the Motagua river, which rises near Guatemala City and flows into the Bay of Honduras. * * * The Department of Gracias is at the northwest corner of the State, touching San Salvador and Guatemala. It is the only one regarding which we have been able to obtain exact data. This is due to José María Cacho, now Secretary of State of Honduras, who as Jefe Político of this Department in 1834 performed his duty. * * * To the north is the line of Merendén which runs from the boundary of Salvador to the Bay of Honduras, a distance of 150 miles. It is known by various names at different points, such as Merendén, Gallinero, Grita, Espíritu Santo and Omoa. There are no villages in these mountains with the exception of a small hamlet called Dolores Merendén. At their base to the north there are several beautiful valleys, among which is found Copán, famous for its ruins. To the west of the Merendén mountains, and from the mountain passes flow the small Rivers Gila and Gualán which empty into the Motagua. Along the eastern base of the same ridge runs the Chamelecón River, which rises a few leagues to the north of the city of Santa Rosa. * * *

To this point the work of Mr. Squier takes the subject. It must be taken into account that the able author of this and other works, was an American citizen, charged with a diplomatic mission in Central America, and in making the statement as to the boundary line which separated Guatemala from Honduras, he must have done so with a complete knowledge of the subject, and to this effect took the data which was published on the question of the boundary by a reputable Honduran, none other than the former Jefe Político of the Department of Gracias and Secretary of State of the Government of Honduras at the time Mr. Squier compiled his book. Two corrections should be made to the statements of this author: one where he refers to the Tinto River, which has been taken as the boundary after the mountain range by him and by other authors, perhaps arbitrarily or possibly in confounding it with the Cuyamel River; and the other that the valley and ruins of Copán are not located, as he states, to the east of the mountain range, or within Honduran territory, but to the west on Guatemalan territory. For the rest there are no discrepancies between the boundaries given and those acknowledged by Guatemala. What Mr. Squier and Mr. Cacho have stated constitute plain proof of the boundary lines which separate Honduras from Guatemala.

Regarding the valley of Copán and its ruins, Guatemala has very solid arguments for considering herself the owner of these lands. Of these it has been said that at times they have belonged to Honduras and at other times to Guatemala. This it seems must have occurred, though, probably, only in fact on the part of Honduras. At the beginning they were a part of Guatemala through their conquest; nevertheless shortly thereafter they were undoubtedly joined to Honduras, as the statement is made that they formed a part of the latter in a report sent at that time to the King by a commissioner who visited both provinces.

It is not known to what jurisdiction they belonged during the succeeding years, but the fact remains that in the 18th century they belonged to Guatemala. In the second volume of the visit of the Archbishop, written by Doctor Pedro Cortés y Larraz, pages 207 to 219, is found the account of that of the parish of Jocotán, verified March 31 and April 1, 1769: at the beginning of which among other things is the following statement:

That the parish of Jocotán is formed by two villages joined together, one that of San Juan Camotan and the other San Juan Ermita. The village of Camotan extending towards the east is about half a quarter of a league distant from this point. * * * The valley of Copán extends to the east, and from this point to the last settlement in this valley is a distance of 12 leagues. The valley contains eleven haciendas, and is three leagues wide by six leagues long. * * * In this district are the haciendas mentioned. * * * In the valley of Copán there are nineteen families of ladinos. * * * In the valley of Copán the territory of this parish, lives Don Ramon Lugo. * * * And in compliance with the orders of his illustrious lordship, the 22d of the present month, done at Guatemala August 25, 1847. Antonio Latona, Notary Public.

In 1784 Cayetano Frances y Monroy formed the Estado General of the archbishopric of Guatemala, in which the valleys of Copán and Tanco, with the list of their inhabitants, appear as annexed to the parish of Jocotán (Guatemala).

Also in 1791, in a letter of the Bishop of Comayagua to the King, in which are mentioned the towns and valleys of his jurisdiction, no mention is made of Copán as belonging to Gracias, although mention was made of others of less importance.

To the end of the 18th and the beginning of the 19th century would correspond what the historian Juarros states respecting Copán:

This place which today bears only the title of valley, is located on the dividing line of the Provinces of Chiquimula and Comayagua; so that at times it has belonged to the first and at other times to the second of these provinces.

If, in addition, it is taken into account that, according to the map of the ecclesiastic vicarages which existed in the Curia (Ecclesiastic tribunal) of Guatemala since before the year 1857, these valleys were even then a part of the parish of Jocotán, it must be inferred that they have never ceased to belong to Guatemala, legally, although on various occasions they have appeared to be a part of Honduras.

Don Antonio Vallejo, an illustrious Honduran, who worked faithfully for his Government in the matter of the boundaries of his country, endeavoring always to procure their wider extension, has made us his debtors for the following statement, recently published in a newspaper of Tegucigalpa, and which serves as a complement to the paragraphs above given relative to the jurisdiction of the church:

In order to avoid contention and delay in the administration of justice, there was issued in 1571 the Ordinance IV, which is Law 7, Chapter 2, Vol. 2, "Recopilación de Indias" which is the definite and fundamental statute for surveying the boundaries of the provinces of America, and which today serves as a guide for the survey of questions which arise from territorial circumscriptions, and which orders that great care be taken in making the boundaries outlined for the exercise of the spiritual authority of the bishoprics and archbishoprics agree with those of the governors, inferior courts and viceroys, and vice versa. So that in determining the limits of the dioceses, the others were determined also, and it is noted that as time progressed this principle became yet more accentuated, serving as a step forward in the path of progress and also as an homage to civilization.

The Royal Cédula, decreed in 1571, contains an express command that all boundaries of the jurisdictions of the Church shall be conformed to by temporal authorities, in order that annoyances may be avoided in the administrative routine, of the colonies. Bear in mind that the jurisdiction of the bishop cannot extend beyond his diocese, according to the canonical law. * * * The establishment of intendants in 1786 introduced no modifications, separations nor divisions of any kind in the boundaries which had been assigned to Honduras; on the contrary they maintained the same territorial integrity which had been granted to the diocese of the bishop, so that the boundary of the bishopric was also that of the governor intendant, and the limits of the dioceses served as a basis for the ordinances decreed for the intendants in making the later divisions, both political and administrative.

The Boundary Treaty between Guatemala and Honduras of 1845, in Article XIII says:

The States of Honduras and Guatemala recognize as their boundaries those shown by the dioceses of each, in the Royal Decree of Intendants of 1786.

Dr. Vallejo, Director of Statistics of Honduras and an assiduous researcher of documents bearing on the boundaries of his country, took charge of the work of demonstrating Guatemala's position in maintaining as her boundaries those which had pertained to the dioceses and in her claim relative to the valley of Copán.

There is still other data: In a detailed report of the new railway between Guatemala and Omoa, by the Engineer Luis Diaz Navarro, in 1746, it states:

It is five leagues from the valley of Copán to the foot of the mountain and from the latter point to the eastern border is another five leagues, making ten leagues of roadway newly opened by Don Angel and it was the first made because there was a great deal of underbrush and thicket which impeded the way. These ten leagues are to be kept clean and in order by the companies of the valleys or Copán, Jocotán and Camotán, governed by Feliciano Lugo, the Sergeant Major of that section. From the mountain pass of Copán on this side to the east, to the valley of Venta is an old roadway and this has been repaired in places and cleared of underbrush in some places where needed, making the highway mentioned in the journal; this is some 18 leagues long and once made requires little attention; the duty of keeping it in condition pertains to the companies of Omojoco, Guancire and Pinal.

It is inferred from this report that the roadway leading to Copán from the mountain pass (the Merendén range) to the west should be maintained by the people of Guatemala and from the mountain to the east, by the people of Honduras; this indirectly indicates the jurisdiction of each of the provinces.

Attention is called to the fact that Copán, her ruins, and many adjoining valleys are today in possession of Honduras, who has, day by day, and foot by foot, extended her domain over this region, regardless of the continued protests of Guatemala, who has always tried to avoid a conflict between the two countries. Honduras has also for the past few years had possession of the right bank of the Tinto River up to the place where it joins the Motagua, and she is today trying to extend her domain further to the south all along the right bank of the Motagua River; to all of which Guatemala has reiterated her protests. It should be borne in mind that Guatemala constructed a portion of her railway to the Atlantic on that side of the Motagua more than thirty years ago; more than half a century ago she developed the gold washing basins of this region; for fifteen years she has made concessions for the timber lands of the western slopes of the mountain range and has transferred title to these lands to a great number of people and corporations at all times, before and since her independence from Spain; and to all these acts of dominion on the part of Guatemala Honduras has never raised a protest, for the excellent reason that all that side of the mountain range to the banks of the Motagua River has been recognized by every one as an integral part of the Republic of Guatemala. Only a few months ago Honduras granted a concession to a railroad company for this same region and ordered the surveying of lands upon those already conceded by Guatemala, entering her villages with an armed force and inciting to conflict, which Guatemala up to this time has tried to prevent.

This is the condition in which is found the boundary question between Guatemala and Honduras. The desire of the first named to reach a definite understanding is shown by the acts of the boundary commissions during their work which was carried out by virtue of the three treaties signed by both countries; there can also be seen, from the same acts and related facts, the desire of Honduras to create difficulties and disturb the harmony so desirable for both countries and so necessary for the latter Republic.

There is still a reference to be made to the condition of the boundary question on a small part of the frontier, that is the more southerly part, in which the Merendén range does not figure as a boundary line. This range has a starting point to which both parties are in complete conformity. From this point, which is called Cerro Obscuro, the line runs straight in a more or less southwesterly direction until it touches the ravine called La Brea, a point also recognized, and follows along this ravine downstream, without dispute. The boundary commissioners who, from both countries, discussed this frontier in 1847 under the treaty of 1845, agreed by an act signed by all of them that the boundary line separating Honduras from Guatemala should begin at the boundary landmark with El Salvador, called the Cuchilla de las Dantas and continue northwest to the Mojanal mountain; thence to the passage of the roadway from Esquipulas to Ocotapeque, in the ravine La Brea. This convention was not respected by Honduras, who shortly thereafter extended this boundary over into Guatemala, embracing a considerable amount of land, cultivated and inhabited by the people of Esquipulas, paying no attention whatever to the continued demands and protests of Guatemala. In 1908, by virtue of a new treaty, which was signed in 1895, the Honduran commissioners would not recognize the agreement of their predecessors and alleged that it had not been approved by both countries. For this reason Guatemala today must maintain as her boundary the one which formerly had belonged to her, and which previous to the year 1847 had been usurped by Honduras, with the villages of Sescapé (today Santa Fé) Santa Anita, the haciendas of San Cayetano and Machuca, with other settlements of small importance. These villages are located on the right bank of the Lempa River, and this river was the boundary which was recognized in remote times as the dividing line between the two countries. In fact in 1812 the members of the Sala Capitular of Comayagua, petitioned the King, among other things, the reestablishment of the aggregation of the Partido of San Miguel, subject to the Intendancy of San Salvador, extending the limits of the Province of Honduras to the banks of the Lempa River from its source in the Parish of Ocotepeque, contiguous to the Archbishopric and Province of Guatemala on the east and following the regular course of this river to the South Sea, where it discharges, thus serving as a dividing line between the District of San Miguel and the Province of San Salvador. This boundary created by nature regulates the territory of the Province of Honduras.

José Maria Cacho, of whom mention is made hereinbefore, also states as follows in his book on the Department of Gracias published in 1857:

The Lempa River, which divides the States of Honduras and El Salvador, in this part, and whose fertile banks furnish the livelihood of many people in indigo plant and live stock, has its source between Esquipulas and Jute.

This river forms the boundary of the District of Ocotepeque, according to the description given by the same writer in the book mentioned. It is therefore not to be doubted that the Lempa River constituted the boundary between Guatemala and Honduras, before the latter began her encroachments into Guatemala.

In résumé the boundaries of both Republics are the following: the Lempa River, from the valley of Gualcho, at the angle of the Republic of Salvador, upstream to the ravine de la Brea; the ravine and thence a straight line to Cerro Obscuro. On these two last lines both parties are agreed; the mountain range called successively Merendén, Grita or Gallinero and Sierra del Espíritu Santo, to the peak San Ildefonso, and lastly a straight line to the Cuyamel River's mouth on the Carribbean Sea.

Different geographies of Guatemala and of Central America and many maps of Guatemala and Honduras show these lines with slight variations; although, as stated above, the line from the Cuchilla de las Dantas or of Cerro Brujo (a little to the west of the former) as far as la Brea is conceded, some place Copan on the Honduran side and the others on the Guatemalan side, and finally, at times, terminate the line of the mountains in the Cuyamel River, and at others at the source of the Tinto River, the frontier following this river and the Motagua River to the sea. The following is a list of the publications and maps referred to:

Map of Chiquimula (Department of Guatemala) del Atlas de M. Rivera Maestre, 1832.

Map of Honduras, by A. T. Byrn, 1886. This map was published by C. W. & C. B. Colton & Co., of New York, 1886; it bears the coat of arms of the Republic, and the name of the author A. T. Byrn, C. E., M. E., and the added title of Civil Engineer of the Government of Honduras. In a note on the map itself appears the following: "Sold by E. C. Fialles & Co., Civil and Mechanical Engineers and Mining Experts of the Republic, by special appointment of the Government, Tegucigalpa." On this map the ridge of the Merendén, Grita or Gallinero and Espíritu Santo appear in their proper places, which is well known in that section; the only difference is that they are made to pass to the west of Copán, when in reality they pass to the east. The territorial boundary appears on this as extended from the ridge to the mouth of the Cuyamel River, which, however, occupies its proper position. It is to be borne in mind that this is an official map of Honduras, because not only was it made by a civil engineer of that Government, but it carries also the express authority of that Government for its sale. It is therefore a clear proof of the boundaries which Honduras acknowledges. Guatemala does not agree to the boundary accorded to Copán, or rather to the place where this village is situated, which is on the Guatemalan side to the west of the mountain ridge and not to the east, on the Honduran side.

I do not believe it would be possible to find in the archives of these two Republics, nor even in Spain, any other documents but those of a scientific nature, such as maps and inspections of special commissioners, which would give any clear data of the old boundaries of Guatemala and Honduras, due to lack of information possessed by the Governments of the two countries of the waste regions which separated the two provinces. If by chance reference is made to boundaries or to any jurisdiction it is generally so vague or so incorrect that in place of giving light it makes the subject yet more confused. It is not unusual, for example, to find a reference to a jurisdiction in old documents, such as: "Izabal, of the jurisdiction of Honduras," or "Tegucigalpa, of the jurisdiction of Guatemala." Do not such statements show the profound ignorance which existed respecting these countries? One boundary is given in a Royal Cédula of the 16th century, which is stated to be a direct line from the mouth of the Ulua River to the Bay of Fonseca. Is not this absurd and a lack of practical understanding? The geographic maps of the period before Honduras awakened to the ambitious desire to extend her frontiers are the only ones which can give us an idea of the true boundaries between the two countries; it should be borne in mind that work of this kind is the result of special study by the authors before giving a graphic form to the boundaries; and although they may contain errors caused by wrong interpretations or through lack of data, a dispassionate and good judgment in its acceptance would assist in clearing up the truth. Worthy of consideration in this connection, among the maps now in existence, are those of Guatemala made by Juan Gavarrete, and those of Honduras, drawn by A. T. Byrn, in 1886; the former having been traced by an illustrious and honorable scientist who worked all his life in the national archives, compiling indexes and catalogues of the records and whose upright character would not permit him to yield to a sentiment of partiality; the latter, because his work was done by order of the Government of Honduras, which gave its tacit approbation to it as the official map, by recommending its sale. Between the two there exists only one variance, and that is the reference to the Copán region which appears as belonging to Guatemala on the first map and to Honduras on the second; a difference which has existed heretofore and which is now the subject of controversy. There is no dispute about the rest of the frontier toward the north. Another important map, that of the vicarages, a manuscript of about the middle of the past century, gives the same boundary. This map is of an authenticity which gives no room for the slightest doubt and which defines the frontier of both countries, leaving no margin for any discussion whatever; although Guatemala and Honduras, in the treaty of 1845, in force at all times, agreed that the boundaries should be those fixed by the Church dioceses.

We will now take up the claims which Honduras makes up to the present date. This qualification is made because her claims change from day to day.

Since the drawing up of the first boundary treaty in 1845, between the two countries, the Guatemalan commissioners, adhering to the provisions of the treaty, have tried to establish the boundaries of the ecclesiastic jurisdictions of both dioceses; but the Honduran commissioners endeavored to give authority as the boundary to the lines traced by Honduran surveyors by means of land measurements arbitrarily made, without the knowledge of Guatemala, and upon lands acknowledged by the latter, as well as others belonging to her of much greater priority. It was not possible to arrive at an agreement, except as to the line above referred to from the Cuchilla de las Dantas to the Mojanal and to the passage of the Brea road.

It is pertinent to make mention here of the following fact: The Guatemalan commissions were given certain instructions by two men in Guatemala who were competent judges of such matters, being Miguel Larraynaga and Alejandro Marure. It was stated in these instructions that what was desired to be cleared up was the boundary on the southern part of the frontier, that on the north being clear and undisputed; although according to the historian Juarros that boundary was made by the Motagua River. Nevertheless the authors of these instructions added that the map of Rivera Maestre (that of Chiquimula, before mentioned) should be consulted; and as the difference between the map and the references made by Juarros is so enormous, Rivera Maestre giving the mountain ridge as the boundary and Juarros the Motagua River, it is inferred that the individuals giving the instructions must have been in doubt as to both statements. From the fact that the Motagua River had been mentioned as the boundary by an entirely unauthorized historian Honduras took the position of maintaining this claim, and thus originated her claim to the right side of the river, which Guatemala can never agree to.

It appears that Honduras also claims that her territory extends to the west of the mouth of the Motagua from the circumstance that the settlement of San Gil de Buenavista by Gil Gonzáles Dávila was located on that bank of the river; and it has even been attempted to maintain that that settlement was situated where today is found the port of Izabel, which is completely absurd. A full account has already been made regarding the colony of San Gil and that the Province of Honduras never extended beyond Omoa.

In the work of the boundary commissioners in 1908, 1909 and 1910, on the frontier, by virtue of the treaty of 1895, it was impossible for the Honduran commissioners to understand the duty which rested upon them to establish as a working basis the ecclesiastic jurisdiction, not only because this treaty so indicated, but because it had been so expressly provided in the previous treaty, which remained in force. They, nevertheless, continually endeavored to establish the boundary lines by means of land measurements, not only upon those which were adjudged before the independence, but those of more recent dates, and even those shown subsequent to the treaty.

A similiar tendency was shown by the Hondurans when about to prosecute their inspection by virtue of the last treaty, that of 1914; but this work was never carried out.

In order to become convinced of the uncertainty of the position of Honduras in maintaining her successive claims, and her boundaries, it is sufficient to glance at the maps published by Honduras; in the map made by A. T. Byrn, 1886, hereinbefore mentioned, the mountain range was admitted to be the boundary, although embracing Copán; in that of E. P. Mayes, 1904, to which also reference has been made, the Motagua River is given as the boundary, as well as in another published by Colton, Ohman & Co. of New York in 1900. In another map drawn by the engineer E. C. Fialles, published in 1909 by August R. Ohman & Co. of New York, the boundary is given as reaching to Lake Izabel, embracing a great number of towns and villages of Guatemala, never before disputed, including Puerto Barrios, and the ports of Estrada Cabrera and Izabel; and finally, in another map of Central America, published by the house of D. Appleton & Co., in 1914, from data furnished by Honduras, according to the statement of the publishers, the boundary of Honduras and Guatemala appears as including all the lake of Izabel.

It will be clearly seen, from the occurrences of 1847, 1908 to 1910 and 1916, between the commissioners of both countries, that nothing can be gained by further study of the boundary question, as each attempt has further complicated the result. It is believed that the best way is to enter into a full and definite boundary treaty, in which the boundaries shall appear in a manner equitable to both countries, traced by a few straight lines, defining the lands legally acquired by both countries; seeking always the harmony which should exist between two republics, truly sister republics, each one yielding her claim, just or unjust, in the cause of peace and tranquility for both republics.

MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive your excellency's courteous note dated the 13th of the present month, in which you were pleased to inform me, with instructions from the Honorable Secretary of State, of the result of an interview between the American Minister in Guatemala and the President of that country.

According to that interview the President of Guatemala does not deny the presence of Guatemalan soldiers and workmen in the zone on this side of the Motagua River, but states that those workmen are engaged in constructing a railroad and roadbed in Guatemalan territory; which is inexact, because as I have stated before, this territory is located on the right side of the Motagua River, which has been held as the boundary between Honduras and Guatemala, the Guatemalan workmen and guard having crossed over; and what is more, the railroad grade to which the President of Guatemala refers is no other than that belonging to the American Cuyamel Company, constructed by concession of this Government authorized many years ago. Guatemala not having a railway line on this side of Motagua River, it is not explained by what right the President of that country undertakes the construction of a road which does not belong to him.

I must state, moreover, to your excellency that the Government of Honduras has not had at any time a force of a thousand men in that territory; that the military guard ordinarily maintained on that frontier is of twenty-nine soldiers, distributed as follows: eleven in Motagua; six in Chachagua; six in Rio Tinto; and six in Corrientes. Just now, on account of the presence of Guatemalan workmen and soldiers in Honduran territory, there has been sent from the barracks at Omoa an observation guard composed of twenty men which is at present stationed in the place called Gimerito. This is, Mr. Minister, all of the force which Honduras has in that frontier, as will be verified by the Secretary of the American Legation in Guatemala in the inspection which your excellency informs me he is making on our frontier.

I am separately replying to the other important point of your valued note.

With sentiments [etc.]

TEGUCIGALPA, November 15, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: After referring myself to the preliminary points of your courteous note of the 13th of the present month, I now have the grateful satisfaction to allude to the important matter contained in the said note, relative to the statement which your excellency's Government made to the Special Mission of the Guatemalan Government, at present in Washington, offering the good offices and mediation of the United States in the boundary question which exists between Honduras and Guatemala.

My Government esteems this offer as a demonstration of the good friendship of the Government of the United States, which it thanks profoundly; because Honduras is confident that with this mediation and good offices can be solved satisfactorily the boundary question with Guatemala which for a long time has caused uneasiness to the frontier towns of both Republics.

I beg, in consequence, that your excellency will be pleased to make known to the Government of the United States the great desire of my Government that it shall be the mediator in the matter under discussion, as soon as the Guatemalan Government accepts, as I have no doubt it will, this friendly and valued intervention.

At the same time I beg that your excellency will be pleased to transmit to your illustrious Government the high appreciation and gratitude of the Government and people of Honduras for its kindly good will in favor of the welfare of this Republic.

PRELIMINARY ARRANGEMENT

The Governments of Guatemala and Honduras, desirous of making an end of the boundary disputes between their respective countries by means of an equitable and just arrangement, satisfactory to both parties and such as will remove any ground of divergence that might disturb the fraternal relations which must exist between them, have authorized their representatives, to wit:

The Government of Guatemala, the most excellent Señor don Víctor Sánchez Ocaña, its present Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary near the Government of this Republic, and the Government of Honduras, Señor Doctor don Mariano Vásquez, its present Minister of Foreign Relations, to sign the following arrangement:

I

The Governments of Guatemala and Honduras, with the above-indicated purpose will sign a diplomatic agreement subject to ratification by their respective Legislatures, in which, on the basis of authentic documents establishing the territorial rights of the one and the other party, the proven antecedents, the system of compensations and as far as practicable the adoption of natural boundaries, a final end be made of the boundary dispute and as a consequence the marking of the dividing line between the two countries be provided, the stones or monuments that are to mark the dividing line being erected after approval of the treaty by a joint commission of two engineers appointed by each party.

II

In order to bring about the convention and settlement that are sought, in concluding the treaty, hearings may be given to the commission of engineers of each one of the contracting Governments composed of the chief engineer of each commission, the assistant engineer and a counsel, it being understood that the aforesaid persons will fill every requirement of technical and historical competence, honorability and impartiality.

III

The meeting of the Plenipotentiaries who will draw up the contemplated treaty will take place in this capital before the last day of December next or on such other date as may be agreed upon by the two Governments of Guatemala and Honduras.

IV

Pending the signature and ratification of the contemplated treaty, the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras will endeavor to shun any cause of dispute between them on account of their territorial bounds and will maintain through their lower authorities the respect of their respective jurisdiction.

V

It is understood that for any reason whatsoever the contemplated treaty should not be concluded or ratified by the respective Legislatures of Guatemala and Honduras, the Boundary Convention signed by the two Republics on August 1, 1914, will continue in full force and effect.

In faith whereof they sign the present preliminary arrangement in duplicate at Tegucigalpa, this 20th day of September 1917 and affix their respective seals thereto.

FRANCISCO BERTRAND, CONSTITUTIONAL PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF HONDURAS

Whereas: On the first day of August, 1914, was concluded and signed in the City of Guatemala by means of duly authorized Plenipotentiaries a Convention of Limits between the Republic of Honduras and the Republic of Guatemala, composed of a preamble and sixteen articles, whose text is the following:

CONVENTION OF LIMITS BETWEEN HONDURAS AND GUATEMALA

The Governments of the Republics of Honduras and Guatemala, desirous to establish in a definite manner the demarcation of the dividing limits between both countries, which till the present it has not been able to accomplish, and which gives occasion for difficulties which common interests make important to remove, and also desirous that the said matter shall be resolved to the satisfaction of both parties with all cordiality and with deference due sister nations, neighbors and friends, have believed it convenient to celebrate a convention which fulfills those aspirations, and to that end have named their respective Plenipotentiaries: His Excellency the President of the Republic of Honduras naming Attorney don Guillermo Campos, Minister Resident of his Government near the Government of Guatemala; and His Excellency the President of the Republic of Guatemala naming Doctor don Luis Toledo Herrarte, his Secretary of State in the Department of Foreign Relations; who, having examined their respective full powers and found them in good and due form, have convened in the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The Governments of Honduras and Guatemala shall name a mixed technical commission, composed of an equal number of members for each party encharged to study all of the antecedents, documents and data which exist regarding the boundary between both Republics.

ARTICLE II

As soon as the said commission shall be organized, it shall begin its studies; it is empowered to make on the frontier territory all investigations, operations and labors; having as its meeting place the city of Ocotepeque.

ARTICLE III

The commission shall consign the result of its studies and observations in detailed minutes, which shall be inscribed in a book which, for that purpose, must be carried on in duplicate. If upon one or several of the points occupying the commission its members cannot agree, they shall record such disagreement in the respective minutes, each one explaining the basis for his opinion; and this done, they shall continue the study of the remaining points until the conclusion of their task.

ARTICLE IV

When the commission finishes its work, it shall send the books of minutes to the respective Governments, and it shall propose to them the means, which, in its judgment, should be adopted to celebrate a treaty definitely fixing the limits between both Republics, accompanied by a map upon which shall appear traced the dividing line which the commission may judge ought to mark the boundary, according to the results of its studies.

ARTICLE V

In view of the bases which the commission proposes, the contracting Governments shall proceed to discuss them and to define in a treaty the limits between Honduras and Guatemala. To this end, both Governments shall name their representatives, who shall unite to fulfill their mission in Guatemala or in Tegucigalpa, no later than sixty days after the conclusion of the labors of the mixed commission.

ARTICLE VI

To make the resolutions in the case, the contracting Governments, after the mixed commission has presented the result of its labors, shall take into account: The observations and studies of that commission; the demarcation lines in public documents not contradicted by others of the same kind and of greater force, giving to each one the value due it according to its antiquity and legal efficacy; the comprehension of the territory which comprised the ancient provinces of Honduras and Guatemala at the date of their independence; the dispositions of the Royal Statute of Intendents then in force; and, in general, all documents, maps, plans, etc., which tend to the uncovering of the truth, giving preference to those which by their nature ought to have more force by reason of age, being clearer, more just and impartial, or founded on any other reason, following the principles of justice. To possession shall be given value only in so far as it may be found just, legitimate and founded, conforming to the general principles of right and to the laws of justice which over that particular are sanctioned by the rights of mankind.

ARTICLE VII

To arrive at the establishment of a dividing line between Honduras and Guatemala, the respective Governments may, should they believe it necessary or convenient, adopt the system of equitable compensations, heeding the laws and usages established in international practice.

ARTICLE VIII

Once definitely determined by the High Parties by treaty the dividing line between both Republics, it is established from now that national properties which may lie on one side or the other shall belong, respectively, to the Republics in whose territory they are found to be included; and that private properties which exist legitimately titled with priority to the present convention, must be respected as they deserve, and shall enjoy all the guaranties which the Constitution and the laws of each of the countries establish for its nationals, to which laws the said properties shall be subject in full.

ARTICLE IX

If the Governments shall not be able to agree in one or several of the points under discussion, they consent to submit its decision to an arbiter, who shall be the President of the United States of America.

The naming of the arbiter must be done at the latest within sixty days from the publication by the official periodical of the note in which one of the contracting Governments requests of the other the said naming.

ARTICLE X

In case of the unwillingness or inability of the President of the United States of America, the point or points under discussion shall be submitted to the decision of the President of the French Republic; and should this fail, to that of the President of the Republic of Chile; and if this high functionary is not able to accept, to that of whichever of the Presidents of the Republics of South America may be agreed upon by the chancelleries of both countries.

ARTICLE XI

The proceedings and terms to which the arbitral judgment shall devote itself shall be the following:

1. Within sixty days from the date upon which the two High Parties were notified of the acceptance by the arbiter they shall present to him their allegations, plans, maps and documents.

2. The arbiter shall communicate to the representative of each Government the allegation of the other within eight days following its presentation.

3. Each Government shall have the right to refute the allegation of the opposed party within ninety days following the date upon which such allegation was communicated, and with both refutations there may be presented, also, documents, plans and maps.

4. The arbiter shall pronounce his verdict within one hundred eighty days following the date upon which the allegations should have been answered, no matter whether such answers were presented or not.

5. The arbiter may delegate his functions for the procedure and study of the matter; but he must hand down directly and personally the definite sentence.

ARTICLE XII

The arbiter's finding, whatever it may be, shall be held as the perfected treaty, obligatory and perpetual, between the high contracting parties, and there shall be no recourse against him.

ARTICLE XIII

The present convention shall be submitted in Honduras and in Guatemala to the constitutional ratifications of law, and the exchange of these shall take place in Guatemala or in Tegucigalpa within sixty days following the date on which both Governments may have complied with what is stipulated in this article.

ARTICLE XIV

The provisions of the previous article do not prevent in any manner the immediate organization of the mixed commission, which must begin its studies, at the latest, two months after the ultimate ratification, in conformity with what is provided in the present convention, without prejudice should they begin before the ratifications, if these are delayed, to take advantage of the dry or summer season for the field work.

ARTICLE XV

None of the time limits in this treaty shall have a character to be regarded as indispensable, nor to provide ground [for] nullification of any kind.

The purpose for which they are fixed is to give precision to the work; but if for any cause they shall not be sufficient for their object, it is the will of the High Parties treating that the negotiations shall be carried forward to its termination in the form stipulated, which is the one they believe most convenient. To this end they consent that the present convention shall have force for ten years, during which term it may not be reversed nor modified in any manner, excepting stipulations to the contrary, neither shall the question of limits be adjusted by other means.

ARTICLE XVI

The High Contracting Parties declare that they recognize as valid the labors executed until this date by the mixed commission of limits, by virtue of and in agreement with the convention signed in this city March 1, 1895 by the Plenipotentiaries of both nations.

By virtue of which, the Plenipotentiaries of Honduras and Guatemala sign the present convention, in two copies of the same tenor, and who affix their respective seals in the city of Guatemala the first of August, nineteen hundred fourteen.

fifty, Manuel Calderon in command. Some soldiers have already crossed near Gimerito. When questioned by Honduran officials, commander Guatemalan forces stated he was bearing out instructions from Guatemalan Government that the first established camps of Cuyamel Fruit Company in Honduran territory should be patrolled. In view of the fact that boundary question has been submitted for mediation, President has directed Commandant Diaz Zelaya at Amoa to make no opposition to Guatemalan forces.

Point out to the Guatemalan Government that such military movements do not coincide with the understood purpose and accepted good faith of the Government of Guatemala when the Government of the United States was requested to mediate the boundary dispute between the Republics of Honduras and Guatemala. Such action is likewise in violation of Article IV of the protocol entered into by the respective Governments September 17, 1917.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Guatemala, December 16, 1917, 10 a. m.

Your December 14 [13], 6 p. m. and my confidential despatch of 12 November last No. 431. My interview with the President of Guatemala yesterday afternoon which continued for more than hour and a half and resulted in the following:

1. President Cabrera says that he did not disturb the status quo in the disputed territory but that it was done by the Honduran Government backing up the Cuyamel Fruit Company in its aggressions on land conceded by Guatemala to other companies a long time ago, which aggressions he had stopped by the presence of a few soldiers.

2. That he could not agree to make the Motagua River a provisional boundary line pending the adjustment of the dispute because that would be putting into the power of Honduras about all she claims and would be distinctly understood to be a definite disadvantage to Guatemala and that however good the intention was, the very fact that such a provisional boundary line had been agreed upon would by necessity work to the prejudice of Guatemala and to the advantage of Honduras.

3. That a fairer provisional boundary line pending the adjustment of the dispute would be the crest of the Merendén mountain range because the claims of Guatemala reach a considerable distance beyond that range, but he would not ask for that.

4. In order to prevent any possible suspicion of his readiness to agree to any reasonable provisional arrangement he would make the proposal that the disputed territory lying between the Merendén mountains and the Motagua River be made neutral provisionally for a while, that both Guatemala and Honduras withdraw from that territory all their troops, thus preventing any probability of a collision, and that each of the two Governments retain there two commissioners to keep them advised of any violation of the agreement by either of them. He added that in order not to give advantage to any one the Cuyamel Company should be required not to extend their railroad any further in the disputed territory pending further adjustment of the dispute.

Private secretary, President, called Legation to-day authorized by President to discuss presence more Guatemalan troops on Honduran territory. He presented copies of two telegrams to President reporting increased activity Amates where six hundred Guatemalan soldiers are located and constructing camps along border. Advices from Omoa indicate presence four hundred on Guatemalan territory up as far as Tenedores River. President's secretary stated, in compliance with suggestion of United States, Honduras was avoiding conflict with Guatemala and understood boundary dispute was to remain in statu quo until its mediation. Further stated Guatemala is obviously attempting to maneuver into position of possessing certain Honduran territory before boundary dispute mediated, thus holding unfair advantage. He desired the United States be informed that Honduras cannot remain inactive much longer witnessing day after day her territory invaded. The President hopes that in the interest of justice the United States will be moved to reaffirm its former attitude. Insisted that Guatemalan soldiers remain on the west side Motagua River until boundary dispute is settled permanently. President anxiously awaiting a reply to this cablegram.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 22, 1917, 7 p. m.

Your December 16, 10 a. m. Honduras claims far to the north of the Motagua River. Guatemala claims far to the south of this same river. The United States Government does not pretend to make any decision as to the justice of either claim. However, in view of the mutual requests of both the Guatemalan and Honduran Governments that the Government of the United States lend its good offices in an effort to bring to a final end the boundary dispute, this Government cannot but feel that the massing of Guatemalan troops south of the Motagua River is an act calculated to produce friction, as well as an infraction of the spirit of Article IV of the Protocol of September 17, 1917, concluded between the Guatemalan and Honduran Governments.

With special reference to articles 3 and 4 of your December 16, 10 a. m., the Department of State feels that, pending a definite arbitral settlement of the boundary question, the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras should both withdraw all troops from the disputed territory lying between the Merendén mountains and the Motagua River as suggested by President Cabrera.

The United States Government has inquired of the Government of Honduras if such a temporary arrangement would be agreeable to it.

With reference to certain concessions in this disputed territory it seems pertinent to point out that questions of concessionary rights in the disputed territory should not be discussed in a pure question international boundary.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Guatemala, December 24, 1917, 11 p. m.

Department's two cablegrams identical date of December 22, 7 p. m. arrived this morning. All Government machinery stopped for the holidays but succeeded in obtaining interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs this afternoon.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs states that he is not aware that Guatemalan troops are being massed south of Motagua River. Mr.

²The same to the American Legation at Guatemala City.

Morley arrived on to-night's train, having just left the disputed territory. He states that the situation is but little changed since my visit as regards advances of troops but that there are now approximately 175 Guatemalan troops in the neighborhood of Sinchado and that they are cutting a new trail from that point to the Cuyamel Railroad which it will intersect six kilometers west of Gimerito.

With reference to the proposal that the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras should sign a boundary arbitration treaty the Minister for Foreign Affairs could not see the appropriateness of the word "arbitration" which is not used in the first article of the protocol signed September 17, 1917. He stated, however, that a diplomatic convention will be signed if the special mission composed of Minister Plenipotentiary, a lawyer and two engineers and four technical secretaries now en route to Honduras is successful. This is in strict observance of Articles II and III of the protocol. Article V of the protocol states that should this treaty not materialize or fail to be ratified by the respective legislatures the boundary treaty of August 1, 1914, will be revived. The mission is not empowered to deliver any ultimatum to Honduras.

The point was conceded that questions of concession rights to the disputed territory should not be discussed in a question of international boundary.

In view of the fact that the Minister for Foreign Affairs did not feel disposed to commit himself when I submitted to him the Department's feeling that President Cabrera's suggestion that the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras should both withdraw all troops from the disputed territory be carried out, and likewise in view of the fact that both the disputing parties are engaged in constructive labors (the Hondurans permitting if not urging the pushing forward of the Cuyamel Railroad and the Guatemalan Government building trails to intersect this railroad and thus preventing its operation) which may at any moment bring them into contact, does not the Department deem it advisable to authorize the Legation at Tegucigalpa and myself to energetically urge upon the two Governments the propriety of promptly withdrawing their troops from this disputed territory? From a personal knowledge of the topography of this region, I venture to suggest that the following distribution of the three disturbing elements in the situation pending the outcome of the negotiations at Tegucigalpa be considered: The Guatemalan forces to remain at Sinchado or Tenedores suspending all military operations; the Honduran forces to retire to Cuyamel town or Omoa and the Cuyamel Fruit Company to cease its advance into this disputed territory and confine itself to that portion of its holdings between its Colon farm and Omoa.

Your December 24, 3 p. m. and December 27, 2 p. m. Department does not understand the absolutely conflicting statements of above telegrams. Information conveyed by your December 24, 3 p. m. was transmitted to the Guatemalan Government and the Department at the same time recommended that in view of Honduras' acceptance of this plan the United States would be pleased could this mutual withdrawal be consummated by January 1, 1918.

Awaiting a further and more complete report upon what the final decision of Honduran Government may be, as well as how this discrepancy arose; Department will take no further steps in the matter.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Tegucigalpa, December 31, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the Department's cablegram of December 22, 7 p. m., instructing me to inform the Government of Honduras that in pursuance of the earnest desire of the Government of the United States to facilitate and expedite by its friendly good offices the settlement of the boundary question existing between Guatemala and Honduras respectively that these Governments submit the question for a boundary arbitration treaty subject to ratification of their respective legislatures, as outlined and agreed upon in Article V of the Protocol signed by the representatives of Guatemala and Honduras on September 20, 1917.

In compliance with this instruction I immediately approached the Government of Honduras on the subject, addressing a formal note dated December 26 to the Minister of Foreign Relations.

The Government of Honduras, through its Minister of Foreign Relations, replied to this communication under date of December 28, embodying in its reply the text of my note of the 26th instant, and further stating that Honduras accepts immediately the proposition that the question of limits between the two Governments be submitted to arbitration in conformity with the suggestion of the Government of the United States.

The Government of Honduras further states that it does not doubt but that Guatemala will also accept, with good will, the friendly suggestion of the Government of the United States and in the meantime it will await notification of such acceptance, abstaining in the meantime from signing any boundary agreement with Mr. Victor Sanchez Ocaña, representing the Government of Guatemala now in this capital.

The Government of Honduras having accepted formally the tender of mediation on the part of the Government of the United States feels obligated to abide by this acceptance and considers that the entire boundary dispute between the Governments is to be submitted to mediation with the Government of the United States as mediator. This question has been gone into fully with the President and the Foreign Minister and they are anxious that the dispute be settled in this manner rather than by direct negotiations with Guatemala. As this dispute is of long standing and numerous attempts to settle it by direct negotiations between the interested Governments have previously failed, the Government of Honduras looks to the Government of the United States to conduct the negotiations with the hope of definitely settling the entire question.

I have the honor to attach hereto copies of my note to the Foreign Office under date of December 26, together with the reply of the Government of Honduras under date of December 28, 1917, the latter being accompanied by its translation into English.

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Tegucigalpa, December 28, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: I have had the honor to receive the courteous note of your excellency, dated the 26th of the present month, by means of which my Government is informed that the Government of the United States, in the desire to facilitate and accelerate by means of its friendly good offices, the settlement of the question of limits which exists between this Government and that of Guatemala, proposes that the Governments of Honduras and Guatemala submit the question to a treaty of arbitration of boundaries, subject to ratification by their respective legislatures as was agreed upon in Article V of the Protocol signed by the representatives of Honduras and Guatemala the 20th of September, last.

In reply, I am pleased to make known to your excellency that the Government of Honduras accepts immediately that the question of limits with Guatemala be submitted to arbitration in conformity with the suggestion of the Government of your excellency.

This Government does not doubt that that of Guatemala will accept, also, with good will, the friendly suggestion of the Government of your excellency, and with such understanding it will await notification of such acceptance, abstaining in the meantime from signing any boundary agreement with Mr. Victor Sanchez Ocaña, representative of the Government of Guatemala, who, as your excellency knows, has just arrived in this capital with the object of discussing a boundary treaty as provided for in the preliminary agreement of September 20, of which your excellency has knowledge.

Begging that if your excellency thinks well, what is expressed in the foregoing may be transmitted to the Government of the United States, I am pleased to repeat the assurances of my most distinguished consideration.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Tegucigalpa, December 31, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to Department's cable dated December 22, 7 p. m. instructing me to inquire whether, pending definite arbitral boundary decision, the Government of Honduras would be prepared to withdraw all troops to the south and east of the Merendén mountains provided the Government of Guatemala withdraws all of her troops to the north and west of the Motagua River thus establishing a neutral zone to be so regarded by both countries.

Upon receipt of this instruction I called upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs accompanied by the secretary and clerk of the Legation on the morning of the 24th inst. This suggestion was submitted to the Foreign Minister and the matter thoroughly discussed. The Foreign Minister stated that Guatemala had an envoy, Doctor Sanchez Ocaña, en route to Tegucigalpa to undertake to arrange diplomatically the boundary dispute between the Governments of Honduras and Guatemala but the Government of Honduras considered that inasmuch as the entire dispute had been formally submitted to the United States for mediation it was bound to proceed with mediation with the Government of the United States as mediator and that his Government would not engage directly with the Guatemalan diplomatic envoy.

The question of the withdrawal of Honduran troops to the south and east of the Merendén mountains was discussed and it is the undivided opinion of myself, the secretary and the clerk of the Legation, that the Foreign Minister requested of the Legation that it cable the Department of State agreeing to this withdrawal of troops provided Guatemala withdrew her forces to the north and west of the Motagua River. The Foreign Minister produced a map of the territory in dispute and this was gone over carefully and the location of the neutral zone pointed out. Furthermore, the Foreign Minister brought up the question of protection to the plantations of the Cuyamel Fruit Company and whether or not Honduras would be permitted to maintain a small police guard on these plantations as stipulated in the concession with this company. It was suggested to the Foreign Minister that this request could be embodied in the cable of acceptance of the proposition of the withdrawal of the troops which was done and included in my cable of December 24, 3 p. m. The Foreign Minister stated that he would also address a note on the subject and he was assured that the Legation would likewise address the Government of Honduras on the question.

In this connection I have the honor to state that the Foreign Minister on the afternoon of the same day sent for the clerk of the Legation, Mr. Brown, and stated to him that his, the Foreign Minister's, action with regard to this matter, was not to be taken decisively until a formal note had been addressed to the Legation. In other words, at the morning conference it was thoroughly understood by all parties to the conference that the Foreign Minister accepted the proposition of the withdrawal of the Honduran forces and he so requested that the Legation cable Washington to this effect. This change of decision was no doubt brought about by a conference the Foreign Minister had with the President on the same subject.

The afternoon of the 26th inst., I visited the President in company with the Foreign Minister, the secretary and clerk of the Legation and the entire question was again gone into thoroughly. At this conference it developed that the President was unwilling to agree to a withdrawal of Honduran troops and the creation of a neutral zone which would be entirely within the territory of Honduras. The President suggested the consideration of the Motagua River as the neutral zone with the withdrawal of the Guatemalan forces to the north and west of this river. He stated that if he attempted to establish the neutral zone as suggested in the communication of the Government of the United States that he could not explain his action to the people of Honduras. It was pointed out to the President and his Foreign Minister that at the time Honduras was not maintaining troops in this territory but that Guatemala had established camps and were gradually encroaching more and more upon Honduran territory and that this seemed an excellent opportunity to secure the removal of Guatemalan forces to the north and west of the Motagua River. Both the President and the Foreign Minister were firm in their attitude and maintained that if a neutral zone were to be established it should be the Motagua River.

In this connection I have the honor to refer to Department's cable of December 29, 6 p. m. with regard to the conflicting statements cabled to the Department in my December 24 and 27. It will be seen that the difficulty arose through the fact that the Foreign Minister in his interview with me on the morning of the 24th inst., accepted the proposition as suggested by the Government of the United States and later after conference with the President found it necessary to reverse his decision in the matter.

I have the honor to attach hereto copy of my note to the Foreign Office on the matter dated the 26th instant together with the reply of the Honduran Government under date of December 28.

In this note the Government of Honduras obligates itself to place no military forces within the strip contained between the right margin of the Motagua River and four kilometers to the south and to the east of the said river provided the Government of Guatemala obligates itself, reciprocally, to place no military forces within a distance equal to four kilometers to the north and west from the left margin of the Motagua River. It is to be understood that this arrangement shall not prejudice the rights which Honduras may have to the north and to the west of the River Motagua, nor prevent the exercise of its jurisdiction in the zone to the south and east of the Motagua River, inasmuch as the only object which this arrangement seeks is to avoid collisions between the military forces of Honduras and Guatemala, which might involve the peace of both States.

*Minister Ewing to the Minister of Foreign Relations*AMERICAN LEGATION, Tegucigalpa, December 26, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: In compliance with cablegraphic instructions from my Government dated December 23, I was instructed to inquire of your excellency's Government, whether, pending a definite arbitral decision, it would be prepared to withdraw all its troops to the south and east of the Merendén mountains on condition that the Government of Guatemala would likewise withdraw all her forces to the north and west of the Motagua River.

It would be understood this action on the part of the Governments of Honduras and Guatemala would create a neutral zone lying between these boundaries, said zone to be regarded by both Republics as neutral and neither Government to have armed forces thereon.

I have the honor to refer to a conference held with your excellency on the morning of the 24th instant, at which time this proposition was thoroughly discussed and your excellency requested that I transmit to my Government a cable stating that Honduras would withdraw all troops south and east of the Merendén mountains provided Guatemala withdraws all her troops north and west of the Motagua River only reserving the right to maintain a small police guard for the maintenance of order on the plantations of the Cuyamel Fruit Company as is stipulated in the concession between that company and your excellency's Government.

Your excellency will possibly recall the conversation with regard to the expected visit of the Guatemalan envoy, who, according to your excellency's statement, is coming to treat separately with Honduras on the question of the boundary dispute. At that time your excellency stated inasmuch as the entire boundary dispute had been submitted formally to the Government of the United States for mediation that Honduras would be unable to treat separately with Guatemala.

In compliance with your excellency's request this information was immediately cabled to my Government and it, no doubt, considers your excellency's Government as having agreed to a withdrawal of its forces to the south and east of the Merendén mountains provided Guatemala withdraws all of her forces to the north and west of the Motagua River, the zone lying between to be considered as neutral territory pending a definite arbitral decision of the entire question.

I have the honor to request of your excellency a reply to this note in order that I may immediately inform my Government of the desires of your excellency's Government as regards this suggestion.

Tegucigalpa, December 28, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: I have taken counsel with the Honorable President of the Republic regarding the courteous note of your excellency dated the 26th of the current month in which, in the name of your Government, you are pleased to ask if this Government will be disposed, pending a definite arbitral solution of the question of limits with Guatemala, to retire its troops to the south and east of the Merendén mountains, on condition that the Government of Guatemala will retire in like manner all its forces to the north and east of the River Motagua.

The Honorable President has given me instructions to reply in the following terms:

The Government of Honduras in deference to the desires expressed by the Government of the United States and to the end to contribute its part toward the maintenance of good harmony with the Government of Guatemala, accepts in the following terms the proposition made to it through the American Legation.

Until it is definitely resolved the question of limits between Honduras and Guatemala, the Government of Honduras obligates itself to place no military forces within the strip contained between the right margin of the Motagua River and four kilometers to the south and to the east of the said river, provided that the Government of Guatemala obligates itself, reciprocally, to place no military forces within a distance equal to four kilometers to the north and west from the left margin of the said River Motagua, it being understood that this arrangement shall not prejudice the rights which Honduras may have to the north and to the west of the River Motagua, nor prevent the exercise of its jurisdiction in the zone to the south and east of the Motagua, since the only object which this arrangement seeks is to avoid collisions between the military forces of Honduras and Guatemala, which might involve the peace of both States. In consequence the zone indicated of eight kilometers on the one and the other side of the River Motagua shall be understood neutral to the effect only that neither Honduras nor Guatemala may place in it military forces for boundary matters until is fixed the definite dividing line.

With respect to the conference held the 24th of this month, to which the note of your excellency alludes, I regret to state to you that in the said conference it was stated to the Secretary of the Legation, Mr. Belt, that the matter would be discussed with the Honorable President, in order to give a definite reply, expressing that in general the Government of Honduras does not maintain troops in the zone to the south and east of the Merendén mountains, save only small police guards for fiscal purposes (i. e. to prevent smuggling), for security and public order and to guard the order in the plantations and works of the American Cuyamel Fruit Company.

Following is a paraphrase of cable sent by Navy Department to Admiral Knapp, commanding cruiser forces in Haitian waters, and outlining policy of the United States which has been formulated in conference between Navy and State Departments.

It has been the policy of the Government of the United States to support Dartiguenave so long as he conducted his administration in accordance with correct principles and the agreements entered into between Haiti and the United States. Any attempt to overthrow the present President of Haiti will not be countenanced, nor will any legislative action annulling any Presidential decree which was issued at a time when no legislative body was in session be favored. On the other hand, it will regard it as the beginning of activities of a revolutionary and disorderly political character in the Republic. It is believed that if the Government should be defeated it would be highly desirable that the present Cabinet resign and a Cabinet in harmony with the dominant party be formed by the President. It is considered that the best interests of prosperity, peace and future development in Haiti will be served if conditions remain as they are and that every effort be directed to developing the internal resources of the country and placing them on a more stable basis. The Government of Haiti may be informed of the policy as herein outlined in your discretion.

You will be further instructed if the Department desires you to take any action in this connection.

DEAR MR. STABLER: I take great pleasure in handing you herewith a memorandum about an order issued as far back as February 1916 by Admiral Caperton on the subject of attachments affecting officials of the Republic of Haiti.

I should be thankful if you would as far as possible expedite the settlement of this question.

[Inclosure—Memorandum—Translation]

In the month of February 1916, Admiral Caperton ordered the Banque Nationale of the Republic of Haiti to pay no attention to certain attachments made of the salaries of public officials, and declared that judgments alone were to be respected.

The Department of Foreign Relations on the 24th of the same month of February wrote to the Legation of the United States at Port au Prince a reminder that, under the law of Haiti, the bank must, without discrimination among the claims, respect any attachment or garnishment lodged with it, until otherwise ordered by a writ of a court, and that, therefore, Admiral Caperton's order involved a breach of the law as well as an injury to private rights; it closed its letter with a request that the order be repealed and in any event disclaimed any of the responsibilities that might arise therefrom.

Article 478 of the Code of Civil Procedure of Haiti is as clear as can be: "Any creditor may on the strength of private or recorded vouchers, attach in the hands of a third party the moneys or effects belonging to the debtor and oppose their delivery".

This but peremptorily demonstrates that Admiral Caperton was in error when he ordered the Banque Nationale of the Republic of Haiti to pay the public officials their salaries in spite of their being garnisheed.

So there is occasion to bring to an end a state of things which constitutes an evident disregard of the law of Haiti and an injury to legitimate interests.

Two lines of thought are manifestly here confounded, for one question is that of a loan which the Government of the United States is helping with its good offices the Government of Haiti to negotiate, and the other is that of payments which the Receiver General must attend to under Article V of the said Convention.

Moreover, the Minister of Haiti having, on the 17th of February instant, imparted to the Department of State his Government's objections to an immediate renewal of the Convention as a prerequisite of the loan, and the question not yet having been quite cleared up with the bankers concerned, the above-mentioned declaration cannot in any way be accounted for.

[Translation]

Referring to my communication of January 13, relative to the project of a loan presented by Mr. A. T. Ruan, Financial Adviser, I have the honor to bring to your knowledge that the Council of the Secretaries of State has voted the following decision:

In pursuance of the letter of the Financial Adviser to the Secretary of State for Finance and to the letter of the Minister of the United States to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs concerning the loan of 30,000,000 dollars:

Considering that, to remedy the grave financial and economical situation of the country, the necessity for a loan which will diminish the annual budgetary charge and which will facilitate the development of national labor imposes itself upon the Government of Haiti;

Considering that the bankers who are disposed to make this loan fixed at 30,000,000 dollars claim as a fundamental guaranty that the Convention of September 16, 1915, remain in force during the period of reimbursement; period which would be about twenty years;

The Government of Haiti in consideration of this loan and under the express reserve of the subsequent decision to be taken upon the specific clauses and conditions which the bankers shall offer,

Declares to recognize the inevitable necessity of a loan destined to realize the views and objects of the convention, constitute the one of the specific reasons indicated at (in?) Article XVI of this diplomatic document and of which the consequence is to give to the said convention a duration of twenty years.

The Secretaries of State for Finance and for Foreign Affairs are authorized to undertake, to this end, each in that which concerns him, the necessary negotiations, under the reservation of the decision of the Government and of the approval of the legislative body.

In pursuance of the above negotiations with Minister for Foreign Affairs resulted in agreement upon following project of protocol which has been approved by Council of Secretaries of State and is submitted to the Department for its action.

And the United States of America conforming itself to Article I of the said convention and asking its good offices for the full accomplishment of its aims and objects,

REFUNDING THE DEBT OF HAITI

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1917.

To provide funds for refunding the existing debt of Haiti and to finance public improvements necessary to the development of her resources, the Government of that country has approved, subject to ratification by the legislative body, a loan of $30,000,000. A careful study of the situation indicates that such a loan could not be repaid by Haiti within the remaining period of nine years which the Treaty of September 16, 1915, has yet to run. Also it reveals that American bankers would be loath to make a loan to Haiti for a longer period unless assured of American control of finances and of the preservation of peace and order for the life of the loan.

Recognizing these facts the Government of Haiti, availing itself of Art. I of the treaty, has requested the good offices of United States to assist it in securing a loan of $30,000,000 for the purpose aforesaid, and to the end that it may be obtained upon the most favorable terms has expressed its desire to exercise the option conferred upon it by Art. XVI of the treaty, thereby insuring for the treaty a maximum life of twenty years dating from the exchange of the original ratifications. This is not a new agreement beyond the scope of the present treaty, but is simply the exercise of an option which the present treaty confers upon either party thereto. The extension requested is essential to the welfare of Haiti. Her present debts carry exorbitant fixed charges and special liens upon specific customs revenues. A refundment of these debts is necessary to curtail the annual fixed charges and permit a revision of the customs tariff demanded by the present and prospective commerce of the country. Her industries and resources must be stimulated and developed to afford employment to her people and prosperity to the country. To this end private capital is an essential factor and capital will be more readily attracted if assured of nineteen years of American control.

The advantages of the extension proposed in the protocol submitted by Haiti are mutual to both countries; I am of the opinion that its early execution is highly desirable in order that bankers may immediately be invited to submit tenders for a loan to be repaid in nineteen years, the most advantageous offer to be submitted for the approval of the Legislative Assembly which convenes in Port au Prince April next for a session of three months.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 16, 1917.

SIR: The Department has deferred replying to your note of January 11, 1917, transmitting a memorandum on the subject of the attachment of salaries of the officials of the Republic of Haiti, until it could give the matter careful consideration.

The Government of the United States believes that the order of Admiral Caperton has served and is serving a useful purpose as the only means at the present time of preventing the injustices which otherwise might occur, due to the facility with which the salary of any Government employee could be attached for the purpose of enforcing payment of old claims and of claims arising from the discounting of salaries, inflated many times by usurious rates of interest, there being no usury law in Haiti.

The Department suggests that a solution of this matter might be found in the enactment by the Haitian Legislature, at present in session, of a new law covering the objectionable features of the present law, which would render unnecessary a continuance of the military order.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, September 7, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith copy of a memorandum entitled: Relations between treaty officials of the Haitian Government, handed to me this day by Rear Admiral H. G. Knapp, to the effect that the Admiral considers such an expression a part of his official duty; that a great experiment is being carried on by the United States in reference to Haiti whose success is dependent in a very large degree upon the complete harmony and cooperation among the different Americans connected with the experiment. Further, the Admiral enjoins upon the United States naval officers who are treaty officials of the Haitian Government, such cooperation, and a full understanding that in independent organizations "orders from persons in one cannot properly be given directly to those of another"; that the heads of the gendarmerie, the engineer service, and the service of the sanitary engineer should, and he expected would, cooperate heartily with the other American treaty officials in Haiti and with the Legation and the officers of the occupation. Finally, the Admiral concluded his memorandum by stating that the juniors of the several organizations presided over by officers of the United States naval service should be instructed in the sense of this memorandum and held to a strict observance of its principles.

I have [etc.]

FERDINAND LATHROP MAYER

[Inclosure—Memorandum]

RELATIONS BETWEEN TREATY OFFICIALS OF THE HAITIAN GOVERNMENT

1. In connection with my responsibilities as the military representative of the United States in Haiti, I consider it a duty to express my views of the relations that should exist between the treaty officials who are in the service of the Government of Haiti and are, at the same time, members of the naval service of the United States, and also those that should exist between them and the other Americans here in official positions.

2. The United States is carrying on in Haiti a great experiment, the success of which is a matter of national importance to the United States and, so far as the naval service is concerned, of service pride. It is, of course, a further matter of doing the greatest possible work for Haiti. Nothing avoidable should be allowed to stand in the way of complete success. The thing that will make for success in a higher degree than anything else is complete harmony and team work between all Americans who are in any way connected with the experiment. On the other hand, no worse thing could happen than to have the Haitians get the idea that there is any lack of complete harmony among Americans who are officially here.

3. While I feel sure that there is no dissent from these observations on the part of anybody concerned, I yet consider that, in view of the fact that I am not permanently here in the exercise of the functions which have been assigned to me by the Department, I should give clear expression to the rules that should govern officers to whom the authority applies that vests in my official position. I, therefore, enjoin upon the officers of the naval service who are treaty officials of the Haitian Government the heartiest cooperation and team work, without which success is impossible. The activities of the gendarmerie, the engineer service, and the service of the sanitary engineer are bound to overlap at times. On the other hand, each can often be of great usefulness to the others. Cheerful cooperation under such circumstances, lending the helping hand wherever possible, and respect of each service for the position and rights of the others, will be expected.

4. I need not add to the officers in the naval service that, in independent organizations, orders from persons in one can not properly be given directly to those of another, but the desired action should be brought about by an arrangement with the head of the other, or with his duly qualified junior, by which means the necessary orders can emanate from proper authority.

5. The heads of the three organizations mentioned above should, and I am sure will, work to the same end of hearty cooperation with the other American treaty officials in Haiti, and with the Legation and the officers of the occupation.

6. It is especially important that the juniors of the several organizations presided over by officers of the United States naval service should be instructed in the sense of this memorandum, and be held to a strict observance of its principles. Not all such juniors will have had the advantage of a military training; and some who have had such training in subordinate grades may not have a full appreciation of the courtesies that should obtain in official intercourse.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 2, 1917, 5 p. m.

Urgent. Your December 21, 10 a. m. Controversy between Haitian Government and railway company remains unsettled after nearly six months of correspondence and negotiations. Railroad company has notified Department that officials of French Government on behalf of French bondholders are pressing their officers to effect an adjustment by some means or that bondholders will foreclose property and that after first of year they will commence proceedings if no definite result is immediately reached.

Railway company has asked Department to take necessary steps to arrange for an arbitration of outstanding questions. Department instructs you to show this cable immediately to Ruan and consult with him as to best and most expeditious means of settling this long-standing dispute in a definite manner.

Will Haitian Government authorize Ruan to treat directly with representative of railroad company and make definite settlement. Four months ago Haitian Government informed this Government that Ménos had all details and could deal with representatives of railroad and therefore it is unbelievable that it has not complete record and reports which could have been given forthwith to Ruan.

Reply of the National Railroad Company of Haiti to the memorandum of Minister Ménos^a in answer to the company's memorandum

Preamble: Minister Ménos is mistaken in his assertion that the grievances alleged by the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti against the Haitian Government are "made to order" and that it is "only when the company is alleged to be at fault and tries to evade impending or deserved forfeiture that it brings them to light and asserts its ingenuity in dressing them up to a certain extent".

Against this unjustified and unsupported assertion by the Minister, the company is in a position to present satisfactory evidence that each one of the grievances referred to in its memorandum were, in proper time, notified to, or brought to the attention of the Government of Haiti with request for redress.

The Government officials instead of rendering assistance or relief, oftentimes tried to make an argument; in some cases they stated their intention to give satisfaction to the complaints of the company or remedy to its grievances, but anyone reasonably minded will find out, by referring to the documents presented, that action hardly ever followed the promises made or the assurances of good will alleged by the Government.

^aNote from Haitian Minister of September 21, 1916. For. Rel. 1916, p. 379.

The Haitian officials have never been able to grasp the real conditions, or the principles underlying this sort of concession of public utilities, which may be summed up as follows:—

The Government being in need of a railroad which, for reasons known to it, it does not care to build and operate by its own means and by its own officials, grants a concession therefor to some party or company in a position financially and technically to carry on the construction and the exploitation thereof under conditions determined in advance. Therefore, such concessionnaire is acting really in lieu and place of the Government and has a sort of delegation of the State's powers (right to expropriate private land and take possession of all public lands needed; exemption from all taxes, dues, etc., right to collect tolls for the use of the road, etc.) and this can be the only reason why the Government stipulates in favor of the concessionnaire all the exemptions and facilities provided for in the acts of concession.

One can readily understand that, if the Government imported rails, machines, fodder for its animals, supplies necessary for the lodging and boarding of the men employed and for the protection of their health, the State certainly would not pay any of the said duties, taxes, etc. In other words, all the facilities and privileges which the Government would itself enjoy if it was carrying on the construction of the railroad, are granted to the concessionnaire who is acting in its place.

The whole force and power of the State should rightly stand behind the party undertaking the establishment of that public utility, ready to protect said party and to remove all obstacles and to grant all facilities in order to secure the proper fulfilment of the conditions of the concession, just as if the Government were carrying on the work through its own officials and by its own direct financial means. All of this the Government officials have failed to understand and to such failure to comprehend is due their shortcomings or failure to grant to the company proper protection, real good will or, as they qualify it, "benevolence".

With the foregoing observations in mind, answer will now be made to the remarks of Minister Ménos in the order they are found in his memorandum in reply to that of the railroad company.

1. The destruction of the company's property in July and August 1911 was immediately brought to the attention of the Department of Public Works. The company, in its letter of the 29th of August, 1911, did not present a specific claim for damages, but did point out that not only all work had been stopped, but that the surveying parties and working gangs had been disorganized and dispersed in all places where the company's work was being carried out in the north and the Artibonite.

However, by its letter of July 25, 1911, confirmed by another letter of August 28, 1911, the company states that,— Material belonging to this company has been destroyed amongst which is the sawmill established for the preparation of ties and all the timber necessary for the works. Construction gangs have been dispersed, the men chased away; other acts of brutality and oppression committed which are too long to be enumerated here. Under these circumstances this company is obliged to notify to you said cases of force majeure which paralyze the execution of the works for a period which, at this time, cannot yet be determined. The company, therefore, makes all reserves for the prejudices caused to it and which may yet be caused thereby to the company.

By its letter of April 4, 1912, addressed to the Department of Public Works, the company again pointed out that the contractor building the railroad "had been forced to reorganize its personnel and replace the material destroyed or taken away". The company did not go into any further details about the destruction of its property in those letters simply because it was not then considered proper to mix this matter with the claim for extension of time rendered necessary by evident cases of force majeure.

Mr. Ménos charges the company with having varied in its statement of the manifestation of the revolutionists of 1911 against the railroad and Americans. He says that it was stated before that the cries were "Down with McDonald" and now they are presented as "Down with the Railroad", etc. Mr. Ménos seems ignorant of the fact that up to this date, nobody in Haiti refers to the railroad otherwise than as "McDonald's Railroad". Even to this day "McDonald's station" is the only designation given by everyone (people, Government and American officials) to the railroad terminal station at Port au Prince, simply because it was Mr. McDonald who negotiated with the Simon Government the amendments to the original railroad contracts at the same time as he was negotiating his banana concession stipulating large grants of public land. This banana contract proved so unpopular with the lower classes of people, that both railroad and banana contracts were used by the leaders of the revolution of 1911 to incite the people of the north against the Simon Government. McDonald's name which was publicly identified with both railroad and banana concessions, was used by the leaders of the revolutionary movement to signify the taking away from the people of their land and property rights, and the antagonism to McDonald and his railroad enterprise thus aroused, continued acutely for more than two years after the revolution of 1911.

Mr. Ménos, however, admits that the company's lawyers in Port au Prince did, in fact, present a claim to the Haitian Government on October 12, 1914 for the property taken away or destroyed. What has the Government done since about that claim?

Mr. Ménos' memorandum states that in July 1911 the company had only just begun construction of the Cape Grande Riviere section; that "there were only a few rails dumped down right and left by the roadside without any ties to support the rails"; this assertion is in contradiction with facts. Mr. Ménos repeats an oft told argument that the permission to import 50,000 ties at that time was a great favor made by the Government to the company. This argument cannot be supported because, in fact, at the time the company requested said authorization, it was proven beyond any doubt that the efforts of the company to obtain a proper supply of ties from all parts of the north had reached a point where the company was assured of obtaining the necessary supply of ties for the construction of the railroad. But all the efforts so made by the company were baffled by the revolution, which destroyed entirely the company's tie organization; and its sawmills.

Moreover the company's request for authorization to import these 50,000 ties was really determined by the expressed desire of President Leconte to have the railroad reach Grande Riviere in time to haul the coffee crop, then coming in to the port of Cape Haitien, and that was not possible if the company had to wait for a supply of native ties under the conditions above referred to. Such were the reasons that caused the company to request the authorization to import 50,000 ties.

An illustration of the tendency of officials of Government of Haiti to regard as a favor every compliance with its contract obligations is found in that paragraph of Mr. Ménos' memorandum (which is a repetition of one of the then Minister of Public Works, Mr. Laroche's letters to the company) where it is said that the second revolution of 1911 having only lasted one month, the Government did a great favor to the company by granting an extension of time of four months.

Let it be noted, however, that the Government of Haiti admits that, whether as favors or not, extensions of time on account of force majeure amounting to eleven months were granted to the company up to April 1912. Now the date of promulgation of the concession being August 5, 1910, this extended period of eleven months makes July 5, 1916 the date on which the five year period stipulated for the completion of all the lines of railroad by the Agreement of April 16, 1910 would have expired if no other circumstances of force majeure had occurred between April 1912 and September 1914 at which time the Government notified its preliminaries to the foreclosure proceedings.

During all the year 1912, however, the company was subjected to immense loss of time and of overhead expenses, at various periods on account of the failure of the Government to carry out in proper time, the expropriation proceedings in respect of right of way. This is evidenced by various letters presented herewith. In one instance the Government took eight months, from June 1912 to January 1913, to permit the company to take possession of a parcel of land absolutely necessary for the right of way at Laboderie, Section I (refer to company's letter of January 6, 1913 making reserves therefor).

2. The company might have no objection to Mr. Ménos' opinion that "this exemption (of customs duties, taxes, etc.) constituting a privilege or a derogation from the common law ought, like all other exceptional provisions, to be interpreted strictly and not beyond its terms". The company simply contends that its claim for exemption is within the meaning of the provisions of its concession and that any interpretation to be made of this provision, in case there were any doubt as to the meaning, must be made in favor of the company and against the Government, it being the party granting the privilege. The company further contends and has always contended that the supply of food, drugs, camp equipment at the company's expense, to the men employed on surveying parties and construction camps as well as fodder, horse shoes and nails, medicines, etc., needed for the maintenance and care of the animals used for the company's surveys and construction work, was as necessary "for the construction and maintenance of the railroad" as anything else employed for such purpose and is in accordance with the best practice of railroad construction.

The company's position is supported by the opinion of Mr. J. N. Leger, former Dean of the Bar and former Minister of Haiti at Washington, and Mr. Justin Devot, former professor in the Law School at Port au Prince, and now a judge of the Supreme Court of Haiti, two of the most eminent lawyers of Haiti, and such also was the opinion of the Government of Haiti until the commencement of Mr. Leconte's administration in August 1911 (refer to opinions annexed hereto).

Mr. Ménos is again mistaken or misinformed in stating that since the company was invited on June 21, 1912 to amicably draw up a list of articles which might enjoy customs exemption, there was no further demand for the exemption of victuals, etc., etc.

The company, in September 1911, did all it could to have the Minister of Public Works discuss the matter, failing which, the question was brought to the attention of the President of Haiti and of the Council of Secretaries of State, but all in vain as is evidenced by the despatches No. 39 of September 14, 1911 and No. 76 of October 14, 1911. The Department of Public Works, nevertheless, admitted by its despatch No. 64 of September 29, 1911 the company's right to import fodder, etc., for the animals, but wanted the company to fix in advance a limit to the quantity of those articles to be imported, a procedure which the company could not accept, as is shown by its letter of October 10, 1911, which clears up the question of fodder for the animals.

But, by a letter of October 23, 1911, the company again took up the matter with the Government in confirmation of a verbal discussion, and a list was submitted of the articles to be imported free of duty but no satisfactory answer nor solution having been given to the demand of the company, the matter was dropped. As further efforts in this direction seemed useless the company thereafter made payments of duties, taxes, etc., in each instance under protest. The Government on the other hand even went so far as to collect a visa tax of 1% on the amount of invoices for exempted material.

The tonnage tax, contrary to Mr. Ménos' statement, is not in Haiti a tax on the body of the vessel but is a customs tax on the weight of the goods landed by the ship and is collected from the shippers by the steamship company, which in turn pays it to the Government on the total tonnage of the ship's manifest. While this tax originally was a tax on the ship's body it has long since ceased to be so; this is the positive opinion of the best lawyers in Haiti and was also the opinion of the Government up to the time Mr. Leconte came to office.

The company never requested that the "Government of Haiti take responsibility for the conditions of the tariff of navigation lines," but it has very rightly asked that the Government of Haiti, by such administrative channels as are usual, give exemption of all the material, supplies, etc., imported by the company "for the construction, maintenance and operation of the railroad" from the payment of all duties, taxes, etc., collected at the various customhouses of the Republic. This request is in accordance with the provisions of its concession, which provisions the Government of Haiti fully observed during the early beginning of the execution of the concession, but later on has fully disregarded. The company herewith reiterates its demand for the reimbursement of all such duties and taxes collected on the company's imports.

3. "The Haitian Government has always furnished the most ample protection to the company." If such protection merely consisted in writing letters and issuing orders to the petty officials, etc., there might be some consistency in Mr. Ménos' statement; but the company is in a position to show voluminous evidence that the Government never, at any time, has taken active steps to insure such protection to the company's personnel and property. The laborers have more or less constantly, at any rate periodically, been dragged away, recruited, chased from the company's camps on various pretexts; they have been subjected to all sorts of hardships and limitations on the pretext of applying existing laws which were never so much remembered as when they referred to the railroad company, its personnel or its property; all sorts of hindrances, limitations, delays and losses have been in such ways caused to the company. The documents in evidence of this assertion are much too numerous to be referred to in detail here, but they can be presented in support hereof.

The story of "recall of one of the most devoted lieutenants of President Leconte" has been often presented as the most positive evidence of the Government's good will and desire to afford protection to the company. Documents in possession of the company show, however, that this "devoted lieutenant" had been so openly active against the company, and his interference in matters outside of the province of his duties were of such character,—all of which was admitted,—that there was no other course open to the Government but to dismiss him at the time.

Mr. Ménos' statement that the Government exempted the company's workmen and other Haitian employees from military service is in flagrant contradiction with all the actual facts and documents presented in support of this company's statement of its troubles in this respect.

Mr. Ménos refers often to the company's failure to present any verifying documents, affidavit or evidence in support of its grievances. The company's correspondence with the Department of Public Works is evidence enough that such facts as are alleged by the company were properly notified to the Government of Haiti in due time, and as to the destruction of its fences, this can be seen and ascertained up to this date throughout the entire length of the 176 kilometers of railroad in operation. The company did not resort to the Justice of the Peace to make affidavits, because the grievances complained of by the company generally occurred in time of revolution when no Justice of the Peace could be found or would answer to a call, at the various places where the trouble occurred. Moreover, the company knows by experience that there is no real value in such affidavits which can be made to say anything for or against the company at the request of anyone.

Furthermore, the grievances about which the company has complained or is claiming redress for, have, in most instances, been the act of Government officials, or of Government forces, or of revolutionary forces which, in time, became Government forces, and it was hardly to be expected that the Justice of the Peace, who is a Government official, dismissible at will, would make an affidavit against his Government.

The other assertions made in this part of Mr. Ménos' memorandum are open to the same criticisms of contradiction with absolute fact, evidenced by documents.

The company was at one time charged with causing frequent but short interruptions of the Government telegraphic line between Port au Prince, Gonaives and Cape Haiti. These were due to the fact that such lines were built on the public highways or near the company's right of way where trees were being cut down and explosives used for blasting; such lines already were in very bad condition and subjected to frequent interruptions more than half the time, and therefore it was next to impossible not to cause minor interruptions, about which the Government officials made much trouble. The company desires to state and can prove that at those very times, it was paying important sums of money weekly to the Government telegraph officials to provide for linemen and inspectors to be present on the spot, ready to make any repairs necessary. This is supported by the company's correspondence with the Department of Public Works and with the director of the Government telegraphs.

Mr. Ménos charges the company with obstructing public highways when everyone knows that the railroad is built on private right of way acquired and paid for by the company from beginning to end of each one of its lines, and that it is only in some very few places that the track crosses the public highways. Of course the building of the railroad caused some little obstruction in some of those places but this was only temporary.

Mr. Ménos further charges the company with the responsibility of the disorders in the work yards, wounding and murders, etc., etc., alleged to have been committed by the company's employees. It must be said, however, that the Government of Haiti having refused to grant to the company the authorization to organize a proper police force of its own for maintenance of order in its construction camps and the safeguarding of its track, and the Government being on the other hand, under the provision of the railroad contract, obliged to give to the company full protection for its employees, property, etc., has entirely failed to comply with this obligation.

4. Various and serious delays caused to the company by the Haitian Government's direct acts or manifest failure to comply with contract obligations cannot be denied.

Mr. Ménos, in his memorandum, indulges in a review of the difficulties which the first organizers of the original company had with the Haitian Government about the execution of the first section of the Gonaives-Hinche Railroad. The Government of Haiti well understands that the company's past history and doings up to the time of the amended contract of April 16, 1910, have nothing whatever to do with the new situation at that date created, and with the new parties brought into the company's operation by said amended agreement; therefore the present company will not make any reply to, or consider any argument or reference made to circumstances prior to the agreement of April 16, 1910, as this agreement included complete disposition of all matters arising prior thereto.

Delays or extensions of time have never been requested from the Government of Haiti by the company, by reason of circumstances chargeable to its own fault, but as arising from circumstances chargeable directly to the Government of Haiti; in other words, as cases of force majeure, entailing upon the company the impossibility of carrying out in the stipulated period some of its obligations, and all such requests have been so admitted by the Government; therefore it seems useless to enter into any further discussion about this matter. This much, however, the company will say. It does not in any degree consider that, under the circumstances explained, invoked or notified from time to time to the Government of Haiti by the company, it was at any of said time liable to any penalty from which it "has benevolently been relieved by the Government of Haiti coming to its rescue". That is beyond any question.

Mr. Ménos' memorandum makes much reference to the alleged fact that the sections of railroad presented to the Government for acceptance have been all uncompleted, and presents as evidence thereof the fact that such sections were accepted "benevolently with the obligations being assumed by the company to execute certain works of completion recognized as immediately necessary, etc". This statement can only be made in ignorance of the correspondence exchanged, or through a denial of the facts prevailing at the time of the acceptance of said sections.

Such discussion has arisen because of the difference of views between the company's engineers (having large experience in railroad construction and equipment and especially in view of the contract stipulations and traffic conditions which are met in Haiti) and the various Government commissions (made up in the majority, in each instance, of openly hostile members, or of utterly incompetent officials who were not even engineers) as to what is in fact "an entirely completed and equipped railroad" built to provide for such traffic conditions as existed or can reasonably be expected to exist in Haiti.

The Government officials have rarely been able to understand that a newly constructed railroad, especially a new roadbed, notwithstanding all the care and money spent on it, never has the stability nor appearance of an old track, and that, however careful engineers may be in constructing a railroad in a country where no data is available; where the country has never been surveyed; no records kept; and no attention paid by the Government officials to the régime of rivers which often change their course after every heavy rainfall, defects in construction will sometimes develop which only can be corrected or remedied after occurrence. The Government officials have often had a tendency to argue that the commissioners sent to inspect were more competent than the engineers of the company who supervised the construction, and who usually were bent on imposing on the company, works which should properly have been executed by the Government at its own expense. This resulted in criticisms and discussions attending the acceptance of each of the sections presented for operation.

The company has finally been obliged to accept the conditions imposed or requested by the Government commissioners in order to not further delay the acceptance of completed sections. It may be interesting to review the correspondence exchanged concerning the various sections so accepted, especially Mr. Doret's report to which reference is made by Mr. Ménos. (Said documents are presented herewith for reference.)

Mr. Ménos contends that the "company,—in which are interested the National City Bank of New York, the National City Company of New York, W. R. Grace & Co., etc. etc.,—could not have been embarrassed by the delayed delivery of the $2,000,000 of bonds for Sections 1, 2 and 3". The Minister apparently desires to convey the idea that the company being possessed of such strong financial backing, could not be embarrassed by any default of the Government of Haiti in carrying out its obligations as to the delivery of bonds and the payment of guarantee of interest. Mr. Ménos seems not to perceive that, if the company really had such strong financial backing, the alleged nonexecution of the obligation to build certain sections of line must then arise from another cause, and certainly no other cause could be imagined therefor than what the company contends; that is, lack of security for capital invested; the perpetual state of revolution or other troubles of the country preventing the physical construction of the line; safety for the company's employees in the different parts of the country where the railroad was to be built; unjustified delays in everything where application had to be made to the Government or for which the company had to depend on facilities or protection due by the Government officials.

It is proper to call attention to the fact that Mr. Ménos is misinformed in respect of those who he says are interested in the National Railroad Company of Haiti. The latter repeatedly has explained but it may be well to repeat it again, that The National City Bank of New York never had any participation or interest in the National Railroad Company of Haiti or any other railroad construction or development proposition in Haiti. W. R. Grace & Co., of New York organized a syndicate to finance a part of the construction of this railroad, and to this syndicate one or two of the officers of the bank, strictly as individuals and as a private matter, subscribed to a small amount of the undertaking. This is the nearest approach to any connection of the National City Bank with the railroad affair.

The question of the date of August 1, 1913 for which Mr. Ménos charges the company of "wilfully trying to create a confusion" is due to an error of the typist, as the date to which the company only could have referred, consistent with the records, is February 1, 1914, and not August 1, 1913. The former is the real interest date on which occurred the first failure of the Government to pay on time the coupon due. The company contends that the delay in the delivery of the bonds relating to Sections 1, 2 and 3, coupled with the failure to pay on time the coupon due on February 1, 1914 caused the construction work on Section 4 and the surveys on the other sections to be stopped in April 1914 and not as was said, in September 1913. This is evidenced by the engineers' reports and statement of expenditures presented herewith. However, construction work was continued by the company on the extensions of Sections 1 and 3 up to June 1914. The mistake on the real dates is furthermore made evident by the fact that Section 14, from Grande Riviere to Bahun, was under construction up to November 1913, and was not accepted until December 5, 1913.

Mr. Ménos refers next to the "inability of the company to perform the obligations devolving upon it and particularly Article XI of the contract of April 16, 1910". It already has been pointed out that Mr. Ménos pretends that the company's financial backing was such that it could not suffer any embarrassment from the failure of the Haitian Government to fulfill its most solemn and most important obligations which were calculated to offer inducement for the investment of capital in the railroad and a positive guarantee for the remuneration of said capital. Mr. Ménos cannot be ignorant of the primary conditions required for the investment of capital anywhere in the world and by all financial organizations making appeal to public credit; but, admitting the company had the financial means to carry out its obligations, what then prevented it from so doing and forced it to "put up a bluff" as Mr. Ménos does not hesitate to qualify the action of the company in notifying to the Government the circumstances which forced it to stop everything in the presence of what was undoubtedly the most positive and unjustified threat to foreclose its concession; a most arbitrary act of the Government of Haiti.

Mr. Ménos gives here another evidence of the strange state of mind of the Haitian officials by referring to the "benevolence of the Government which so frequently saved the company". Strange benevolence indeed when one goes over the long train of hardships and grievances and defaults and delays which the company has had to suffer and to submit to so long!

5. The company must decline to enter into any discussion with Minister Ménos further in respect of the obligation of the Haitian Government to pay the interest and sinking fund charges on the bonds issued by the railroad company as provided for in the contract of concession and under the direct authorization of the Haitian Government. The guarantee of the Haitian Government inscribed upon each bond speaks for itself. This guarantee promises to pay both the interest and sinking fund charges on the various dates on which they shall become due. There is no vagueness in this guarantee and no room for discussion of its intent or meaning.

6. The company, having gone over the allegations contained in Mr. Ménos' memorandum at some length, does not consider it necessary to discuss any further the groundless assertions contained in the final paragraph of the memorandum. One observation, however, is necessary. Mr. Ménos says that, even if the company had been confronted with uncontrollable accidents or the nonfulfilment of an obligation on the part of the Government, it would not have been warranted either in abstaining from notifying the Department of Public Works within the sixty days stipulated in Article VII of the Contract of 1910 of the exceptional circumstances apt to justify a further extension, or in deciding on its own authority to relieve itself of all its engagements.

Mr. Ménos' statement seems inconsistent in view of the very positive act notified both to the Department of Public Works and to the Administrator of Finance of Port au Prince, by a bailiff, in the name and on behalf of the company, on the 16th of September 1914, copy of which is submitted herewith. And further, the company repeats and maintains positively that in practically every instance, the company's officials in Haiti did, by letters to the Department of Public Works or Finances respectively, from time to time as they arose, give notification of the various grievances, delays, nonfulfilment of obligations detrimental to the company or interfering with the execution of its works, thereby preventing the fulfilment in the time stipulated, of some of its obligations.

There can be no doubt that what the contract refers to by this delay of sixty days for such notifications, concerns facts and occurrences which could not be directly chargeable to the Haitian Government or its officials, and it is necessary to consider that in fact such occurrences and disturbances constituting cases of force majeure had been almost continuous up to September 1914 when the present difficulties occurred between the Government and the company, and thereafter continued in the Republic of Haiti without cessation up to the intervention of the United States. Under these conditions it was necessary to wait until they were ended to give such notification to the Government of Haiti.

The company did, in the beginning, notify the Government of the circumstances of force majeure, requesting some extension of time, but it considered it useless to do that later on, as there seemed to be no expectation of obtaining any just appreciation of the situation by the Government officials.

The question of forfeiture of the concession and proceedings carried on against the company's concession are unjustified and in violation of the company's concession and rights.

Appended herewith for consideration is the opinion of two eminent lawyers of Haiti on this question, Mr. Edmond Lespinasse, former Secretary of State of Finances and Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Etheart, former Dean of the Bar and Professor in the Law School of Port au Prince.

But after all, and even going to the extreme, let us suppose for an instant that the company did really incur foreclosure or the forfeiture of its concession, what effect could that have on the concession as far as the Government is concerned? Surely that would not liberate the Government from the complete fulfilment of the obligations arising out of the contract. The concession, being put up at auction and sold to the highest bidder, would merely change hands; but such procedure would in no way relieve the Government from any of its contract-obligations. For it must be remembered that forfeiture does not cancel the concession nor change its general conditions (except perhaps as to the time for the construction which would have to be extended so as to suit the conditions under which the purchaser would take over the property and resume construction work).

In other words, forfeiture is not a penalty provided or intended to cancel the obligations of the Government resulting from the conditions of concession, but merely a procedure whereby the concession is taken away from a party unable to fully execute it, in order to transfer it to some other party in a position to fully carry out the provisions of the concession, as it stood at the time of the forfeiture (works already executed, works yet to be executed, material, etc.).

The company therefore reiterates in the most positive manner that it has not committed or omitted acts under its concession rendering it liable to the penalty of foreclosure; that from the commencement of the work in April 1911 the company had, for its own welfare, every incentive to prosecute the work of construction with all possible speed, and that it did so prosecute with all its energy the construction of the railroad so far as possibly it could in view of more or less continual conditions of revolution and obstructive tactics of Government officials, all constituting cases of force majeure; that the company duly notified to the proper officials of Government these acts of force majeure as from time to time they occurred, but in almost every instance the Government officials failed to respond with the military or police protection or other observations of the terms of the concession.

The railroad company today is entitled to receive from the Haitian Government a sum representing the semiannual interest payments upon the bonds issued by the railroad company under the authorization of the Haitian Government, for a period of two and one-half years together with accrued interest thereon; it has suffered damages to its property aggregating a large amount of money for which it is entitled to receive compensation; it has had, because of various acts of recent Governments of Haiti, to stop its construction work and disorganize its operation of such portions of the road as have been constructed; and it is to the settlement of these matters that the company respectfully requests the prompt attention of Minister Ménos who has been charged by his Government with the settlement of these affairs.

Respectfully submitted.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 17, 1917, 5 p. m.

Your January 11, 11 a. m. Department understands that French bondholders are about to commence foreclosure proceedings and can only be prevented by the statement that the railway question will be immediately taken up and decided. Railroad officials believe that if Ruan is authorized to deal directly with representatives of the railroad they may prevail upon the French bondholders to defer foreclosure. In view of the fact that the Haitian Government stated that Ménos was authorized to settle the question for it in conference with representatives of the railroad, the Department feels that there is no necessity for umpire and desires appointment of Ruan with full powers to settle this question as outlined in Department's January 2, 5 p. m. * * *

LEGATION OF HAITI,
Washington, January 23, 1917.

DEAR MR. STABLER: I take great pleasure in delivering herewith to you two copies of a supplemental note on the controversy pending between the Haitian Government and the National Railroad Company of Haiti. One is intended for the Department of State and I beg you to forward the other to the company's representative in New York.

As I told you yesterday I received instructions, dated December 28, 1916, from my Government last week which enable me to carry on negotiations with the company without again referring to Port au Prince.

Be pleased [etc.]

[Inclosure—Translation]

SUPPLEMENTAL REMARKS CONCERNING THE NATIONAL RAILROAD COMPANY OF HAITI

It appears from the discussion carried on in October 1916 over the controversy between the Haitian Government and the National Railroad Company of Haiti that the parties in the case are agreed in principle on: 1st, reducing the length of the Port au Prince-Cape Haitien, Gonaives-Hinche-Gros Morne lines; 2d, staying the foreclosure proceedings instituted against the company; 3d, paying the company its claims for transportation, requisitions, and loan of implements.

As to its claim for damages it seems to have attached importance solely to facts and circumstances pleaded from time to time with the one object of obtaining numerous extensions of time and of standing off forfeiture. At any rate a compromise implies reciprocal concessions.

There remains in truth but one difference: the interpretation of Article 12 of the specifications annexed to the Concession Contract of September 12, 1906.

I. The company admits that the exemption from customs duties stipulated by that article must be confined to the case for which it is made, but agrees that its claim in this respect is conformable to the meaning of the stipulation of the concession. It is easily seen that the company is merely begging the question, for the point is to know whether food, drugs, fodder, horseshoes, etc., are indispensable for the construction, operation and maintenance of the railway. That there is no direct necessary connection between those commodities and a railway is not open to question. If the company sees fit to undertake to feed, clothe and shelter its employees and to purchase what it needs therefor abroad and not in Haiti, it makes it its affair and cannot believe in earnest that this special arrangement with its employees possesses the virtue of making the above-mentioned articles requisites of the railway.

The truth is that the word approvisionnement has, in connection with public works, a technical meaning different from its acceptance in ordinary parlance. It applies to material, or fuel, or oils and lubricants. Article 10 of the specifications attached to the contract made with R. Deetjen on July 10, 1891, for the construction and operation of a railway from Port au Prince to Gonaives so declares in positive terms: "The approvisionnements intended for the operation, understood to be coal, machine oil and tallow, may be imported free of duty." Article 13 of the Léogane aux Cayes Railway Contract and Article 9 of the annexed specifications dated March 29, 1911, are just as explicit. (See the Traité des Travaux Publics of Albert Christophle and the specifications adopted in France. See also Art. 35 of the specifications of September 11, 1893, for the Cape Haitien-Gonaives Railway, Art. 8 of the Deetjen Contract; Art. 11 of the illumination contracts made November 9, 1891, June 12, July 26 and September 14, 1894; Art. 10 of the specifications with the National Railroad Company of Haiti; Art. 9 of the Port au Prince-Aux Cayes Railway Contract and Art. 12 of the annexed specifications dated August 27, 1906; Art. 17 of the Illumination Contract of St. Mare dated September 7, 1906.)

Furthermore the very content of Art. 12 under consideration shows that it contemplates not articles of food but all appliances and supplies such as material, machinery, tools, cars, fuel, oils, lubricants, that is, all that is directly and necessarily connected with the construction, operation and maintenance of the railway.

And again even though the language of the article may be obscure or equivocal, the doubt cannot be dispelled in favor of the company since it bears on an exceptional clause which it stipulated in its own interest.

II. In regard to the tonnage dues, they are classed by the law of September 4, 1905 in the category of dues bearing on the hull of the vessels. It cannot in any way imply that vessels, instead of continuing to pay the dues according to their gross tonnage, will pay in proportion to the imported merchandise. This modification in favor of the vessel does not alter the nature of the dues; it only affects the mode of appraisal, for the same persons are subject to it under the law as they were before. The dues are to be paid by the vessels which also pay the semaphore, pilot, health, water and entry dues. And it goes without saying that in collecting freight, they also bring those various dues into the account and that whether these dues be rated according to their gross tonnage or to the bulk of the merchandise imported by them, the freight is always determined by weight or measurement. And for that reason bills of dues payable by the vessels are not made out in the name of the importers but in none other than that of the steamship agents or consignees of the vessels who are responsible under Article 117 of the said customs law because they represent the vessel. The consequence is that the company is not exempted from the tonnage dues any more than from the semaphore and other dues reckoned according to the gross tonnage of the vessels.

It is further proper to add that whenever the Haitian Government was willing to grant exemption from tonnage dues, it did so in express terms as shown in Article 10 of the specifications of the Cape Haitien-Grande Rivière Railway, dated September 1, 1898, which reads as follows: The material, machinery, tools, all implements required for the construction, operation and maintenance of the railway as well as the ships bringing the same are exempted from all customs duties and dues, except those which already come under a special concession.

The same preciseness is found in the instruments hereinbelow named: Contract of 1890 for the laying of the system of telegraphic land lines, Art. 14;—Lanoue Sterlin Contract of September 25, 1891, Art. 4;—d'Aubigny and Co. Contract of December 18, 1891, Art. 16.—Osson Contract of September 28, 1892, Art. 4;—T. Auguste Contract of July 18, 1891, Art. 4;—L. Laroche Contract of June 8, 1893, Art. 9;—Rinchère Contract of July 26, 1894, Art. 3;—H. Blanchet & Co. Contract of August 1, 1894, Art. 4;—Acluche Contracts of August 2, 1894, Articles 4 and 6;—Contract of August 21, 1890, for the exploitation of Gonave, Art. 5;—Contract of July 12, 1900, with the Northern Railway Company, Art. 6;—specifications of the Port au Prince-L'Etang Railway dated May 23, 1899, Art. 10;—Contract of September 5, 1906, of the G. C. S. Railway Company, Art. 6;—Contract of August 29, 1906, of the Cape Haitien-Ouanaminthe Railway, Art. 10, amended specifications, Art. 12;—Durosier Contract, August 14, 1909, Art. 3;—Boucard Contract of July 16, 1910, Art. 5;—M. AMERICAN LEGATION, Port au Prince, January 22, 1917, 11 p. m.

Your January 17, 5 p. m. received January 19 and instructions complied with twentieth. The following reply of the Haitian Government received today:

[Translation]

I have had the honor to receive on Saturday January 20 the letter of the same date that your excellency addressed to me to transmit to me the instructions which you had received from your Government relative to the litigation existing between the Haitian Government and the National Railroad Company.

The sincere desire and the firm will of the Government of Haiti to settle definitely this litigation cannot be put in doubt.

It is absolutely correct that Mr. Ménos has had instructions to negotiate an arrangement and the delay of which the Government of the United States complains is justified by the fact that the National Railroad Company, having recommended the project of arrangement proposed by Mr. Ménos, by virtue of instructions our Minister at Washington was compelled to refer to us; the claim of the company not being acceptable to the Haitian Government, the latter then thought the best method in which to settle everything was to require the enlightened opinion of Financial Adviser Ruan and Engineer Oberlin. The Government had already caused to be prepared the reports and documents indispensable for the facilitation of the work of Messrs. Ruan and Oberlin, when suddenly the latter was called to the United States. The Haitian Government requested a delay from the American Government in order that Mr. Oberlin might prolong his sojourn in Haiti; but this request was not favorably received according to what your excellency advised me by your letter December 19 last. It was then that the American expert who appeared necessary for the complete examination of the question failing us, the Government with the single aim of hastening the resumption of the negotiations at Washington, thought that it must renounce the consultation which it had had in view, and under December 28, 1916, transmitted to Mr. Ménos the text of an arrangement to be proposed to the National Company under the good offices of the Department of State.

It results from these facts, Mr. Minister, that the delay which the settlement of the litigation has encountered, can only be charged to circumstances, and that it would be excessive to suspect on this occasion the good faith of any one of the interested parties.

In conclusion, and to furnish fresh proof, both of the high interest which we attach to arriving at solution at the earliest possible moment, as well as for our respect for contracts entered into by the State, the Government of the Republic, in conformity with the provisions of Article 7 of the Contract of Concession of September 12, 1906, the article relative to arbitration [apparent omission]:

First, to give full powers to the Financial Adviser to settle with the arbitrator of the National Railroad Company the disputed questions pending between the parties; and second, to recognize that the Haitian Government cannot be otherwise than be bound by the powers conferred upon Mr. Ruan [apparent omission], by virtue of a contract of concession of the railroad, a contract which none of the parties is supposed to want to violate or annul.

And finally, to avoid from now on any possible misunderstanding, it is of moment, to draw the attention of your excellency's Government to this fundamental consideration, that if the American Government, renouncing henceforth the exercise of its good offices, presented the question of the railroad company as a claim in favor of an American company, it would yet be necessary to refer to Article 12 of the Convention of September 16, 1915, relative to the settlement of direct claims, which prescribes that "the Haitian Government agrees to execute with the United States a protocol for the settlement, by arbitration or otherwise, of all pending pecuniary claims of foreign corporations, companies, citizens or subjects against Haiti".

Your January 22, 11 p. m. You will inform Government of Haiti that Government of United States has noted with pleasure and satisfaction its expressions of desire to settle definitely the outstanding differences with the National Railroad Company and that Minister Ménos has informed the Department that he has received instructions to continue his conferences in Washington with representatives of the railroad company looking toward a definite conclusion of this question and that if any point in controversy remains unsettled after conclusion of these conferences it will be referred to Mr. Ruan who will act as sole arbitrator with definite powers to settle any points placed before him.

The Government of the United States in its desire to see this long-standing question settled will still lend its good offices to the further conferences in Washington between Minister Ménos and the representatives of the railroad company on the understanding that the decision by Mr. Ruan upon such points as may be presented to him for settlement, shall be binding.

Your February 2, noon. On February 15 agreement on principal points reached between Ménos and Farnham in National Railroad Company dispute. Copy of agreement as well as list of unsettled points to be referred to Ruan as umpire go forward by mail instructions.

In order to facilitate settlement of question Department offered to exert its diplomatic good offices in bringing before Government of Haiti two points, which were considered as being outside of matters under discussion, in which railroad company was greatly interested and wished to have Haitian Government settle at earliest possible moment. These points are as follows:

First: The affixing of the signature of the Minister of Finance of the Republic of Haiti, or his designate, to the guarantee of the Haitian Government inscribed upon bonds of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti to an amount of $44,600 which were duly authorized by the Haitian Government in June, 1914, to be issued upon 2.23 kilometers of principal track constructed and put in operation in May 1914. Second: the payment of the six semi-annual coupons now in default, together with accrued interest thereon, upon the authorized outstanding bonds of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti at the earliest date upon which the Financial Adviser shall have available for such purpose funds of the Government of Haiti. Instructions have been given to the secretary of the railroad company at Port au Prince to place at the disposition of the American Minister and of the Financial Adviser all documents and information concerning both the acceptance by the Haitian Government of the 2.23 kilometers of track, and concerning the defaults upon the bonds of the railroad company both as above referred to.

You will present these two matters to Government of Haiti stating that this Government is confident that the Government of Haiti will give them immediate attention and issue instructions at the earliest possible moment for the signature of the bonds and that the question of the payment of the interest on the railroad bonds will be taken up as soon as possible.

You will also give a paraphrase of this cable to the Financial Adviser for his information and state to him the importance of early settlement of these two matters presented by railroad company.

SIR: With reference to the Department's cable of March 1, 4 p. m., you are informed that on February 15, 1917, an agreement was reached by Minister Ménos, representing the Government of Haiti, and Mr. R. A copy of the agreements, a list of the points¹ to be submitted to the Financial Adviser for the Government of Haiti and a copy of a communication from Mr. Farnham, dated February 16, 1917,⁴ are enclosed herewith, for your information.

In order to expedite the settlement of this entire question the Department offered to use its good offices in bringing before the Haitian Government two points which were considered as being outside of the general discussion, but in which the railroad company is greatly interested and which it desires to have settled at the earliest possible moment by the Haitian Government. These two points are set forth in detail in the letter of Mr. Farnham above referred to, and you are instructed to present them without delay to the Government of Haiti. You will state in this connection that the Government of the United States is confident that the Government of Haiti will give these matters prompt attention, and that it will issue proper instructions at the

[Inclosure]

Between the undersigned, 1. The Government of the Republic of Haiti, represented by M. Solon Ménos, its Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington on the one part;

2. The Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de fer d'Haiti, represented by Mr. R. L. Farnham, its president, on the other part;

Both parties desiring to bring to an end all the differences and litigations now existing between them, it is agreed:

Art. 1. The Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de fer d'Haiti agrees to change the location of the main line of the railroad between St. Marc and Bahon,—the present terminals—from that set forth in the concessionary contract of the railroad to a more direct and shorter route.

Art. 2. The definite location of the new route between St. Marc and Bahon shall be determined by a commission of engineers, one appointed by the Government of Haiti and one by the railroad company, and such questions as this commission shall be unable to agree upon shall be submitted to an engineer named by the Government of the United States whose findings shall be accepted by both parties hereto as final. This commission shall consider and determine all questions concerning the location and establishment of the new line and the time of completion of the same, subject to circumstances constituting force majeure which term, considering the extraordinary conditions prevailing in all manufacturing and transportation industries shall comprise delays in the construction of the new line caused by inability, duly established, to obtain deliveries of necessary material or delays in the shipment of the same. Should the United States become involved in war with another power such a contingency shall be considered a condition of force majeure and the railroad company shall suffer no penalty whatsoever for such delays in the prosecution of construction as may result therefrom.

The work of construction of the new located line connecting St. Marc and Bahon shall be commenced within four months from the date of the final determination of the commission of engineers or the third engineer in respect to the definite location and other details concerning the change of route as set forth herein.

Art. 3. The company withdraws its demand for compensation on account of increased cost of construction of the line over the modified or changed route.

The company, while reserving all existing rights of route and construction provided by said contract covering the present location of the line between St. Marc and Bahon, with the view of constructing all of such portions of the original line at such future time as may be agreed upon between the parties hereto, also withdraws its demand for compensation on account of the loss of construction profits that would result from the immediate execution of the said contract.

Art. 4. The Government of Haiti declares that it abandons, and hereby does abandon the foreclosure proceedings instituted against the company.

No. 136

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, April 30, 1917.

SIR: Referring to the Department's cable of March 1, 4 p. m., and to the Department's instruction No. 115 of March 2, 1917, in regard to the differences between the Government of Haiti and the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti, I have the honor to forward herewith copy of a note addressed by this Legation to the Foreign Office under date of March 8, 1917, as well as copy and translation of the reply thereto dated April 23, 1917.

As you will observe, the Minister for Foreign Affairs states, in the above reply, that the Council of the Secretaries of State decided on March 15, 1917, that the railroad company is not entitled to the interest guaranteed because the company had voluntarily suspended operating during the period corresponding to that guarantee, and that by its fault it had incurred foreclosure which had been legally declared; and that with respect to the bonds for the 2K230m., the signature is subordinate to the acceptance by the railroad company of the agreement signed between the Haitian Minister at Washington and Mr. Farnham on the 15th of February last.

In this connection I have the honor to report that pursuant to my note of March 8, I had two interviews with Mr. Borno, the then Minister of Foreign Affairs, to press the points at issue, the result of which was that I was given to understand that the bonds would be signed and that as to the payment of the six semiannual coupons now in default, there was under consideration a proposition, as a solution of this point, to extend the concession of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti for a period equivalent to that during which payment had not been made. Mr. Borno stated that he looked forward to the Legation's good offices in having this matter presented to the railroad company, to which I agreed.

I advised Mr. Charles Dupuy, the representative of the railroad company here, of the above, which, later on, he informed me had been confirmed to him by Mr. Borno to whom he had remarked that this solution could not be a satisfactory one to the present bondholders, for the reason that they would not receive the interest due them.

No. 136

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Port au Prince, March 8, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: The Department of State informs this Legation that the Haitian Minister in Washington and the representative of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti have agreed upon the principal points of the differences between the Haitian Government and the railroad company, that a list of unsettled points to be referred to Mr. Ruan, as umpire, has been forwarded by mail, and that as to the two points which were considered as belonging outside of matters under discussion, the Department, in order to facilitate the settlement of the question, offered to exert its diplomatic good offices in bringing the same before the Haitian Government.

In consequence, acting under instructions from the Secretary of State, I have the honor to present, for the favorable consideration of your excellency's Government, the above-mentioned two matters, which are, (1) the affixing of the signature of the Minister of Finance of the Republic of Haiti, or his designate to the guarantee of the Haitian Government inscribed upon the bonds of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti to an amount of $44,600.00 which were duly authorized by the Haitian Government in June 1914, to be issued upon 2.23 kilometers of principal track constructed and put in operation in May 1914; and (2) the payment of the six semiannual coupons, now in default, with accrued interest thereon upon the authorized outstanding bonds of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti at the earliest date upon which the Financial Adviser shall have available for such purpose funds of the Government of Haiti.

My Government is confident that the Government of Haiti will give these matters immediate attention and will issue instructions at the earliest possible moment for the signing of the bonds, and will take up as soon as possible the question of the payment of the interest on the railroad bonds.

Be pleased to accept [etc.]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Minister Blanchard

MINISTRY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Port au Prince, April 23, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: By a letter of the 8th of March last, addressed to the Department of Foreign Affairs, your excellency asked, in conformity with instructions from the Secretary of State, that the following points, related to the affair of the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti, be examined:

1st. The signature of the Government of Haiti on the bonds amounting to $44,600 relative to the construction of 2K230m. of road completed at Port au Prince and at St. Marc;

2d. The payment of six coupons of guarantee of interest plus the interest in arrears.

In reply, I have the honor to inform your excellency that the Council of the Secretaries of State has decided in their sitting of the 15th of March, that the guarantee of interest is not due to the Compagnie Nationale des Chemins de Fer d'Haiti, because it voluntarily stopped the traffic in the course of the period corresponding to this guarantee and that, by its own fault, it has incurred the foreclosure which has been legally pronounced.

In regard to the bonds relative to the 2K230m., the signature is subordinate to the acceptance by the company of the agreement signed between Mr. Solon Ménos and Mr. Farnham at Washington the 15th of February last.

Please accept [etc.].

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT, FRANCISCO BERTRAND, TO THE CONGRESS

File No. 815.032/15

Minister Ewing to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

No. 391

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Tegucigalpa, January 2, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the Honduran National Congress convened yesterday, New Year's Day, for its opening session at two o'clock in the afternoon, and that all the Deputies with the diplomatic and consular corps listened attentively to the reading by the President of his message.

At a little before two o'clock the large hall was crowded with visitors who held entrance cards and at the appointed hour President Bertrand arrived, escorted by the Ministers of his Cabinet, while the assembly arose and remained standing during the playing of the Honduran national anthem. Thereafter President Bertrand read his message and I have the honor to enclose a copy of the address, in duplicate.

President Bertrand spoke of the actual friendly relations between the Central American Republics, due to the frankness and fairness with which all international questions were discussed, but made practically no mention concerning Mexican affairs nor the European war. The boundary disputes with Guatemala and Salvador were but briefly mentioned and their early solution was forecasted in an optimistic line of thought.

On the whole the message is a well written report of what has taken place during the past year and unquestionably made a very favorable impression on all who heard it.

[Inclosure—Extract—Translation]

Both the Court of Justice and the International Office of Central America are performing their duties as regularly as may be desirable, each one of those important institutions fulfilling its respective fruitful mission.

Owing to its nature and importance and to its having been the subject of wide publicity the treaty which, under the name of Bryan-Chamorro, was concluded by the Government of Nicaragua with that of the United States of America on August 5, 1914, is well-known; and in connection with that treaty the Government of Salvador, seeing a direct and serious menace to its rights and interests in the power conferred therein to establish a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca, instituted action against the Government of Nicaragua on August 14, 1916, before the Central American Court of Justice, the main purpose of which being that the defendant should refrain from carrying out the said convention.

The action was primarily based on the right of joint dominion which the Salvadorean Government means to exercise in the waters of the Bay of Fonseca, the Government of this Republic sent a protest to the first named and to the Central American Court of Justice in order to protect the rights which belong to Honduras over the islands and waters of the Gulf, bearing in mind that the adjacent territorial sea which, in accordance with the universal doctrine and our domestic law, is nothing but a continuation of the national territory, subject, therefore, to the exclusive sovereignty of the State.

The Government, jealous and mindful of all that tends to guarantee the interests of the nation, hastened to instruct its Minister accredited at Washington to lay before the American Government the rights which Honduras holds on the Gulf of Fonseca and to object to the treaty then being negotiated between the United States and Nicaragua whenever any of its provisions should invade such rights or in any way affect the sovereignty and independence of this Republic.

The American Senate, owing to the protest entered by Costa Rica, Honduras and Salvador, added the statement that it is not intended to affect any existing right of any of the said states.

The Central American Court of Justice is engaged in carrying on the proceedings and study of the matter above referred to and it is expected that its decision will shortly be known.

Our relations with the United States of North America and the other Republics of the continent that have always been frank and loyal are feeling the beneficent influence of the spirit of Pan Americanism which happily animates the peoples and Governments and is given expression in international acts and practices of the highest significance and consequence in the various branches of political and social existence.

This Government received an invitation to take part in the scientific congress which met in Washington in December, 1915, and accepted with the greatest pleasure that very important invitation, appointing two representatives, Doctors Don Fausto Dávila and Don Carlos Alberto Uclés, one of the main results of the congress being the establishment of the Institute of International Law whose ends are marked with the utmost importance.

SIR: The Department has been informed by the Honorable John J. Eagan, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York, that Domenico Andreaccio, of 501 Grand Street, Hoboken, New Jersey, and an interpreter in the employ of this Government at Ellis Island, New York, desires to have arrangements made to enable his son, Guglielmo (William), who has been studying at the "Nazionale Convitto," Potenza, Province of Basilicata, Italy, for some time, to return to the United States to reside with his father. The Department has been furnished with documentary evidence showing that Guglielmo Andreaccio was born at Hoboken, New Jersey, on February 13, 1898, and that his father, Domenico Andreaccio, obtained naturalization as a citizen of the United States in the Court of Common Pleas of Hudson County, New Jersey, on March 2, 1892. It appears that the young man has written his father that he has been summoned to report for military service in the Italian Army at the close of his school term in March, 1917. It further appears that the young man may be communicated with in care of Mr. Alfredo Tramutoli at Potenza, Province of Basilicata, Italy.

Inasmuch as the citizenship of Guglielmo Andreaccio has been established to the satisfaction of the Department, you will please present the facts in the case to the appropriate Italian authorities and ask that he be released from the performance of military service in the Italian Army and permitted to return to the United States. You are authorized to issue an emergency passport to the young man to enable him to leave Italy and return to the United States to reside with his father, who appears to be domiciled in this country.

Referring to note verbale No. 1456 of February 2 last, the Royal Ministry for Foreign Affairs has the honor to inform the American Embassy that, according to a recent communication from the Royal Ministry of War, even admitting that Annibale Donati has lost his Italian citizenship through the American naturalization of his father while still a minor, he is at all events entirely under the obligation of military service in Italy, according to the ruling of the now repealed Art. 12 of the Civil Code, which was still in force at the time when, having reached the proper age, he had to report himself for military duty.

Besides young Donati has shown a thorough understanding of his obligation, for since 1907 he has regularly performed his military duty in Italy, and has even been engaged on active duty; he is now under arms, having been recalled to the 4th Regiment of Engineers in the war zone.

ROME, April 11, 1917.

In reply to the note verbale of March 20, No. 1508, and to the preceding ones of the Embassy of the United States of America, relating to Vito Messino, the Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs has the honor to bring to the Embassy's attention the fact that, the above-named Messino, though born in America must be considered an Italian citizen as he is the son of an Italian citizen; neither can it be held that he has lost his Italian citizenship—according to Italian law—following the naturalization of his father; as this happened, as the Embassy will note, the first of February, 1915, after the son had already become of age.

It must be recognized, therefore, that Vito Messino is subject to full military service in Italy, and his release from the Army cannot be consented to.

File No. 365.117/551

No. 675

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Rome, May 3, 1917.

SIR: Referring to the Department's instruction No. 497 of March 6 and to its telegram No. 751 of March 10² in regard to the exemption from military service and permission to return to the United States of Guglielmo Andreaccio, I have the honor to enclose herewith translation of a note received today from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs stating that the Ministry of War declines to release this young man on the ground of his long residence in Italy and of his having neglected to claim foreign nationality.

The Foreign Office's reply refers to the Embassy's two "follow up" notes on the subject; a copy of the Embassy's original communication of March 12 was enclosed by the Consul at Naples in his despatch to the Department of March 25 reporting upon the subject of Andreaccio's application for a passport.

The following extract from the translation of a letter addressed by Andreaccio to the Consulate at Naples March 24, which was also forwarded by the Consul in his above-mentioned despatch, would appear to support the contention of the Ministry of War:

I am registered in the record of births of Ruoti. In order to be admitted to the schools my mother had me registered in the Italian registers of birth.

At present I am waiting the decision as to which military school I am to be sent as I have asked to be admitted to either Artillery, Engineers or Infantry.

The Convitto Nazionale at which he was educated is a Government institution.

In accordance with the Department's telegram of March 10 to the Embassy, Mr. White wrote Andreaccio on March 13 to apply in person at the Consulate for an emergency passport. As will be seen from the young man's letter referred to above he replied that he could not visit the Consulate until April 4 when his lyceum examinations would be over. On April 17 the Consul informed the Embassy that Andreaccio had been ordered to report on that date for military service, and added that he had neglected to apply as instructed for an emergency passport.

The fact of Andreaccio's not having an American passport would have made no difference with the military authorities at this stage of the proceedings as the Embassy had previously claimed him as a native-born American citizen by its note of March 12.

Awaiting the Department's instructions as to whether further steps should be taken,

Referring to notes verbales Nos. 1551 and 1571 of the 17th and 27th of April last respectively, the Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs has the honor to inform the Embassy of the United States of America that, according to a very recent communication of the Royal Ministry of War, the military authorities of the Kingdom cannot consent to the release from military service and the return to the United States of Guglielmo Andreaccio.

It appears indeed after careful inquiry, that the young man in question has resided in Italy for nine years, and is the son of a father who was once an Italian citizen; he has therefore been duly entered on the list of leva of Ruoti, the commune of which his father was a native.

And whereas, at the time of his enrollment on the list on February 8, 1917 he did not in any way claim foreign citizenship, he must be considered to have become an Italian citizen according to Article 3 of Law No. 555 dated June 13 1912, and is therefore under the obligation of full military duties to the Kingdom.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Tokyo, March 13, 1917, 8 p. m.

My telegram of March 10, 5 p. m. Today the funeral service of the late Ambassador was held here. The Imperial Prince and Princess Nashimoto attended as representatives of the Emperor and the Empress. There were present besides one Prince and two Princesses of the blood, the other Imperial families sending representatives. The pallbearers were the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs, the British, French, Italian and Russian Ambassadors and Consul General Scidmore. The entire diplomatic corps, the Cabinet, military and naval officers of high rank and representatives of the customhouse and of practically every Japanese and foreign organization of social or business importance in the life of the capital were present. The hearse was escorted by a detachment of cavalry and the route lined with a guard of honor consisting of two regiments under the command of a general of brigade. Minute guns were fired and a special train provided to carry the body and Embassy staff to Yokohama. At the Imperial Government's suggestion all details were arranged in consultation with the Foreign Office and the Imperial household. On account of the limited capacity of the cathedral the body lay in state at the Embassy yesterday, the Emperor sending a floral wreath and Captain Marquis Mayeda and Captain Kato of the Imperial Army being despatched as a guard of honor for the bier. In Yokohama representatives of the prefectorial Government and of the Municipality met the party, the streets being hung with flags and guarded by police. The body lies at present in the mortuary of the Naval Hospital there. In all these ceremonies no mark of honor, public or private, has been withheld and I cannot in this telegram adequately express the extreme consideration, official and unofficial, which the Japanese Government has shown in this sad event. A communication from the Minister for Foreign Affairs in requesting me to tender my Government in the name of the Imperial Government his sincere condolence states:

It gives me high gratification that since his excellency came to this country in 1913 to represent his country as its Ambassador the friendly relations between the two countries have grown closer and firmer than ever.

A further communication received from him last night states:

In order to testify to the sentiments of sincere sympathy and attachment entertained by Japan towards the United States which now mourns over the loss of its worthy representative, his excellency, the late Honorable George W. Guthrie, the Imperial Government are willing to place at the disposal of the American Government one of His Imperial Majesty's warships for conveyance of the body of the deceased from Japan to the United States.

The communication requests that the Imperial Government be informed after receipt whether this offer will be agreeable to the American Government and to the bereaved family of the late Ambassador and if so whether the American Government would be willing to give an assurance that the Japanese warship to be dispatched on this particular mission will be exempted from the strict application of the rules of neutrality in the United States respecting the supply of coal, water and other provisions, and the duration of stay in the territorial waters of the United States both on the outward and homeward voyages in so far as such exemption is necessary for the successful discharge of the mission.

In this matter Mrs. Guthrie's wish will conform to that of the Department.

Your March 13. You may say to the Japanese Government that the Government and people of the United States are deeply touched by the many thoughtful and attentive marks of respect which have been shown to the memory of Mr. Guthrie and the many acts of kindness which have been extended to the bereaved wife. Mr. Guthrie's death is a loss to both countries for his services as Ambassador were exceptional in promoting closer friendship between them. The additional courtesy shown by the Imperial Government in placing at the disposal of this Government a warship to convey the remains of Mr. Guthrie to his native land is acknowledged with much appreciation. The generous offer is gratefully accepted. The American Government willingly gives the assurances asked that the Japanese warship to be despatched will be exempt from the strict application of the rules of neutrality in so far as such exemption is necessary for the successful discharge of this sad mission.

Azuma, first-class cruiser bearing Mr. Guthrie's remains, will leave Yokohama about April 30, arriving San Francisco May 21. Two Japanese Naval Officers will accompany it, one of them as far as Pittsburg to represent the Imperial Navy at the funeral there. Mrs. Guthrie will probably return steamship Colombia leaving Yokohama May 4 and arriving San Francisco 22. Foreign Office requests that facilities be granted Azuma to purchase coal Honolulu on outward and return voyage and possibly at San Francisco and asks to be informed as to naval courtesies on entering the latter port. I beg to recommend that one of the military or naval officers attached to this Embassy be ordered to accompany the body as escort.

My telegram of April 2, 1 p. m. At 3 p. m. today Azuma sailed from Yokohama bearing the body of the late Ambassador, Arnell accompanying it. After a short service at the Naval Hospital which was attended by the Embassy and consular staffs, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Vice Ministers Foreign Affairs and Navy, Chief of the Naval Staff, and other Admirals, officials of the Imperial Household Department, Mayor of Yokohama, and other high Government officers, the body was taken at noon to the sea wall; there it was received by officers of the navy and conveyed to cruiser where the Admiral's room, which was draped with flags, had been prepared for its reception. The casket was met at the wharf by a guard of honor composed of bluejackets carrying rifles with a naval band and at the vessel was given a salute of 19 guns. The battleship Suwo was brought from Yokohama to take part in the ceremony. Commander Tamura and Lieutenant Commander Nakashima, representing the Imperial Navy, accompany the Azuma as special escort, former ordered to proceed to Pittsburg. In to-day's ceremonies no detail was omitted by the Foreign Office and the Navy Department to emphasize the esteem in which the Ambassador was held and the friendliness of the Imperial Government for the United States.

ADMISSION OF JAPANESE "PICTURE BRIDES" INTO THE UNITED STATES UNDER THE IMMIGRATION LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

File No. 894.4054/11

*The Assistant Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of State*DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, April 24, 1917.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 18th instant,¹ with which you transmit copy of a memorandum from the Japanese Ambassador with an excerpt from the Japanese Civil Code bearing on the subject of marriage, I beg to state that the purpose of the request, made informally by the Bureau of Immigration of this Department, with respect to this subject was to ascertain, not only what the exact terms of the law of Japan with respect to marriage may be, but also whether the laws of Japan provide for and make legal a marriage contracted under such laws while one party to the marriage is actually in a foreign jurisdiction and the other party is living in Japan on the date the marriage takes place. In other words, does the law of Japan provide for and recognize as legal the marriage of a couple one of whom, at the date of marriage, is in a foreign jurisdiction and the other of whom is in Japan, in the same sense and to the same degree as though both parties to the marriage were actually in Japan at the time the marriage was contracted.

A provision of the immigration law becoming effective May 5 excludes from the United States illiterate aliens, with certain exceptions, one of which is that an alien residing in this country may send for his wife and the latter may be admitted although illiterate, if otherwise admissible. In preparing regulations putting this law into effect, there is no intention to permit the said exception to be availed of by an unmarried woman who comes to a United States port and claims upon arrival that she has been sent for by a man in the United States who is desirous of marrying her at the port before her admission; that is, it is not intended to permit an illiterate woman to qualify for admission, on the claim that she is the wife of a man in the United States, by marrying a resident man after such woman has applied for entry, or by claiming that she is the wife of a man in the United States when in point of fact the laws of the country whence she comes do not provide for and make legal and binding the kind of marriage claimed to have taken place.

In view of the above, it is necessary for the Department to reach a definite conclusion as to whether or not the so-called "picture" or "proxy" brides who come to this country from Japan are regarded in that country and under the laws thereof as actually being the wives of the men to whom they claim to have been married while they were residing in Japan and the men living here, under the provisions of existing laws providing therefor. The excerpt from the Japanese law furnished by the Ambassador contains nothing, so far as this Department has been able to determine, that would justify, of itself, the conclusion that these marriages are provided for by existing laws and recognized as complete, legal and binding in Japan.

Washington, April 28, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of even date transmitting to me a copy of a letter from the Department of Labor asking for further information upon the subject of the so-called "picture brides."

In elucidation of the point inquired about by the Department of Labor and in amplification of my previous memorandum on this subject, I beg to state that in the law of Japan it is provided that marriage is complete and takes effect immediately upon its being notified either in writing or orally to the registrar by both parties with the participation in the act of at least two witnesses of full age and its being accepted by him; that if a document is employed for such notification it must be personally signed and sealed by the parties and the witnesses, but it is not necessary that the parties personally appear before the registrar; that if the notification is made orally both the parties and their witnesses must personally appear before the registrar.

There is no provision in the Japanese law specifically for a case where one of the parties to a marriage contract lives in Japan and the other under foreign jurisdiction nor has there appeared before the court any case involving this point for the reason that the places of actual residence of the parties concerned form no essential requirement for a marriage to be legalized. Such being the essence of the formal marriage in Japan, a Japanese man residing in this country can marry a Japanese woman residing in Japan by personally signing and affixing his seal to the document to be presented before the registrar in Japan and the validity of such marriage is amply attested by the issuance of certified copy of the family registry bearing the official seal of the registrar which document the so-called "picture bride" proceeding to this country is always provided with.

I may add that the marriage system of Japan being as hereinbefore stated, it would be inappropriate to use the phrase "marriage by proxy" in relation to the subject under consideration.

A copy of your note was transmitted immediately to the Honorable the Secretary of Labor for his consideration. I now have the honor to inform you that on May 5 I received from the Assistant Secretary of Labor a note stating that the Department of Labor had sent a telegram to the immigration officers in charge at the ports of San Francisco, California; Seattle, Washington; Honolulu, T. H. and Vancouver, B. C., reading as follows:

Unless and until other instructions are received accept certified copy of record of registrar supplemented by certified copy of notification to registrar by party living in United States as sufficient evidence of marriage in Japanese "picture bride" cases to justify exempting from illiteracy test. Concerning those now en route certified copy registrar's record may be accepted with stipulation that of notification will be supplied later. The tenor of your note has forthwith been communicated to Viscount Motono who now instructs me to ask you whether it would not be possible to have that arrangement extended also to those "picture brides" who will leave Japan before the end of this month, inasmuch as it takes a certain length of time before all registrars throughout the Empire shall have duly been notified about the matter.

I am moreover authorized to state that, if your Government deems it necessary, an instruction will be issued to our Consuls to expedite the presentation by the parties concerned of the prescribed documents and in cases, which will in fact be very rare, where they fail to fulfill the requirement, to exercise their endeavors as far as possible within the limits of their competency to effect the reappearance of such "picture brides" before the immigration officers.

As the requested extension of time will expire within two weeks and as it is rather difficult to communicate promptly with some of the more remote precincts of the Japanese Empire, this Department perceives no reason why the proposed extension of time should not be granted.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, inclosing copy of a note from the Japanese Ambassador, asking whether it would be possible for this Department to extend its telegraphic instruction heretofore given with regard to cases of arriving "picture brides" so as to permit all of the women of that status who may embark at ports of Japan for the United States during the month of May to be admitted with the understanding that the certified copy of the notification sent by the bridegroom in the United States to the registrar of marriages in Japan will be furnished at a later date.

As you know, the Department in its previous telegraphic instructions, issued on the basis of its conclusion, reached tentatively pending the possible procurement of additional information on the subject and more deliberate consideration, to exempt "picture brides" from the illiteracy test, voluntarily stipulated that with respect to such of the "picture brides" as might have already embarked and be en route to the United States at the time of the issuance of the instruction should be exempted from the illiteracy test and landed (if otherwise admissible) with the understanding in each instance that the certified copies required as proof of registration of marriage would be forthcoming at a later date. In giving this instruction the Department went further than is usual in matters of this kind. Ordinarily the instruction would have been not to deport but to hold the applicant in the immigration station until the papers might be sent for and obtained. The Department regrets that it cannot comply with the Ambassador's present request. To do so would establish a precedent in matters of this kind which it could ill afford to set up and which if established would have to be followed (if the Department were to be consistent) in connection with similar questions arising with respect to immigration from Europe as well as from Asia. It has always been customary for the Department to assume that steamship lines, immediately upon becoming acquainted with a law and the rules and practices established thereunder, will decline to sell transportation to aliens not in possession of documents of the kind they will be required to present on arriving at a port of this country; and the Department knows of no reason why the transportation lines engaged in bringing immigrants from Japan should not be expected to act in this regard in the same way that the trans-Atlantic lines are expected to act, and if they do follow the indicated course of action the subject of the Ambassador's request is automatically cared for, without this Department being required to do something affecting such companies which it has not heretofore done and would not care to do for the trans-Atlantic companies.

File No. 894.4054/16¾

The Japanese Ambassador to the Secretary of State

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY,
Washington, June 4, 1917.

SIR: In the note you did me the honor to address me under date of May 7, 1917, you are good enough to advise me of the decision of the Department of Labor to the effect that a certified copy of the record of the registrar, supplemented by a certified copy of the notification of a marriage with the signature and seal of the party residing in this country, will be accepted as sufficient evidence of a marriage in the so-called Japanese "picture bride" cases.

With a view to comply with the wishes of the United States Government, the Japanese Foreign Office has conferred with the Japanese Department of Justice which has jurisdiction over the family registry affairs to arrange for the issuance of the copy of the record of the family registry in favor of the so-called "picture brides" planning to proceed to the United States. In the attempt to enforce the new arrangement, the Department of Justice has found itself confronted with certain technical difficulties incidental to the fact that it has never before been required to issue the copy of the original notification in order to certify to the legal validity of a marriage, the copy of the record of the family registry part of which forms the conclusive proof of acceptance by the local registrar of the notification of a marriage, either verbal or written, having always been held as the only necessary document for that purpose. Such being the case, while the Department of Justice was expediting investigations as to the manner in which the required papers were to be issued, it was found that several weeks would be needed for the completion of the new arrangements. It was in these circumstances that I had the honor to address to you, under instructions from Tokio, my note dated May 18 requesting to have prolonged the period of exemption from the literacy test of the so-called "picture brides" on the condition that the certified copy of the notification would be furnished at a later date, to which you were good enough to reply, under date of May 28, communicating to me the impossibility of making such arrangement on the part of your Government on the ground that it would establish a precedent preferential to the Japanese "picture brides" which the United States Department of Labor could ill afford to let stand.

In Japan the family registry record serves to attest conclusively to the legality of a marriage; whereas, in this country, lacking a similar system of registry, more importance is, I understand, attached to the certificate of marriage. Every Japanese subject is required by law to register his or her name in family groups, the date of birth and all family relations, in the family registry record, which is kept at the family registry office governing the district where the parties concerned have their permanent domicile, and the party concerned or any third party may at any time apply for a certified copy of the record which can be obtained in two forms, either a complete record of one family or an excerpt in reference to a particular member thereof. There not being provided for in the Japanese law or custom the issuance of the marriage certificate and there obtaining throughout the Empire a complete system of family registry as alluded to hereinbefore, the certified copy of the family registry record corresponds for all legal and practical purposes to the marriage certificate of Western nations.

Such being the theory of the issuance of the copy of the family registry record, and moreover the issuance of the copy of the notification of a marriage involving technical difficulties as stated above, I have now the honor to request, pursuant to instructions from Viscount Motono, that such copy of the family registry record may be regarded by the United States Government as falling within the scope of "other convincing proof of the performance of the marriage ceremony" provided for in the Immigration Rules of May 1, 1917; and that the so-called "picture brides" be exempt from the operation of the literacy test on the strength of the certified copy of the family registry record, and without the presentation of the copy of the notification.

I am also instructed to add that in case the American Government deems it difficult to comply with the present request of the Japanese Government for any reason arising from the technicalities of the immigration rules, the Japanese Government is prepared, with a view to meet the requirements as fully as possible under the different systems of civil law obtaining in our two countries, to inaugurate an arrangement for issuing at the hands of the local registrar a certificate attesting to the legal validity of a marriage in favor of the "picture brides" planning to proceed to the United States.

FRANK L. POLK

File No. 894.4054/18

The Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of State

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, June 27, 1917.

SIR: Your letter of June 5 inclosing copy of a note of June 4 from the Japanese Ambassador, in which certain proposals are made regarding evidence of marriage to be submitted by the so-called Japanese "picture brides", was received on June 8, and the Department has since given further consideration to the subject matter. In suggesting a reply to the Ambassador's proposals, it seems proper, first, to review the previous correspondence with the purpose of emphasizing its main points, and, second, to state the result of the Department's entire study of the question presented for decision.

1. The occasion for the extended correspondence is the provision in Section 3 of the Immigration Law, commonly called the "illiteracy test," which became effective May 5, ultimo, excluding from the United States aliens unable to read in some language or dialect, but exempting wives accompanying admissible husbands or sent for by husbands lawfully residing in the United States; and the question whether the so-called "picture brides" of Japan are properly to be regarded as "wives" within the meaning of said exemption and if so, how their identity and status as such are to be established. The principal features and points of the resulting discussion may be stated as follows:

(a) After considerable oral discussion had occurred between officers of the Japanese Embassy, of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs of the State Department, and of the Bureau of Immigration of the Department of Labor, the Ambassador, on April 17 last, furnished "an excerpt from the Japanese Civil Code bearing on the subject of marriage," and the Counselor of the Embassy stated in a note addressed to an officer of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs that each "picture bride" "is expected to bring, besides her passport, a certified copy of her family register (Koseki-tōhon) in which her marriage is duly recorded," adding:

In cases that prove inadequate to your authorities concerned we are ready to recommend to our Government to conform to whatever specific requirements for documentary evidence that your authorities might prescribe in the premises, provided a similar condition is imposed on the corresponding class of immigrants from other countries.

(b) Finding in the excerpt from the Japanese law above mentioned nothing, * * *, that would justify, of itself, the conclusion that these marriages are provided for by existing laws and recognized as complete, legal and binding in Japan, this Department asked the specific question:

Does the law of Japan provide for and recognize as legal the marriage of a couple one of whom, at the date of marriage, is in a foreign jurisdiction and the other of whom is in Japan, in the same sense and to the same degree as though both parties to the marriage were actually in Japan at the time the marriage was contracted?

(c) When propounding the above-stated query, the Department stated that in preparing regulations putting the new immigration law into effect there was no intention to permit the exception to the illiteracy test in favor of wives to be availed of

by an unmarried woman who comes to a United States port and claims upon arrival that she has been sent for by a man in the United States who is desirous of marrying her at the port of her admission; that is, it is not intended to permit an illiterate woman to qualify for admission, on the claim that she is the wife of a man in the United States, by marrying a resident man after such woman has applied for entry, or by claiming that she is the wife of a man in the United States when in point of fact the laws of the country whence she comes do not provide for and make legal and binding the kind of marriage claimed to have taken place.

(d) Examination of the excerpt from the Civil Code of Japan, above-mentioned, and of a translation of the entire Code, loaned this Department by the Japanese Embassy, disclosed that the provisions thereof that are invoked in connection with the marriage of the "picture brides" are the first and second paragraphs of Article 775 reading as follows:

A marriage takes effect upon its notification to the registrar.

The notification must be made by the parties concerned and at least two witnesses of full age, either orally or by a signed document.

It was also ascertained that Articles 776 and 777 of the Civil Code read as follows:

776. The registrar must not accept the notification of a marriage, until he has ascertained that the marriage is not in contravention of any of the provisions of Arts. 741, 1, 744, 1, 750, 1, 754, 1, 765-773 and 775, 2, or to any other law or regulation. This, however, does not apply, if, the marriage being in contravention of the provisions of Art. 741, 1 or Art. 750, 1, the registrar calls the attention of the parties to it, but they persist in their notification.

777. If Japanese in a foreign country contract a marriage between themselves, they may make the notification of their marriage to a Japanese minister or consul stationed in such country. In such case the provisions of the preceding two articles apply correspondingly.

But there was found in the Code no provision relating specifically to the so-called "picture bride marriages."

(e) It should be stated at this point that the oral discussion of this matter that took place between officers of the Japanese Embassy, of the State Department, and of this Department have proceeded, until quite recently, upon the assumption, apparently by all concerned, that the prospective bridegroom living within the United States sends a written notification to the registrar of his intended marriage and that such written notification is made the basis of an entry in the family register and is then placed on file for possible future reference; that therefore it would not be a difficult matter to furnish in every instance a certified copy of the notification showing the date when and place in this country from which it was sent and that it bore the signature of the bridegroom. It seems now, however, that this was a mistaken assumption; that as a matter of fact the prospective bridegroom often takes no direct part in the transaction, but the notification to the registrar is made for him by his father or by whoever happens to be the head of his "house". It seems also that the Embassy has ascertained that the notifications are merely made the basis of an entry in the family register and are then forwarded by the local registrar to the Department of Justice at Tokyo for filing in the archives of that office, the regulations of which require that such notifications shall be preserved for ten years and then destroyed.

(f) On April 28 the Ambassador stated in a formal communication to the Secretary of State that the Japanese law provides that marriage is complete and takes effect immediately upon its being notified either in writing or orally to the registrar by both parties with the participation in the act of at least two witnesses of full age and the acceptance by the registrar of such notification; that if a written notification is employed it must be personally signed and sealed by the parties and the witnesses, but the parties are not required to appear before the registrar; that there is no provision in the law relating specifically to the case where one of the parties to a marriage lives in Japan and the other under foreign jurisdiction and there has been no decision in the courts of Japan regarding such a case; that such being the law a Japanese man residing in the United States can marry a Japanese woman residing in Japan by personally signing and affixing his seal to the document to be presented before the registrar in Japan and the validity of such marriage is amply attested by the issuance of a certified copy of the family register bearing the official seal of the registrar, which document the so-called "picture bride" proceeding to this country is always provided with.

(g) Accepting the statement last mentioned in conjunction with the representations made orally, this Department issued instructions to the immigration officials to accept in the cases of "picture brides" as proof of marriage a certified copy of the record of the registrar supplemented by a certified copy of the notification to the registrar sent him by the party to the marriage living in the United States. These instructions were given tentatively and subject to further consideration. It will be observed that this instruction was based upon the apparently erroneous assumption mentioned in paragraph (e) preceding.

(h) The purport of the above instruction was communicated to the Japanese Ambassador by the Department of State on May 7.

(i) In carrying out the instructions the immigration officials, under advice from the Bureau of Immigration, are requiring that the documentary proof of marriage shall include a certified copy of a notification to the registrar by the bridegroom himself, this practice being based upon the fact that the Japanese law invoked in the premises requires that the registrar shall be notified by the parties concerned, which must necessarily mean the bridegroom and bride.

(j) In giving the instructions above-mentioned, the Department voluntarily stipulated with respect to "picture brides" then (May 5) en route that a certified copy of the registrar's record might be accepted with the understanding that a certified copy of the notification would be supplied later. On May 18 the Ambassador requested that this provision be extended to include all who might leave Japan during the month of May; but the Department of Labor was constrained reluctantly to deny this request because it was anticipated that to grant it might raise complications regarding immigration cases originating in Europe.

(k) Simultaneously with the issuance of the instructions regarding acceptance of documentary proofs of marriage the immigration officials were directed to discontinue the practice which had obtained for many years of requiring "picture brides" to be married in accordance with American law and customs at the ports of arrival to the "picture bridegrooms" who had sent for them. This additional instruction was given because it was deemed that, if the Department recognized the validity of the marriage on the basis of the documentary evidence specified to be required in proof, it could not consistently require that a marriage ceremony should be gone through with at the port of entry.

(1) In view of the facts and circumstances above recited and particularly of the additional instructions mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the Department has been surprised to learn that the Japanese Association of America (an organization which apparently quite generally represents the Japanese residing in the United States), the Japanese of this country, and the "picture brides" and "picture bridegrooms" apparently quite generally, have taken the position (notwithstanding this Department's conclusion to recognize the validity of the marriage if and when proved by documents of the kind specified), that the marriage ceremony must be gone through with after the "picture bride" has been delivered to the "picture bridegroom" at the port of entry. To quote all of the statements on this subject which have come to the attention of the Department would unduly lengthen this letter. It is thought, however, that a few examples should be given. The New World of San Francisco on May 11 gave an interview had with the chief secretary of the Japanese Association, in which said person discussed the possible bad moral effects of allowing the "picture brides" to land without going through a ceremony of marriage and stated

I see no guarantee that results in violation of the manners and customs of society will not be introduced; for to say nothing of American manners and customs, even in Japanese society it is the universal custom that in addition to the legal registration there must be the ceremony of the san-san-ku and the vows in the presence of Shinto and Buddhist deities, a very strict and solemn service. To omit the marriage ceremony because they are coming to a distant colony, going off immediately after landing to live together without further ado, is not proper even as seen from the standpoint of Japanese custom; how much more so from that of the more severe customs of America!

Mr. K. Kanzaki in an article in the Japanese American News of May 8 pointed out that to permit persons who had never seen each other and who had to use photographs for purposes of recognition to land and to proceed to destination without performance of some ceremony "is to omit one of the great institutions of human relationship." He therefore urged all Japanese in this country to have a marriage ceremony performed. In the New World of May 11 this same person asserted that in his opinion one would search in vain over the world for a country where the momentous relation of marriage between a man and woman is entered upon without any sort of a ceremony. In Japan, even more than in America, there is a magnificent and elaborate ceremony. This is for the preservation of order and morals in society. Not only so, it also has for its object the sacredness and purity of the new home.

The Japanese American News of May 13 contained a report of a meeting of the directors of the Japanese Association from which it appears that the directors decided that not to have a ceremony would be most improper; that the holding of a banquet after the parties reached their home would not be sufficient because the banquet and the ceremony are distinct observances, the latter being the one through which a man and woman must pass before they can properly come together as husband and wife; that the observance of the ceremony must be insisted upon not only out of respect for American customs but from regard for the entire world. From the Japanese American News of May 19 the following is quoted:

Photograph brides who carried documentary evidence of actual marriage were not given the education test and were all landed yesterday. On the same day they had their marriage ceremonies at their hotels or at the homes of friends, with the exception of the legal formalities, which were omitted. In all other respects no change has occurred in the practice hitherto in vogue.

(m) The proposals now submitted by the Japanese Ambassador are two and are in the alternative:

(I) That the immigration officials be directed to accept as sufficient proof of marriage in "picture bride" cases a certified copy of the family registry record, such copy to be regarded as falling within the scope of "other convincing proof of the performance of the ceremony provided for in Subdivision 7 of Rule 4 of the immigration regulations".

(II) That the immigration officials be instructed to accept a certificate from the local registrars "attesting to the legal validity of a marriage in favor of the 'picture bride' planning to proceed to the United States".

These requests are made because, as hereinbefore mentioned, it has been ascertained that the Embassy as well as the two Departments were proceeding upon an erroneous assumption in supposing that notifications were given in every instance by the bridegrooms and were kept in the files of the registrars' offices.

(n) Incidentally, orally and informally, the point has been raised that, inasmuch as the original notifications are preserved, even in the files of the Attorney General's office, only for ten years, proof of marriage in the manner heretofore specified will not be possible in cases of Japanese who, when coming to the United States, bring their wives with them if the marriage occurred more than ten years previous to the date of such man's application to the passport officials of Japan for his passport and to the Attorney General's office for the required certified copy.

(2) The Department's conclusions with regard to this matter may be stated, in the reverse order of their importance, as follows:

(o) With respect to the last mentioned point, raised incidentally, orally and informally, it does not seem to the Department that there is any insuperable difficulty to be encountered. In the case of couples married when both parties were present in Japan, obviously the notification of the registrar could, both as a legal proposition and as a matter of physical possibility, be either oral or written; and, from what the Department has learned during its study of this matter, it is inclined to believe that in most cases of that kind the notification would be oral. At any rate there would not exist in such a case any such unusual circumstance as exists in the case of couples whose marriage is registered while one of the parties is in Japan and the other is in this country; nor any of the potentialities for embarrassment in the administration of the law with respect to persons coming from countries other than Japan which the Department apprehends exist in the cases that are the special subject of present consideration. Therefore, the Department would not be disposed to insist upon any technical requirements, but would be satisfied to admit the man and his accompanying wife, if otherwise admissible, and to exempt the woman from the illiteracy test on the basis of a certified copy of the family registry record.

(p) It seems to the Department that the conclusion logically to be drawn from all of the evidence which has been submitted and adduced is that the legislators of Japan in adopting the civil code did not have in mind, in the least degree, a situation with respect to marriage of the kind which has arisen concerning the "picture brides" and their migration to the United States. The law contemplated marriages of two kinds, in so far as the loci contractus was concerned, to wit: Those contracted between two Japanese both of whom at the time were residing within the jurisdiction of Japan and those contracted between two Japanese who at the time were both residing in a foreign jurisdiction. But the ends of convenience have resulted in the establishment of a custom, based in part upon the provisions of the code, but extending much further than the code ever contemplated, under which the recognition of the so-called "picture marriages" has come about. This custom, not unnaturally when it is remembered that the country recognizing it is in a position actually to exercise control over the female party to the marriage only, has had a tendency toward laxity of both action and supervision, which tendency may have been somewhat retarded by the practice heretofore enforced of requiring the parties to the "picture marriage" to go through with a ceremony according to American law and custom on the arrival of the bride at a United States port. This tendency toward laxity is especially illustrated by the practice, which apparently has become quite common, of permitting the bridegroom's father or the head of his "house" to send notification to the registrar, without the bridegroom taking any active or direct part in the transaction.

(q) Apparently the ethical or religious sense and ideals, or both, of the Japanese people themselves are offended by this custom, especially when it is unattended by any social or religious ceremony of a kind ordinarily regarded as calculated to impress the parties to a marriage with the solemnity and importance of the step which they are taking in becoming husband and wife. This fact of itself produces an anomalous situation and places the Department in a rather unenviable position—one in which, as may be seen from the comments appearing in the Japanese press, a few of which have been quoted, it lays itself liable to criticism by thoughtful sober-minded persons, whether citizens of Japan or of the United States, because, if it is to be at all consistent, it must hold that if the "picture marriage" is a valid marriage no further ceremony is to be insisted upon when the "picture brides" land at United States ports.

(r) It seems to the Department self-evident that it cannot, in administering a statute like the immigration law, base conclusions with regard to fundamental principles of law upon customs more or less firmly established in foreign countries, even though such customs may be predicated somewhat upon provisions of the law of that country. If this matter involved no more than the application of the illiteracy test to the cases of young women coming from Japan, perhaps so much importance would not need to be attached to it. But the Department has no intention, as heretofore intimated, to permit young women to come from other countries and qualify for exemption from the illiteracy test by marrying at a port of the United States a man already located here. If such a domiciled alien wishes to bring to the United States as his wife a woman who is illiterate he will be obliged, under the practice which it is the purpose of the Department to follow, to return to his native land, marry the woman in accordance with the law there obtaining, and take his chances on returning to a port of this country of being found eligible to enter himself and of his wife being found also admissible. Nor is it the Department's intention to recognize in this connection customs that prevail in countries other than Japan. And there are several countries in which unusual or unique practices and customs regarding marriage and the relation of the sexes exist; and there is no reason known to the Department why, if it should recognize a custom obtaining in this regard in any one country, other countries should not adopt similar or even dissimilar customs with a view to having them recognized and thereby securing exemption from provisions of the immigration law for their subjects or citizens. It will be observed, therefore, that the question is of general rather than of particular interest and consequence in the administration of the immigration law.

(s) The foregoing consideration inevitably leads the Department to the final conclusion that the very least that it can with propriety and safety require in the cases of the "picture brides" is proof that the bridegroom, not someone else in his behalf either really or ostensibly, has complied with the law, not the custom, of the country of which he is a subject in contracting the marriage on the basis of which he proposes to claim exemption for a woman who would, but for her marriage, be subject to exclusion under the illiteracy test. It is to that bridegroom, who is living within this country and while here is subject to its municipal law, not to his father or the head of his "house", who is living in Japan and in no sense within the control or supervision of the local authorities of the United States, that the communities of this country are entitled to look for the maintenance, protection and care of the woman brought into their midst; and as a particular practical proposition, as well as because of the legal and general practical considerations that have already been mentioned, it is important to know in the case of a Japanese alien, just as it is in the cases of aliens of all other nationalities, that the woman is being brought to this country because of the personal desire of the man to have her as his spouse and helpmate in life.

(t) The fact that the original notifications are destroyed in the office of the Attorney General at Tokyo after the lapse of ten years does not affect the "picture bride" cases. While it is realized that some inconvenience may be occasioned, especially at first, by the necessity of applying to the Attorney General's office in Tokyo for certified copies of notifications, it is believed that this difficulty could be overcome by a slight change in the practice, that is, by requiring the notifications to be retained in the office of the registrar for a short period after their submission. The remaining difficulty arising from the fact that in some instances the notification is filed by the bridegroom's father or the head of his "house" it seems to the Department is the only one of particular gravity. It could soon be overcome, however, by inaugurating a change in the practice and having the notification originate with the bridegroom. Such a practice could be based directly upon a combination of the applicable provisions of Articles 775 and 777 of the civil code, and could include requiring (as the physical situation itself demands anyway) that the notification in such cases shall be in writing and signed by the prospective bridegroom himself. The suggested practice would take care of all future cases. In the remaining cases (i. e., those in which the marriage has already been recorded on the basis of a notification not originating with the bridegroom) it seems to the Department that it would be possible and in no sense improper to require that the bridegroom shall return to Japan and have a regular ceremony performed.

(u) However, the careful attention which the Department has given this entire subject leads it to suggest, in conclusion, the desirability, from every conceivable point of view, of bringing about a situation with regard to these "picture brides" which will more nearly conform to that existing with regard to alien women generally in the effect upon their cases of the immigration law. The simplest and most effective remedy for the embarrassments and difficulties that must constantly arise where a situation of a unique nature must be dealt with, under a law intended to apply to all aliens alike, is to change the unique situation into a common one. Therefore, why should not young men of Japanese nationality residing in the United States, when they desire to have women join them here as their wives and these women are ineligible to enter in their individual capacity, return to their native land and conform to all of the requirements, legal, ethical and moral, that are usually observed in their country by men and women who enter into a state of matrimony with due regard to the public opinion of the community in which they live?

Respectfully,

W. B. WILSON

The Acting Secretary of State to the Japanese Ambassador

No. 34

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 7, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of June 4, 1917, relative to the admission of Japanese "picture brides" to the United States under the new immigration law.

A copy of your excellency's note above mentioned was promptly sent to the Honorable the Secretary of Labor for his consideration. I have the honor now to enclose a copy of a letter dated June 27, 1917, from the Department of Labor, giving a review of previous correspondence on this subject and outlining a course of procedure in handling "picture bride" cases in the future.

Accept [etc.]

FRANK L. POLK

File. No. 894.4054/19

The Japanese Ambassador to the Secretary of State

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBASSY,
Washington July 25, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of July 7, inclosing copy of a letter dated June 27 from the Honorable the Secretary of Labor relative to the admission of so-called Japanese "picture brides" to the United States.

The matter under discussion, having been confined from the outset, to the question of what evidence should be presented by Japanese wives unaccompanied by their husbands when applying for admission to the United States, I deem it inexpedient and that it serves no immediate good purpose to enter into a detailed treatment of the merits or demerits of the Japanese institution of marriage. Accordingly, I beg leave to repeat substantially the suggestions made in my previous notes and to request you to be good enough to exert your good offices to the end that the question which is essentially one of form and not of principle, be brought to a speedy and satisfactory solution. It is needless to state that my Government has not the least intention to unduly influence the administrative procedure of your Government in favor of Japanese immigrants but the peculiar character of the Japanese marriage in which the ceremony has no legal bearing makes the Japanese Government feel that the request for a special consideration of the matter will not be deemed uncalled for.

Judging from the nature of the notification and the value of the Koseki-tōhon (certified copy of the record of a particular family) or Koseki-shōhon (certified copy of the record of a particular individual) as evidence (vide post §§2, 3), I wonder whether it would not be most logical and feasible to require the "picture brides" to take with them such tōhon or shōhon in order to prove that the necessary procedure of marriage between them and the men in the United States has transpired, and to treat them as wives in the execution of the Immigration Law. The ceremony of the marriage is not legalized in the Japanese law (vide post §1) and therefore literally speaking the tōhon or shōhon carried by the "picture brides" with them do not come within the scope of the "convincing proof of the performance of the marriage ceremony" as provided for in the Immigration Rules of May 1, 1917. However, understanding that what the rules require is the proof of marriage which has legally transpired, I venture to conclude that the tōhon or shōhon may be taken as such in accordance with the spirit of the rules.

The arrangement that the "picture brides" carry with them certified copies of the notification of the marriage together with the tōhon or shōhon is not probably unfeasible (vide the Department of Labor note, paragraph "t"), and I shall be glad again to recommend to the Japanese Government the establishment of the practice, if it is the opinion of your Government that such be desirable. However, I rather wonder whether it is exactly logical for us to take such a course. The trouble occurs with regard to a woman married more than ten years ago (vide the Department of Labor note paragraphs "n" and "o"). When she is coming with her husband the question is simpler and could be handled in the manner indicated by the Department of Labor. It would, however, be impossible for such a woman to be admitted to this country when she is coming by herself to a United States port to join her husband and when she is illiterate withal. It may be ruled that she be admitted on the strength of the tōhon or shōhon alone, but this would be logically inconsistent as against the ruling with regard to the "picture brides," since in the eye of the Japanese law there could be drawn no distinction between the ordinarily married wives and the so-called "picture brides".

In face of these circumstances, it is suggested that if, for evidence's sake, the United States Government opines that some other document than the tōhon or shōhon is necessary, the institution proposed by the Japanese Government of issuing at the hands of the local family registrar a new form of certificate proving the legal validity of a marriage be favorably considered by the United States Government (vide the Embassy's note dated June 4, 1917). This certificate cannot be one of the marriage itself since it is not made at the time of its constitution. However, it could be made in such a form as would be more complete than the tōhon or shōhon as a legal evidence, issuing only in favor of the married couple and one copy at a time.

Having made a careful perusal of the note of the Department of Labor inclosed in your note under acknowledgment, I have noticed a few apparently misrepresented phases of the question which would, I am afraid, have an important bearing upon the final decision as to the course of procedure in handling the "picture bride" cases at American ports. Accordingly, I have deemed it appropriate to take this opportunity to record for the information of your Government several points of fact a major part of which have, I believe, already been explained by my staff in the course of oral discussions.

1. Referring to paragraph (c) of the note of the Department of Labor, I desire to make it unmistakably clear that a "picture bride" is not, in the eye of the law, an unmarried woman who comes to a United States port and claims upon arrival that she has been sent for by a man in the United States who is desirous of marrying her at the port of her admission.

A marriage contracted between a woman residing in Japan and a man residing in the United States is no less legal and binding than a marriage contracted between parties residing within the same jurisdiction.

It has already been pointed out that according to the Japanese law, "a marriage takes effect upon its notification to the registrar" (Civil Code, Art. 775). So long as the parties to a proposed marriage contract satisfy the requirements that they are of marriageable ages (C. C., Art. 765), that they are not going to commit bigamy (C. C., Art. 766), that the time during which a woman is restricted against remarriage has expired (C. C., Art. 767), that they have not been parties to an adultery (C. C., Art. 768), that their marriage is not incestuous (C. C., Arts. 769, 770, 771); and that the consent of the parents or the family council has been given when such is necessary (C. C., Arts. 772, 773), the only thing the prospective husband and wife have to do to complete the marriage, so far as the law is concerned, is to notify either by parol or in the written form the family registrar of the district where the would-be bridegroom's permanent domicile (hon seki) is situate. Upon the acceptance of the notification and the entry of the fact in the family registry record by the registrar, the legal procedure of the marriage contract is completely gone through and the marriage becomes effective from that date.

It is to be noted in this connection that the marriage ceremony is not at all considered by the Japanese civil code. Marriage has in Japan as in any other country been regarded as one of the most important of human affairs and very naturally certain ceremonies for its solemnization have been evolved. The most general form of the nuptial ceremony consists in the formal drinking of saké alternately by the marrying couple from the same cups three-times-three-nine-times (san-san-ku-do) in the presence of the go-betweens (nakôdo) and a boy and a girl of ten or twelve who act as attendants, and more recently also of the wedding guests. Formerly in Japan, as was the case in England and America in ancient days, acknowledgment of the parties, proof of cohabitation as man and wife, or general reputation resulting from the conduct of the parties, was all that was needed for a marriage to be recognized and protected by the law. However, since the enforcement of the Civil Code on July 16, 1898, the legal recognition and protection of a marriage has come to hinge solely upon the notification to, and acceptance by, the family registrar of the marriage contract. No provisions whatever as to the marriage ceremony for the solemnization and authentication of marriage corresponding to those prescribed in the statutes of the Western nations are to be found in the Japanese law. This mode of legislation has come to be adopted evidently for the reason that the formalities of the ceremony as established and sanctioned by the Japanese custom have nothing to do with religious rites or priests, Shinto shrine or Buddhist temples. It is, however, required that the couple who act as the go-betweens be present at the function, but the go-betweens are generally elected from among the friends of the prospective bride or the bridegroom. It is quite likely that the legislators did not see the practicability of placing the duties and responsibilities of a justice, judge, city recorder, priest or minister of the gospel upon the shoulders of such go-betweens who by no means make it a part of their calling to participate in nuptial ceremonies. It seems to have been seen fit to relegate such ceremonies to the realm of social and actual facts as much as the nuptial dinner or the honeymoon trip. Whether it takes place or not, the marriage is complete in the eye of the Japanese law when the notification of a marriage is made and accepted and from that date on all necessary and incidental effects of marriage will come into operation; such as, the entry into the "house" into which one is married (C. C., Art. 788); the inception of the relations of affinity; the obligation of the husband and wife to live with each other (C. C., Art. 789); the mutual duty of support (C. C., Art. 790); the husband's obligation to act as the guardian to the wife when the wife is a minor (C. C., Art. 791); the right of annulment of a contract between the couple (C. C., Art. 792). Further, the wife will need to have the permission of the husband to receive or use principal (as distinguished from interest); to contract loans, or to stand surety; to do acts having for their object the acquisition or loss of rights relative to immovables or to important movables; to institute suits at law, make gifts, amicable settlements or arbitration agreements, to accept or renounce a succession, to accept or refuse a gift or legacy, or to make a contract putting her under any corporal restraint. (C. C., Arts. 12, 14). A crime of adultery (Criminal Code, Art. 183) may also be constituted in regard to a woman in this legal status.

All such rights and duties as pertain to the civil status of a wife are invested and imposed upon the so-called "picture brides" the moment the notification of marriage is accepted, simply because there is legally speaking no difference whatever between the "picture brides" and other brides who are married to bridegrooms living within the same jurisdiction.

It is noted that the Department of Labor has concluded that the Japanese legislators did not have in mind, in the least degree, a marriage contracted between parties living under separate jurisdictions but that the ends of convenience have resulted in the establishment of a custom, based in part upon the provision of the code but extending much farther than the code ever contemplated, under which the recognition of the so-called "picture marriages" has come about (paragraph (p) of the note of the Department of Labor.)

It seems that the Labor Department has based this conclusion on the assumption that the marriage ceremony is in some manner essential for a marriage to be recognized and protected by the Japanese law. That this impression is entirely erroneous has, I feel sure, been amply elucidated by the above explanation of the constitution of marriage in Japan. The views expressed by certain Japanese that the nuptial ceremonies whether it be the san-san-ku-do, or Christian rites, by the "picture brides" and their bridegrooms are not to be dispensed with (ibid. paragraph (1)), are no doubt warranted and will be sympathized in by every Japanese of sense. However, these ceremonies belong, as stated before, to the realm of social and actual facts as much as the honeymoon trips, the sending of the gifts or the announcements to friends of the matrimony, and, in the Japanese law, they are not attributed with any legal meaning whatever. Moreover, when the Japanese system of marriage is clearly borne in mind, it will be easy to understand that the loci contractus play a decidedly less important part in marriage than in Western countries. There has been generally and especially in the higher stratum of society, at least until very recently, no association of young men and women, much less the paying of the addresses, prior to marriages. Marriage negotiations are more often initiated by the parents or intimate relatives of the marriageable men and women. After a most careful and mutual investigation about the character, ability and other qualifications of the parties concerned, the matter will finally be decided by the young people themselves. And it is by no means seldom that the prospective bride and bridegroom do not actually meet each other before the marriage negotiations have practically attained a definite stage. Naturally they are in most cases strangers in a sense when the marriage contract is formed. I shall refrain from dwelling at length upon the merit or demerit of this system of marriage in the present note. However, it would not be amiss to add that Japanese youths profit by the mature judgment of their parents or other relatives and are free from the dangers of rushing uncounseled into unhappy marital bondage, and that the Japanese do perhaps not marry so much on impulse as after a most serious consideration for their future life.

In view of such circumstances, it will be noticed that the loci contractus are not looked upon as an important factor in a marriage contract in the Japanese law, and that Article 777 of the Civil Code only prescribes a convenient method of making the notification of a marriage contracted between a man and a woman in a foreign country.

This spirit of the provision may easily be discerned when it is noticed that it gives the contractors the choice of making the notification either to a Japanese diplomatic or consular officer stationed in that country or to the family registrar of the district in Japan where the prospective husband (in special cases, the wife) has his permanent legal domicile.

When the legal relations between the notification and the marriage under the Japanese law are made clear, there is needed no further arguments to satisfy ourselves that the "picture brides" are not the offspring of a custom arising out of convenience, and predicated partially upon the law but extending much further than the law ever contemplated, that they are as normally married as any other brides married "in the same sense and to the same degree" in any and every respect (vide paragraph (b) Department of Labor note).

The only difference between the "picture brides" and the other brides is de facto, not de jure. And when the usual, more or less unfamiliar, relations between a bride and bridegroom in Japan are remembered, it will be seen that the de facto difference reduces itself to the difference in the length of intervals between the notification of the marriage and the ceremony of the san-san-ku-do.

Such legal features of the marriage in Japan make it altogether unnecessary that the Department of Labor should entertain any fears as to the effect of its attitude toward the Japanese "picture brides" upon the handling of immigrants from certain European countries. (The Department of Labor note, paragraph (r).) Neither is there any cause for the apprehension that the "picture bride" is not being "brought to this country because of the personal desire of the man to have her as his spouse and helpmate in life." (The Department of Labor note, paragraph (s).) The fact of which you are no doubt aware that those "picture marriages" have been showing quite satisfactory results socially and morally may be here adduced to affirm the above statement.

2. Another point which needs explanation is about the parties who are to make the notification of a marriage to the family registrar (or to a diplomatic or consular representative). The Department of Labor seems to be under the impression that the notification is sometimes made by some one other than the parties immediately concerned,—by the father of the bridegroom or by whoever happens to be the head of the "house". (The Department of Labor note, paragraph (e).) This is erroneous, and it seems that this error has been occasioned from the peculiar Japanese custom which is now legalized, of affixing a personal seal under one's name, written not necessarily by oneself but by anyone, instead of writing one's own signature. This Embassy's explanation was not accurate when it was explained that the notification must be personally signed and sealed by the parties and the witness. (The Embassy's note, June 4, 1917.) The Japanese phrase, sho-mei natsu-in, which is used in the family registry law (Art. 44) should be translated into "writing the name and affixing the seal". "Such practice of employing a personal seal which is to be registered at the family registrar's office in lieu of a signature in this and other countries is not restricted to the notification of a marriage or other matters of personal status, but it universally obtains, applying equally to any legal and business transaction. The affixing of the registered personal seal under one's name written by anyone or in print is necessary and sufficient for such an act as drawing money from a bank. This system has the advantage of saving a great deal of trouble as when one has to write many signatures, when one will have to travel a long distance to set down his signature, or when a document will have to be sent a long distance for a signature, but it embarrasses one when he does not carry the seal with him, when he loses it, or when by carelessness he lets someone abuse it.

This time-honored custom in Japan of using seal-impression instead of signatures, has occasioned the promulgation of a law providing that aliens may use their signatures instead of the name-writing and seal-impressing (sho-mei natsu-in) (Law No. 50, March 10, 1900). The use of seals which thus entirely take the place of signatures, is also protected in the criminal code, which provides as follows:

Whoever shall have, with intent to use the same, fraudulently counterfeited the seal or signature of another person, shall be punished with penal servitude for a period not exceeding three years.

The same penalty shall be imposed upon whoever shall have made improper use of the seal or signature of another person, or used a counterfeit of the seal or signature of another person. (Art. 167.)

Be its merit what it may, this system enables a man resident in this country to perform a legal act in Japan by, for instance, sending his registered personal seal to his parents or any other person whom he trusts. Such cases might not be rare regarding "picture marriages," but it is to be noted that it is the man residing in this country, the prospective husband, that is the actual agent of the legal transaction and not the father or any other person who affixes for him the seal to the marriage notification.

3. As to the nature and legal effects of the notification, they have been fully explained in the previous paragraphs of this note. It must, however, also be noted that technically the only permanent record of the acceptance of the notification is the entry in the family registry record, the written notification which is the commonest form (the impression of the Department of Labor expressed in paragraph (o) that the oral notification is commoner is erroneous), being monthly forwarded by the registrar to the local district court where it is to be preserved for ten years and then destroyed. (Family Registry Law, Art. 28, regulations relative to the preservation of documents in regard to the personal status, family register and temporary residence, Art. 4.) Therefore, the entry in the family registry record is a sufficient evidence of matters pertaining to personal status such as marriage so long as the husband and wife do not contradict it and the matrimonial repute is established among his friends and acquaintances. That certified copies of the entry are issued in two forms, to wit, first, copy of the entry for a family or "house" (Koseki-tôhon) and, secondly, copy of the entry for an individual (Koseki-shûhon), has been explained in my note of June 4, 1917, and alluded to in the beginning of this note.

SIR: Referring to previous correspondence relative to the applicability of the illiteracy provisions of the immigration law to the so-called "picture brides" coming from Japan, I have the honor to send enclosed for your consideration and such action as may be necessary a copy of a note from the Japanese Embassy replying to the observations made in your letter of June 27, 1917, to this Department.

You will, I feel sure, be interested to learn that Mr. Ransford S. Miller, our Consul General at Seoul, who was for many years the Japanese Secretary of our Embassy at Tokyo and who is familiar with Japanese law and custom, has carefully read the note of the Japanese Ambassador and states that the notification is the document that gives legality to a marriage in Japan; that in the case of marriages of Americans in Japan, which occurs not infrequently, the use or omission of a religious service is entirely immaterial in so far as the requirements of the Japanese law are concerned, which is of course the law recognized by the American Consul General in issuing his certificates. In other words a religious ceremony without the notification does not make a marriage legal and the notification without such a service would. For purposes of notification a form printed in Japanese is employed similar to that used in marriages of the Japanese themselves. The situation in so far as a religious ceremony is concerned would seem to be similar to that in some of our states where it is entirely optional and sometimes omitted, the law taking no account thereof.

As for the use of the private seal by others than the owner thereof but by his authorization, Mr. Miller also confirms the statements in the Ambassador's note.

It seems to this Department, therefore, that when due notification of the marriage has been made over the seal of the bridegroom the marriage must be regarded as legal and the "picture bride" in such case ought to be received as the wife of the man who is awaiting her arrival in the United States.

*The Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of State*DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, August 20, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, with which you transmit copy of a note from the Japanese Embassy replying to the observations made in my letter of June 27 addressed to you, regarding the so-called "picture brides" coming from Japan.

The Department has again carefully considered this entire matter, in the light of the statements now made by the Japanese Ambassador and their very important bearing upon previous discussions. It is glad that so detailed a discussion of the subject has occurred; for it believes that such discussion has resulted in the clarification upon the records of your Department and this Department of every phase of the subject on which doubt or misunderstanding has heretofore existed, and both Departments are now in a position where they can intelligently, and without feeling that there are potentialities for embarrassment involved, meet the views of the Japanese Government fully and frankly. This Department's letter of June 27 purposely set forth in the minutest detail every element of the proposition under discussion which in its judgment required further explanation or comment; and the response from the Japanese Ambassador is so full and explicit that the Department feels well repaid for the pains which it took to lay the various points minutely before your Department for presentation to the Embassy.

To a very considerable extent this Department's misapprehension of the situation with respect to the modus operandi of the marriage taking place in the cases of these "picture brides" was occasioned by the impression gained from the Embassy's note of June 4, 1917, and the discussions had with members of the staff of the Embassy that the notification required by Japanese law to be filed with the registrar of family records had to be personally signed and sealed by the parties to the marriage. Finding now from the note of the Ambassador that all that is required by the Japanese law in this regard is that the name of the parties shall be written on the notification and attested by the affixing thereto of his personal seal, and that the writing of the name and affixing of the seal may under the laws of Japan be done for the parties by any authorized person to whom the seal is delivered or in whose possession it is left, and that this is a general law which applies to the signing and sealing of documents of all kinds in Japan, of course the Department finds itself in a position where its mind is altogether disabused of the idea that the marriages are conducted in accordance with the custom, based only indirectly and partly upon the law, and not in accordance with the law itself.

A mutual understanding of the law and of the fact that the practice conforms thereto having finally been reached, it remains only to determine which of the several possible methods of furnishing proof had best be adopted. Taking every phase of the matter into consideration, the Department is inclined to think that the most logical and consistent method, and therefore the one least apt to lead to any difficulty or embarrassment in individual cases, would be this: Hereafter require all women applying for admission as the wives of Japanese men to furnish to the immigration officers at ports of entry of this country, as evidence of their marriage, a certified copy of so much of the record of the family (called in Japanese the Koseki-tôhon) of each of the parties to the marriage as contains the items recorded by reason of the occurrence of the marriage. These seem to be documents which it is customary to issue in Japan, so that no new system would have to be inaugurated; moreover, they seem to be the most complete documentary evidence that can be furnished under all the circumstances, as they contain a record, properly authenticated, of the fact that the registrar has received notification from or on behalf of the parties concerned and that the record of the marriage, and therefore the marriage itself, has been completed in accordance with Japanese law.

This Department will immediately issue instructions to the immigration officers to accept such documents as satisfactory evidence in this class of cases. It will also give directions to the effect that all pending cases, in which temporary arrangements have been made looking to the final adjustment of this point, shall be finally landed upon the receipt, through the local Japanese consulates or otherwise, of similar documents affecting the persons involved.

In conclusion, may I request that you extend to the Japanese Ambassador an expression of this Department's pleasure that this subject, which at one time seemed to it to involve possibilities of embarrassment in the enforcement of the immigration law generally, has been finally cleared of all misunderstanding and adjusted in a manner satisfactory to all concerned? It is especially gratifying that the full and free discussion thereof has produced a situation under which the nomenclature that has grown up—the use of the expressions “picture brides”, “photograph brides”, “proxy marriages”, etc.—may now be abandoned, since the explanations and assurances of the Japanese Government show that the marriages in question are authorized and recognized by the former Government, which fact has led to their full recognition by the United States Government, so that the marriages involved are now to be considered by all concerned as in no sense distinguishable from marriages generally, and the women can be, and ought to be, referred to simply as wives.

Very truly yours,

W. B. WILSON

The Assistant Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of State

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, September 29, 1917.

SIR: Referring to recent correspondence regarding the recognition by the immigration officials, in the administration of the immigration law and particularly of the illiteracy test thereof, of the marriage of Japanese women to men of that race residing in this country, under the peculiar system of marriage in vogue in Japan, the Department desires to call your attention to a new phase of this subject which seems to require immediate and careful consideration.

It appears that the Japanese Government considers that persons born within the United States of parents who are nationals of Japan are citizens of the last named country; and said Government holds that such persons are subject to the laws of Japan at least to the extent that they are still considered as members of families and carried upon family records in the communities from which their parents originally came (and also they are liable to military service). In illustration, the Department might refer to two cases that recently arose in Hawaii.

One Hatsuki Goshi applied for admission at Honolulu on July 17, last, claiming to be the wife of one Shinichi Goshi, and having in her possession the usual documents regarding her identity, her marriage, and the granting of the permission, evidenced by passport, of the Japanese Government to her departing from the Empire. The man to whom she was destined testified that he is 23 years of age; that he was born in Hawaii and has never been in Japan; that his marriage to the applicant was registered by correspondence on October 28, 1916, the arrangement for the marriage having been made by his mother; that he has been arranging, by correspondence, during the past three years to be excused from military duty in Japan; and that he considers himself a citizen of the United States by virtue of the fact that he was born in Hawaii.

One Katsuyo Takata applied for admission at Honolulu on July 12, claiming to be the wife of one Kenichi Takata, and holding the usual documents. Kenichi Takata testified that he was born in Hawaii twenty-five years ago, and was married to applicant by correspondence in November, 1916. He was not questioned with respect to military service and volunteered no information on that point; nor did he assert whether or not he considered himself a citizen of the United States.

Of course, on the claims set up, both of the above-mentioned Japanese men are citizens of the United States, and, being also residents of this country, are subject to the laws of the United States and to the laws of no other country. It will be necessary for this Department to reach a conclusion as to whether or not in cases of this kind the marriage asserted shall be recognized and the woman admitted. While the Department has conceded that with regard to subjects of Japan the Japanese law, as explained to your Department by the Japanese Ambassador, authorizes and gives validity to marriages of the kind in question, the Department can hardly believe that it would be consistent or proper to make such a concession in cases in which one of the parties to the alleged marriage contract is not only a resident but a citizen of this country.

The theory of the Japanese law no doubt is that family and marriage regulations in operation in the Empire reach citizens thereof although at the time residing abroad; that in law, their domicile is that of the family or "house". But it would seem to this Department that consistency on questions of citizenship demands that persons born to American citizenship shall not be permitted to maintain or to obtain the benefits of a foreign citizenship and at the same time retain and claim all the rights, privileges and immunities that attach to the "inestimable heritage" that has become theirs by the fact of their being born in this country. Moreover, it should not be overlooked that the foreign born wife of a United States citizen acquires the citizenship of her husband immediately that the marriage takes place.

Before issuing any instructions on this important matter, the Department would like to be advised with respect to your views.

Respectfully,

LOUIS F. POST

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 11, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 29, 1917, relative to a new phase of the subject of the marriage of Japanese women to men of that race residing in this country.

You cite the cases of several men of Japanese race who claim to be citizens of the United States by virtue of having been born in Hawaii and who desire to bring into Hawaii Japanese women to whom they have been legally married, according to Japanese law, by correspondence.

This Department agrees with the opinion expressed in your letter under acknowledgment, that although it may be conceded that with respect to subjects of Japan, the Japanese law authorizes and gives validity to marriages of this kind, nevertheless it would seem consistent and proper that persons residing in, and claiming citizenship of, the United States should be required to observe the laws of this country.

As a solution of this difficulty I have the honor to suggest that these women be admitted the same as other "picture brides", but that, since the husbands are American citizens, a marriage ceremony in conformity with the law of the United States be required also.

In this connection I have to call your attention to a statement in your letter of September 29 which is apparently erroneous so far as concerns Japanese women. At the bottom of page 3 you say:

Moreover, it should not be overlooked that the foreign born wife of a United States citizen acquires the citizenship of her husband immediately that the marriage takes place.

It is the understanding of this Department that a Japanese woman does not acquire American citizenship by marriage to an American citizen, since under the law of the United States persons of Japanese race cannot become naturalized citizens of this country.

I have [etc.]

WILLIAM PHILLIPS

File No. 894.4054/23

The Assistant Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of State

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, November 21, 1917.

SIR: Careful consideration has been given to the contents of your letter of the 11th ultimo, in which you suggest that Japanese women who come to ports of the United States claiming to be the wives of Japanese-American citizens and to have acquired that status through the process of registration in vogue in Japan as a system of marriage, should be required to go through with a marriage ceremony in conformity with the law of the United States after arrival at a port of this country.

This Department does not believe that the difficulty with which it finds itself confronted should be solved by the adoption of your suggestion. This Department has always declined (and it is understood the practice obtained long before the Department was established and assumed jurisdiction of immigration matters) to permit women to come to ports of the United States from China and qualify for admission to the United States under the Chinese-exclusion and immigration laws by there being married to Chinese-American citizens. In enforcing the new immigration law the Department is following a similar practice with respect to aliens generally; for instance, it is not permitting any illiterate alien woman to come to a port of the United States and there qualify for admission as the wife of a United States citizen or of a domiciled alien by marrying such citizen or alien. You can readily understand, therefore, that it could not afford to establish a practice with respect to the admission of Japanese women on the ground that through marriage they had become the immediate members of the family of a Japanese domiciled here when the marriage was to be contracted after the alien arrived at a port of this country.

In view of the foregoing, and of the fact that in your letter of October 11 you state that you agree with this Department's view that consistency forbids the holding that a form of marriage, not valid in this country, but recognized as valid in Japan when contracted between subjects of that Empire, is to be regarded as valid when one party thereto is not only a resident but a citizen of the United States, it is the purpose of this Department to hold that in cases of this kind marriage will not be permitted after the woman arrives at a port of the United States and that such a woman cannot be admitted as the wife of a Japanese-American citizen unless the latter proceeds to a place where both he and his intended wife will be under the jurisdiction of the country in accordance with the laws of which the marriage is contracted.

LIBERIA

POLITICAL AFFAIRS. REFORMS SUGGESTED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

File No. 882.00/562a

The Secretary of State to Minister Curtis

No. 23

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 4, 1917.

SIR: The Government has given careful consideration to reports on Liberian affairs received from officials of the Republic, the Legation, the General Receiver of Customs, the Military Attaché and other competent sources, with the result that the conclusion has been reached that the Government of Liberia faces the necessity of giving practical effect to the suggestions contained in these instructions if the fraternal assistance of the United States in Liberian affairs is to be continued.

The General Receiver of Customs and the Secretary of the Legation, before leaving for their posts, were given oral instructions as to certain desirable reforms, and these, together with additional views of the Department, are embodied herein for your information in order that you may communicate them formally and officially to the Government of Liberia.

The Department has in the past made known to the Government of Liberia through your office its disappointment in the administration of Liberian affairs, and the time has now arrived when this Government, as next friend of Liberia, must insist upon a radical change of policy. The Government of the United States can no longer be subjected to criticism from other foreign Powers as regards the operation of the loan agreement, and can no longer tolerate failure on the part of the Liberian Government to institute and carry out necessary administrative reforms.

Unless the Liberian Government proceed without delay to act upon the advice and suggestions herewith expressed, this Government will be forced, regretfully, to withdraw the friendly support that historic and other considerations have hitherto prompted it to extend.

You may assure the Government of Liberia that it has no reason to fear any lack of interest in Liberia's welfare from the Department's attitude herein expressed, but that on the contrary, prompt and honest cooperation on the part of Liberia in carrying out the reforms herein enumerated will result in closer and more friendly relations between the two Governments and the increased success and prosperity of the Republic of Liberia.

The various items of reforms will be briefly discussed, the changes which you will insist upon being noted separately:

ARMS AND AMMUNITION

War Department Notice of October 1915 and Executive Order No. 4 of October 7, 1915, should be strictly enforced.

In order that the General Receiver of Customs may assist the Government of Liberia in controlling the traffic in arms and ammunition, he should be given notice promptly of all permits to import or sell that may be issued by the Secretary of War.

The General Receiver should be consulted in reference to the issuance of all commercial permits and all permits involving large transactions.

The General Receiver should countersign all commercial permits and all permits involving large transactions.

All legislation relating to the importation and sale of arms and ammunition should be reviewed by the General Receiver, and there should be enacted a general act covering such importation and sale. In this connection reference is made to Articles VIII to XIV of the General Act of Brussels of 1890.¹

INTERIOR ADMINISTRATION

Executive Order No. 5 of October 12, 1915, and Executive Order No. 6 of October 13, 1915, should be strictly enforced.

It is suggested that Mr. Massaquoi should not be longer employed in connection with native affairs. His ability is not questioned, but it is thought that he is unfitted for employment in connection with the interior administration.

The number of commissioners and other civil officials in native districts should be limited by agreement between the Government, the Financial Adviser, and the Commissioner General for the Anglo-Franco-Liberian boundaries.

No commissioner or other civil official should be stationed in the interior until his qualifications have been scrutinized and his appointment agreed upon by the Government of Liberia and the officers mentioned.

Summary and adequate punishment should be inflicted upon any civil or military official of the interior administration who is found guilty of misconduct.

Temporary arrangements for the efficient collection and administration of existing taxes should be made only after consultation with the Financial Adviser.

A simple, modern, effective plan of administration of the interior should be drawn up and adopted at the earliest practicable date. In this connection reference should be made to Major Young's draft. Native customary law should not be lost sight of; taxes should be collected, so far as possible, through chiefs; an equitable portion of taxes collected should be applied to public work of direct benefit to natives; and the practice of exchanging "dashes" should be suppressed.

No new taxes should be imposed upon natives until a plan of administration of the interior shall have been adopted.

The Interior Department and the War Department should be combined under one head.

¹ Malloy's Treaties, vol. 2, pp. 1970-1973.

FINANCIAL REFORM

The depositary agreement with the Bank of British West Africa² should be strictly enforced.

All public moneys (not assigned revenues) should be brought under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury.

No disbursement not authorized by the current budget, or in excess of the amount authorized, should be made without the sanction of the Financial Adviser.

The character of disbursements chargeable to a lump appropriation should be carefully scrutinized.

While revenues are insufficient to meet authorized disbursements, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Financial Adviser should jointly decide what disbursements (within the budget) shall be made currently; acting with the Financial Adviser, the Secretary of the Treasury should prepare a definite plan of payment therefor and this plan should be made public.

Agreeably to the provisions of Section 2 of the Emergency Mode of Procedure Act of March 12, 1915, the staffs of the several departments of Government should be reduced to such a minimum number as may be actually necessary for the proper conduct of the business of their departments.

In case of public exigency involving extra budget disbursements there should be a conference between the President, the Secretary of Treasury and the Financial Adviser; no disbursement should be made until the existence of the exigency is jointly recognized and the amount to be disbursed therefor is agreed upon.

No loans should be made by the Liberian Government unless the Financial Adviser has assented thereto in writing.

Disbursements on account of judiciary expenses should be carefully scrutinized; the expenses of the judiciary should be greatly curtailed.

Disbursements on account of pensions, etc., should also be carefully scrutinized; the pension list should be revised and brought into conformity with law.

The organizations of all departments and bureaus having to do with the collection, the custody or the disbursement of public moneys should be subjected to the scrutiny and supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Financial Adviser; necessary readjustments should at once be made.

Existing systems of accounting, including property accounting and record keeping, should be critically examined with a view to the putting into effect of a system of financial administration which shall secure economy in the use and expenditure of the public funds and a proper accounting of all moneys received and disbursed by the Republic.

The floating debt should receive the immediate consideration of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Financial Adviser. Undue increase of the floating debt should be prevented; a rational plan for its ultimate retirement should be devised; "jobbing" in Government paper should be put an end to, and the negotiability of Government paper should, so far as possible, be limited.

It should be made clear by the Executive Government to the Legislature that appropriations must be kept within the estimates submitted annually by the Secretary of the Treasury.

² Printed under Financial Affairs, p. 889.

The Financial Adviser should be timely consulted in regard to all matters directly or indirectly affecting the finances of the Republic, external or internal, and in regard to all matters that affect or may affect the receivership, including legislation and concessions.

Any draft of act or covering document prepared by the Financial Adviser in accordance with Article Fourth (d) Paragraph 2, of the Loan Agreement should be forwarded to the Legislature by the Secretary of the Treasury promptly and in the original form.

All drafts of acts submitted by the Financial Adviser should be given due consideration by the Legislature.

No draft of act submitted by the Financial Adviser should be altered or amended by the Legislature except after conference with the Financial Adviser.

The Financial Adviser should be advised promptly of the rejection of any draft of act submitted by him to the Legislature, definite reasons therefor being assigned.

The Financial Adviser should be advised promptly of the enactment of any legislation directly or indirectly affecting the finances of the Republic or the receivership; the texts of such acts should be promptly transmitted to him.

There should be a permanent reduction in the staff of civil employees of the Government, such only being retained as are essential to meet the actual need of Government.

The salaries of members of the Legislature should be reduced to a reasonable standard. Five hundred dollars per annum is the utmost that should be paid to a member of the Legislature.

Cabinet officers and other principal officials of the Executive Government who may be retained after the readjustment of the civil list should derive a compensation for their services from their salaries alone, and to that end their salaries should be increased to a reasonable living amount.

The Republic should by law provide for the appointment of a Government auditor who should be given full powers; the accounts of the Customs Receivership, the Liberian Frontier Force, and the general Government, including the Post Office Department, should be made to pass through his office. It is suggested that the Government auditor should be a foreigner of known competence, preferably an American.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

All postal revenues should be included in the depositary agreement with Bank of British West Africa.

The Postmaster General should be required to submit itemized accounts to the Secretary of the Treasury not less often than quarterly.

No disbursement not authorized by the current budget, or in excess of the amount authorized, should be made without the sanction of the Financial Adviser.

The character of disbursements chargeable to a lump appropriation should be carefully scrutinized.

While revenues are insufficient to meet authorized disbursements, the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Financial Adviser should jointly decide what disbursements (within the budget) shall be made currently. A definite plan of payment should be drawn up.

The Financial Adviser should be associated with the Postmaster General in a thorough inquiry into the accounting system of the Post Office Department. All records and books of account should be gone into and all abuses and irregularities corrected.

The Financial Adviser should be associated with the Postmaster General in a thorough investigation of Liberia's indebtedness to foreign postal administrations. A method should be devised to clear off existing arrears, to reestablish the Department's credit with foreign administrations and to prevent loss of credit in future.

The Financial Adviser should be associated with the Postmaster General in a searching investigation of the manufacture and sale of Liberian postage stamps. All abuses and irregularities in this regard should be corrected and any profit arising from the manufacture, sale or exchange of postage stamps should be passed to the credit of the Government.

LEGISLATION

A simple and effective quarantine act in general accordance with the draft already approved by the Executive Government should be enacted.

The Act of November 7, 1916, relative to customs rules and regulations should be made applicable to rules and regulations issued by the General Receiver of Customs prior to November 7, 1916.

An act should be passed prohibiting under heavy penalty the distillation of potable spirit within the territories of the Republic. In this connection reference should be had to Articles XC to XCV of the General Act of Brussels of 1890 and to Articles I and II of the Amendatory Convention of June 8, 1899.³

Acts and joint resolutions now on the statute books, conflicting with fundamental laws previously enacted, or not in harmony with measures of retrenchment made necessary by the European war, should be suspended by the Executive pending the meeting of the Legislature.

MILITIA

The Military Attaché of the Legation at Monrovia should be asked to make recommendations looking to the reorganization of the militia.

LIBERIAN FRONTIER FORCE

The plan for the administration of the Liberian Frontier Force funds agreed upon June 1, 1914, should be strictly followed.

It should be clearly understood that under Article Fourth (c), Paragraph 1, of the Loan Agreement the General Receiver of Customs has authority to disburse the Frontier Force funds; this authority may be exercised if the plan agreed upon June 1, 1914, fails to eliminate irregularities.

Prior to the incurrence of liability the General Receiver should be consulted in reference to all but routine expenditures of the Frontier

Force. No material increase in the strength of the Frontier Force should be made; no large orders for provisions or supplies should be placed; no extensive construction of roads or barracks entered into until the General Receiver's assent has been obtained.

It must not be forgotten that the General Receiver is obliged to provide funds for the upkeep of the Frontier Force. He has frequently been embarrassed by what appears to be extravagance on the part of the Frontier Force. It is not charged that expenditures are not being kept within the budget but it has often been difficult to provide the relatively great sums that are demanded from month to month by the Secretary of War.

The General Receiver should be given promptly any and all information he may request bearing directly or indirectly upon the finances of the Frontier Force.

A simple but effective system of accounting, and an adequate system of record keeping, should be adopted and rigidly adhered to. There should be instituted a proper system of property accounting.

A definite scheme of reorganization of the Frontier Force, either that prepared by Major Young or a modification of it, should be adopted immediately. In this connection the Military Attaché of the Legation at Monrovia should be invited to make recommendations.

All laws affecting the Frontier Force in conflict with the loan agreement or the scheme of reorganization adopted should be specifically repealed.

Until the services of American officers are dispensed with the Frontier Force should remain under the command of an officer designated in accordance with the provisions of Article Fourth (c), Paragraph 1, of the Loan Agreement.

The cadet school organized by Major Young should be continued by the Military Attaché of the Legation at Monrovia.

The status of the Military Attaché of the Legation at Monrovia should be accurately defined and his advice should be sought in all military matters, as the advice of the Financial Adviser is sought in all matters affecting the finances of the Republic.

CUSTOMS RECEIVERSHIP

All irregularities in connection with the recruiting of native labor should be eliminated. It is suggested that the receivership should be given control specifically of all matters relating to such recruiting. The receivership by the Loan Agreement is given control of the collection and administration of assigned revenues, including head-moneys—the tax upon native labor exported.

After consultation with those interested, the question of allowances to foreign officials of the Government, including members of the receivership, the Inspector General of Hygiene, the American officers of the Frontier Force and the Boundary Surveyor, should be definitely disposed of.

The granting of concessions should be greatly restricted; the financial standing of all applicants for concessions should be inquired into and concessions should be given only to reliable companies or individuals who intend to work them; and no monopolies or concessions in perpetuity should be granted.

The Department approves of quarterly accounting by the General Receiver of Customs.

In case of disagreement between the General Receiver of Customs and Financial Adviser and the Liberian Government an agreed statement of the case should be submitted promptly to the Department of State for its opinion.

The Department is convinced that the foregoing suggestions should be modeled into a definite reform program and carried out through the sympathetic and harmonious cooperation of the Liberian Government with the American agents in the Republic. It is anticipated that Mr. Bundy, who has had an opportunity to become fully informed of the Department's views on Liberian affairs, will, by conferring with you and officials of the Government, communicate what has been expressed to him.

You will make at short intervals detailed reports upon the progress of Liberian reforms and will solicit directly from the Liberian Government data to be used in preparing such reports.

In bringing the above matters to the attention of the Liberian Government you may discreetly make known to it that while the Government of the United States will cheerfully accept promises in connection with the above enumerated reforms, it will not be satisfied with promises alone, tangible and permanent results must follow.

A copy of this instruction is enclosed for the information and discreet use of the General Receiver of Customs.

No. 112

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Monrovia, July 9, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report the receipt of the program of reform in the administration of the Government of Liberia proposed by Department, a copy of which was transmitted to General Receiver of Customs.

A memorandum of said program was transmitted promptly to the Liberian Government accompanied with a note, a copy of which is herewith enclosed marked enclosure No. 1.

Before bringing the matter to the attention of the Liberian Government, I invited the General Receiver and Major commanding the Liberian Frontier Force to confer with me, the Secretary of Legation and the Military Attaché.

All of the above-named were present at the said conference which was held in the Legation and every detail of the said program was discussed and each conferee was in accord as to the desirability of reform in administration of the affairs of Liberia and of one mind as to his willingness and determination to lend all possible aid in furtherance of the adoption by Liberia of the suggestions and proposals of Department.

There seems to be a disposition on the part of Liberia to act without delay upon the said memorandum of reform, as evidenced by the calling of the Legislature in extra session for that purpose, for July 16.

The progress of the Legislature in the premises will be reported to Department with all convenient despatch.

Minister Curtis to the Liberian Secretary of State

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Monrovia, June 25, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith for the information of the Government of Liberia, a memorandum of a definite reform program suggested by the Department of State at Washington for adoption by the Liberian Government.

I am instructed by the Department, in connection with said memorandum of desirable reforms, to make known to the Government of Liberia its keen interest in the growth, development and national well-being of Liberia and its disappointment in the administration of Liberian affairs, as it feels now that the time has arrived when the Government of the United States, as next friend of Liberia, must insist upon a radical change of policy or continue to be subjected to criticism from other foreign Powers as regards the loan agreement, which it is not disposed to do.

The temper of the Department as disclosed in said instruction is such as calls for immediate action on the part of the Liberian Government with respect to the advice and suggestions set out in the enclosed memorandum, if it would escape the consequences of the withdrawal of the friendly support that purely altruistic considerations have hitherto prompted the Government of the United States to extend.

The manifest determination of the Department, on the other hand, not only to maintain, but to enlarge upon, the historic attitude of the friendly interest of the Government of the United States in Liberia's welfare, in the proportion of Liberia's prompt and honest cooperation in carrying out the said suggested reforms, is just as unmistakable.

Increased success and prosperity for the Republic of Liberia will, I am sure, result from the closer and more friendly relations between the two Governments, which will follow in the wake of the adoption by Liberia of said suggested reforms, while the absence of tangible and permanent results in this regard, will doubtless cause the Department to reach the conclusion, that the failure to thus translate promise into performance represents the bent of the Republic as to the need or desirability of reforms.

No. 127

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Monrovia, August 13, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report for the information of Department that the special session of the Liberian Legislature which convened here on July 16, has for the most part followed the recommendations of the Chief Executive in connection with the program of administrative reform heretofore suggested to the Liberian Government by Department.

The exceptions noted to the above, are the defeat or the emasculation of bills in consonance with said recommendations touching the adjustment of the liquor traffic to the provisions of the Brussels Act, the consolidation of the Departments of War and Interior and the equalization of the salaries of the executive and legislative branches of the Government.

Laws have been enacted as follows:

1. Creating the office of Auditor and providing for the salary of the incumbent.
2. Consolidating all revenues, other than assigned.
3. Defining two zones in connection with the liquor traffic, one zone comprising the territory forty miles from the coast interiorward (civilized centers), in which the traffic in liquor is permissible and the other comprising the entire hinterland in which said traffic is prohibited.
4. Providing for the registration of the floating debt of the Republic.
5. Consolidating the Departments of the Interior and Education.
6. Suspending the offices of Superintendent of Montserrado County (Monrovia) and the Monthly Court (probate) of said County.
7. Regulation respecting arms and ammunition.
8. Quarantine regulations.

The views of the lawyers of the Legislature, pertinent to the liquor traffic and the applicability thereto of the provisions of the Brussels Act, which they urged successfully on the members generally, were, first, that Liberia being a signatory Power to said act, became for the purpose of the act, a European State, equally interested with the other Powers in protecting from the ill effects of alcohol, the African indigenes whose self-mastery is inadequate protection therefrom and second, that the provisions of said act, touching the African Provinces or Colonies of European States whereby in said area, the creation of certain zones are authorized in which alcohol may be manufactured and sold under proper regulations, apply to the Americo-Liberian element governing Liberia and justify the Government in enacting the zones legislation without transgressing or evading the letter or spirit of the Brussels Act.

The views of the lawyers in the Legislature with respect to the consolidation of the Departments of War and Interior, which were adopted by the Legislature generally, were that the War Department, being authorized and created by the Constitution, cannot be abolished except by Constitutional amendment and that any statute seeking to do so is void ab initio.

Perhaps the leading lawyer in the House, who I think is chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said to me that as the obvious desire and intent of Department was to promote retrenchment, the consolidation of the Department of Education with that of the Interior substantially meets the ends sought by Department, to which I replied by the query, would the addition of the duties of the Interior Department (not a constitutional office) to those of Secretary of War in any way run counter to constitutional provisions?

The bill presented, designed to equalize the salaries of the members of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, provided for the reduction of the salaries of the members of the Legislature, who actively serve two months per year, from $1,000.00 per annum, to $500.00 per annum, and by the same token for the increase of the salaries of the Cabinet members who actively serve twelve months per year from $1,200.00 and $2,000.00 per annum to $3,000.00 per annum. The bill failed of passage and the Legislature adjourned, however, the President is determined to exert every proper influence to effect its passage and with that end in view has again called the Legislature together in special session to meet Monday, August 13, 10 a. m., at which session it is quite likely that the desires of the President will prevail.

I submit that, as an earnest of the intention of the Liberian Government to adopt the suggestions of the Department relative to designated administrative reforms, the action already taken and that portending are very significant as showing a realization on the part of the Liberian Government that performance must supersede promise in all things relating to the evolution and development of its laws, its customs and its domain.

As indicating the punctilio with which the Liberian Government is endeavoring to adopt the suggestions of Department, it might be added that Mr. Massaquoi has been removed from any participation in the affairs of the Department of the Interior and that the Liberian militia has been taken under the active supervision of the War Department and subject to the orders of Major J. H. Anderson, in consequence of which a wonderful transformation in its bearing and esprit de corps is apparent to the most casual observer.

I am convinced that an honest effort is being made by Liberia to prove worthy of the interest heretofore and now taken in her welfare by the Government of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to report for the information of the Department as directed in Department's diplomatic instruction No. 23 of April 4, 1917, the progress made by the Liberian Government in translating into deeds the promises made in connection with the program of administrative reform suggested by Department for adoption by it as follows:

The laws passed designedly to effectuate the desired improvement, seem to be working smoothly with an apparent desire on the part of all concerned to cooperate one with the other.

The enforcement of the law respecting the area in which the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors is forbidden, while hardly meriting dithyrambic praise, does not evoke Cassandric prophecies, for the isolated case of the evasion thereof has, I am informed, been promptly rebuked by the President of the Republic and repetition forbidden.

There is some evidence of somnolent dissatisfaction on the part of certain members of the Legislature at the reduction of their salaries, that may manifest itself at the impending regular session of that body.

Captain Green, who is being freely consulted by the Liberian Government in its efforts to improve the efficiency, morale and esprit de corps of its military organization, has taken charge of the school for cadets, who are officers of the Frontier Force in embryo, and is making commendable progress in his efforts to have the military arm of the Government service approximate American standards.

There is in my judgment need of amending the law creating the Government auditor as previously reported.

The pith and pemmican of any just conclusion, as to the disposition of the Liberian Government to wholeheartedly adopt the said program of reform, if predicated upon the official and private acts of its agents and representatives, must needs be an avowal that the Government is honestly striving to make its performance square with its promises.

The British Embassy have the honour to communicate the following information with regard to affairs in Liberia, in case it should be of interest to the Department of State.

The selection by the President of Liberia of Mr. Walter F. Walker as Secretary of the Treasury has been badly received by the Liberian public, and a public meeting of protest was held at Monrovia, as a result of which the chairman of the meeting, ex-President Arthur Barclay, handed an official protest to the President, who declined to receive it.

The action of the President in the matter is reported to have been very badly received, and it is represented as possible that a serious Government crisis may be developed, resulting perhaps in the removal of Mr. Howard from the Presidency. Should this occur, ex-President Barclay, who is probably now the most popular man in Liberia, seems the most likely candidate for the head of any Government which might be formed.

The information communicated by the British Embassy concerning the displeasure with which the appointment of Mr. Walker was received in Liberia conforms in a measure to similar information received by the Department of State from the American Legation at Monrovia, which makes no mention, however, of any movement arising therefrom, for President Howard's removal. Should such an event occur, the Government of the United States would be disposed to leave the selection of Mr. Howard's successor to the will of the Liberian people.

His Majesty's Government fully concur in the view that, should any such development occur, the selection of Mr. Howard's successor should be left to the choice of the Liberian people. The reports received at this Embassy, of which a brief summary was communicated to the State Department in the Embassy's memorandum No. 482 of November 8, appeared to indicate that there was, at the time at which they were written, a party among the Liberians in favour of the return of Mr. Barclay to the Presidency, and it was to this movement that reference was made in the last sentence of that memorandum.

As fiscal agent of Liberia, National City Bank of New York holds approximately $142,000 par of original authorized issue of bonds as reserve against certain claims against Liberia. These claims no longer existent, and therefore Bank thinks no longer necessity for continuance this reserve on such account.

Shortly after assuming duties as General Receiver, Mr. Worley made request for turning over portion this reserve for purpose of public works in Liberia. Bank replied February 7, 1917 that under sixth section of Refunding Loan Agreement they are authorized to certify and deliver any unissued bonds upon order of Liberian Secretary Treasury countersigned by General Receiver of Customs on payment to Bank of gross proceeds of sale thereof and that agreement provides such proceeds shall be held by Bank and paid solely to reimburse Liberia for expenditures made by it for public improvements of a character and to an amount approved by General Receiver and Receivers or majority of them. The Bank added they had no facilities for sale these bonds and could not undertake to market them and that would be improper for Bank to do so then in view of probable default in the next semiannual interest payment.

In furnishing this information to Department Bank stated that even if desired to put at disposition Liberia reserve now in custody of Bank, it will be necessary first to market the bonds constituting the reserve and that it is very doubtful under existing financial conditions whether any sale of the bonds can be arranged.

In view of this statement ascertain whether Liberian Government still wants the bonds put on the market. Obtain also views of Receiver General.

MONROVIA, July 27, 1917.

SIR: In reply to your letter of July 20, in re $142,000 in bonds reserved against unadjusted indebtedness.

I have had several letters from the National City Bank on the subject of this cablegram and it was practically decided to allow the matter to remain in statu quo until after the war when the bonds could be more easily marketed and with little or no loss in discount.

In view of the probable heavy loss by discount if the sale of these bonds is effected during the continuance of the war, I agree with the Bank that their sale be postponed until a more propitious opportunity presents itself.

Almost from the time of my arrival here I have urged the sale of these bonds so that the proceeds might be available for the purposes and by the methods contemplated in the Loan Agreement. In view of the entrance of the United States into the war and the increased cost of materials and implements for public improvements, the latter will have to be delayed and become a part of the larger plan for public improvement and the building of works of public necessity and utility. If the Bank had cabled its inability or lack of facilities for marketing these bonds on receipt of the original request in due form, some arrangements might have been made; now it is too late.

I have been delayed in replying to your letter from the fact that I was told informally that the Liberian Government had received a similar letter from you and that they would call on me for such comment as would enable a reply to be made to you. To date no formal request has been made and I therefore make reply to you direct.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

SIR: I have the honor to enclose herewith for the further information of the Department copy of an act entitled "An Act creating a Government Auditor, prescribing his duties and authority,"⁵ which was passed by the Legislature of Liberia at the recent call session thereof, conformable to the program of administrative reform suggested by Department, and also copy of Note 345/D., under date of September 21, 1917,⁶ from the Liberian Government whereby I am requested to implore the Government of the United States on behalf of the Liberian Government to use its good offices in procuring a suitable person for said post.

It will be observed in reading the provisions of said Act that Section 2 thereof empowers said Auditor, inter alia, to examine, audit and settle all accounts pertaining to the revenues and receipts from whatever source of the Liberian Government, the Customs Receiver-ship and Liberian Frontier Force; that Section 3 thereof creates a Board of Review to be composed of the President of Liberia, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Financial Adviser, and that Section 6 thereof makes the said Board of Review the court of last resort in the settlement of the accounts of the executive branches of the Government, where an appeal in writing is made to it by any such branch of the Government within six months.

It will further be observed that the Secretary of the Treasury, who by the said act is made a member of said Board of Review, is thus empowered to pass upon an appeal which might conceivably be based upon an exception taken by his Department (Sec. 6).

The advisability of amending the law so as to delete any feature that may give ground for criticism, by the most captious, concerning the absolute impartiality of the auditing, examination and final settlement of the claims and accounts of those having business relations with the Liberian Government, has been unofficially brought to the attention of the Liberian Government by me and the President unhesitatingly stated to me that the broached objections under discussion are well-founded.

It is therefore probable that suitable amendments to said law will be suggested by him to the regular session of the Legislature which convenes the first Monday in December 1917.

No. 406

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, October 19, 1917.

SIR: I have received instructions from his Majesty's Government to invite your attention to certain questions which have arisen in regard to the administration of the sinking fund on the Liberian 5% Gold Loan of 1913.

The total amount of this loan issued, I am informed, was $1,558,000.00, of which $158,000.00 was represented by privately issued bonds. As you are aware, the Loan Agreement of March 7, 1912, between the Republic of Liberia and certain New York bankers, provides for the purchase of the bonds for the sinking fund and lays down (Article 5) that the amounts received by the fiscal agents of the loan, applicable to the sinking fund shall be applied, so far as may be reasonably practicable, to the purchase of bonds in the open market.

The interpretation of this provision of the agreement by the fiscal agents (the National City Bank of New York) has been such as to cause the holders of the publicly issued bonds to feel that their interests have not been properly considered. The British bondholders have represented to his Majesty's Government that, in spite of the provision as to the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund in the open market, as a matter of fact not a single bond of the public issue has been redeemed, and the whole of the purchases, amounting so far to $100,000.00, have been confined to the private issue, of which about 63% has thus been redeemed. I may add that, while there is not at my disposal any certain information as to the holders of the privately issued bonds, it was supposed that a large proportion of this issue was in the hands of German interests.

Of the public issue of $1,400,000.00 the larger part was issued, and is now held, on the London market, and the holders cannot but feel that the methods which have so far resulted in the application of the sinking fund solely to the privately issued bonds are a serious prejudice to their interests, and are also contrary to the spirit of the loan agreement. The loan was not issued and, I am informed, is not quoted in New York, and the purchase in New York of the privately issued bonds, the holders of which have had the opportunity of having the last say as to the price, does not seem to be a fair interpretation of the rule that the sinking fund is to be applied to the purchase of bonds in the open market.

In bringing these considerations to your notice, I have been instructed to enquire whether the United States authorities have any information as to the procedure of the National City Bank in this matter, and, if so, whether the course of action adopted by the Bank meets with their approval.

SIR: I am calling your attention to conditions in Liberia. The trade between Liberia and Great Britain is practically suspended. Two vessels which would have brought some forty thousand dollars ($40,000) revenue to the Republic, have been recently sunk by German submarines. There is no immediate prospect of any relief to Liberia in the matter of merchant vessels as it has been announced that the Shipping Department in Liverpool has neither ships nor goods for this trade. The resumption, therefore, of the trade promised to Liberia before the deportation of the Germans and upon which Liberia depended, has not been realized and the country is in a worse condition today than it was ever before. The following statement will serve to explain the embarrassing situation of the Republic. In the middle of September, according to instructions from the State Department, the balance in the Receiver's Department was five hundred dollars ($500) with outstanding obligations which had to be met, of seven thousand five hundred dollars ($7,500). It does seem that some practical relief should be considered for Liberia as one of the Allies.

I respectfully submit these facts for your serious consideration and trust that in the generosity of your heart you will be able to divorce yourself for a few minutes from your other important and arduous tasks to give to Liberia's condition some earnest consideration.

The reforms which your Department has suggested, have been practically adopted. All the measures have been passed into law by the Legislature except that which referred to the prohibition of the distillation and manufacturing of spirits in the Republic.⁶ And with regard to this, an excise duty, equal to the amount placed upon imported liquor, was imposed upon all spirits distilled and manufactured in the Republic and such manufacturing restricted to the civilized zones in the Republic. The reforms suggested and adopted are:

⁶ See Political Affairs, Reforms, etc., ante.

- a. The reduction of the salaries of the Legislature and the increase of those of the members of the Cabinet.
- b. The appointment of a foreign Auditor.
- c. The regulating of the importation and sale of firearms and ammunition in the Republic.
- d. Defining specifically the duties of the Financial Adviser, etc.
- e. The reduction of the Cabinet, etc., etc.

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador

No. 1927

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 14, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: In your note of October 19, 1917 inviting, under instructions received by you from His Majesty's Government, attention to certain questions which have arisen in regard to the administration of the sinking fund on the Liberian Five Per Cent Gold Loan of 1913 (1912), you inquire whether the United States authorities had any information as to the procedure of the National City Bank of New York in this matter and, if so, whether the course of action adopted by the Bank meets with their approval.

As the Department of State was not found to be in possession of any information on the subject from the National City Bank of New York a copy of your communication was communicated to the Bank with a request that the Department be fully advised in the matter.

I have the honor to enclose herewith the reply of the National City Bank, from which it would seem to appear that the Council of Foreign Bondholders, on whose behalf the Bank assumed your note was written, and with whom the English holders of the bonds had pooled their interests, took no advantage of the opportunity to offer any bonds for purchase for the sinking fund, and that in the purchase of bonds the Bank endeavored to act in fairness to all the bondholders.

I have [etc.]

ROBERT LANSING

[Inclosure]

The National City Bank to the Secretary of State

NEW YORK, November 30, 1917.

SIR: We duly received your letter, dated November 23, 1917, relating to the administration of the sinking fund of the Republic of Liberia Five Per Cent Gold Loan of 1912 (not 1913, as stated in the letter of the British Ambassador, a copy of which you enclosed), and take pleasure in submitting to you herewith a statement of the course followed by us in the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund in August, 1916.

As you are aware, the Liberian bonds were issued for the purpose of readjusting the funded debt of the Republic of Liberia. The greater part of the bonds was issued directly to creditors in payment of their claims. In cases, however, where creditors insisted upon cash payment, the money was secured by the sale of bonds to a group of bankers in this city, with whom were associated Robert Fleming & Company, of London, England, Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, of Paris, France, M. Warburg & Company, of Hamburg, Germany, and Hope & Company of Amsterdam, Holland. All of the bonds were issued in pursuance of a certain agreement for refunding loan, between the Republic and the said banks. The British Ambassador refers in his letter to "publicly issued bonds" and "privately issued bonds," but we do not understand that any such distinction exists.

The bonds were originally delivered substantially as follows: $225,000 thereof in Germany; $460,000 thereof in Amsterdam; $715,000 thereof in London; and $158,000 thereof in New York, making a total of $1,558,000 of bonds issued and outstanding. Some of the bonds have been listed on the London Stock Exchange; but we understand that they are seldom if ever quoted thereon. The English holders have pooled their interests with a "Council of Foreign Bondholders," which figures in the correspondence hereinafter referred to. So far as we know, none of the bonds have been listed on any other exchange.

Upon receipt of funds from the Republic of Liberia, in June, 1916, sufficient for the purchase of approximately $43,000 of bonds, we were confronted with the necessity of determining what would constitute an open market within the meaning of the refunding loan agreement. The only market in which the bonds were dealt with at all was the London Stock Exchange, but the bonds listed thereon constituted less than half of the total issue of bonds, and to have purchased the bonds in that market alone would obviously have been unfair to the holders of the bonds in other countries, while at the same time, such a procedure would have resulted in inflated prices which, as fiscal agents of the loan, it was our duty to the Republic of Liberia to avoid, if possible. Accordingly, on June 15, 1916, we wrote to Robert Fleming & Company, of London, England, as follows:

"As fiscal agent of the Republic of Liberia 5% Loan of 1952, we are desirous of purchasing for the sinking fund about $43,500 of these bonds.

"Will you kindly advise us by letter so it may be received by us about August 1, at what price you can purchase any or all of the bonds mentioned for delivery in our hands about August 30, and if your tenders are accepted by us, we will cable you.

"Under the circumstances in taking into consideration the length of time involved, we presume you will not be able to give a very fine quotation. However, that will make no difference, as we will not at this time take account of small margins, so that the price you give us may be more or less an approximate one. Of course, if you can give us a definite price it will suit us much better. The price which you must make to us will be in dollars and cents, the bonds to be laid down in New York free of insurance and all other charges. In other words, your price is to be net to us in New York."

Similar letters were written on the same day to the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, of Paris, France, and Messrs. Hope & Company, of Amsterdam, Holland.

On July 13, 1916, Messrs. Fleming & Company replied as follows:

"Liberia Sinking Fund. On my return to this side I find your letter of 15th ulto. on this subject. You have since, we think, received a letter from the Council of Foreign Bondholders on the same subject.

"On reading the fiscal agreement we judge that you will reject the idea of sealed tenders and will purchase in the open market.

"To meet the views expressed by the bondholders here through the Council of Foreign Bondholders, we would suggest as the best method of adjusting the matter that you should cable us on or about 1st August with authority to buy the $43,500, or any part of same, at a certain limited price. We would thereupon, through the broker most prominent in this loan, make it known that we wanted to buy the given amount of the bonds at the lowest price, and ask him to ascertain at what they could be purchased. If we could not purchase the bonds at or under the limit which you would then give, you would doubtless be able to obtain them in New York and so the matter would be ended."

That letter was received on July 24, and on July 25 we replied by cable:

"Cannot give price or order to buy we confirm letter June 15 cable tenders."

The letter of the Council of Foreign Bondholders, to which the letter of Fleming & Company refers, was as follows:

"The Council of Foreign Bondholders has heard with much satisfaction that the arrears of sinking fund on the Liberian 5% Gold Loan of 1913 are to be paid off and the amortization brought up to date, a proceeding which seems to be only in consonance with the high auspices under which the loan was issued.

"We are asked, however, by some of the holders of the bonds to invite your kind attention to the method in which the sinking fund was carried out on the occasion when it was put into operation. We understand that under the loan contract the sinking fund is to be applied by purchases in the open market, but, as far as we are aware, the amount of the loan issued to the public has not been reduced. It appears to us, therefore, that the bonds purchased must have been taken from the portion of the loan not publicly issued.

"The bondholders here strongly urge that the funds available for the sinking fund should be applied as follows at the forthcoming and subsequent amortizations:

"(1) By sealed tenders to be opened on a date to be announced beforehand, or (2) by purchases in the open market where the bonds were issued and are now quoted.

"If any other plan is adopted it seems to us that all the holders do not have an equal chance.

"As we understand that offers to sell are to be submitted by the 1st of August, we should esteem it a favour if you would cable us whether you are prepared to fall in with the bondholders' views and, if so, which of the two methods above mentioned you will adopt."

To that letter we replied as follows:

"We duly received your letter of the 3d instant.

"While it is true that the fiscal agent of the Liberian loan is now in funds, with which to purchase the required number of bonds for the sinking fund, there seems to be no certainty that this condition will continue.

"In purchasing bonds heretofore we have tried to give equal opportunity to all bondholders to dispose of their bonds. It is our desire to purchase the bonds in the open market wherever that market may be, and we know of no better way to do this than publicly to invite all bondholders to make offerings, with the assurance that the bonds offered at the lowest price will be the ones purchased by us, irrespective of who may hold them.

"We should not think it feasible nor in accordance with the terms of the loan agreement to call for sealed tenders, in accordance with your alternative suggestion."

On July 29, we received the following cablegram from the Council of Foreign Bondholders:

"Referring our letter re Liberia 3d to which no reply yet received we have been requested by principal holders to protest against your proposal to proceed on lines of your letter of 15th June to Robert Fleming and Co. as being contrary to terms of loan agreement and under circumstances we suggest postponement redemption pending satisfactory arrangement. Cable reply."

to which we replied by cablegram, on August 2, as follows:

"Our letter twenty-first answers fully yours third will defer definite commitment purchase until August 7, can purchase bonds at 85 will buy at lowest price make offer."

The Council of Foreign Bondholders cabled us as follows, on August 4:

"Your letter twenty-first not yet received Friday holders cannot therefore be informed by Monday 7th, we consider most important therefore definite commitment advised in your cable received yesterday should be further deferred. Please cable reply."

and we replied thereto on August 5:

"Commitment deferred until fourteenth. Bonds offered at 84½. Cable if our letter has not been received on receipt of this."

On August 8, the following cablegram was received:

"Letter twenty-first July and marconigram received contrary to desire in third paragraph letter bondholders in England have not been publicly invited to offer their bonds. London certainly open market and we consider you should cable Fleming to publicly invite and accept lowest offers submitted in London by holders up to a given date all offers including American and other holders to be made in London Council Foreign Bondholders."

to which cablegram we replied on August 9:

"Unwilling to restrict market to London open market is everywhere Fleming requested to invite offers and will advise us any offer submitted. Do you care to offer bonds you control."

On the same day we instructed Robert Fleming & Company, the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, and Hope & Company, to advertise in the newspapers of their respective cities for offers of bonds to be submitted on August 16. On August 11, Fleming & Company cabled us as follows:

"We advertise as follows: Under Liberian heading the National City Bank of New York, fiscal agent for the loan cable us to receive offers till sixteenth August inclusive of the above bonds to absorb monies now in hand applicable to sinking fund and request us to cable on that day of any offers received, offers must be at a net flat price in dollars deliverable and payable in New York on thirtieth August nineteen sixteen."

Meanwhile, on July 25, we received a letter from the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, of which the following is a translation:

"We are in receipt of your letter of June 15, 1916, by which you ask us to inform you, for August 1, 1916, and as exactly as possible, the net price (all expenses included) at which we would be able to deliver into your hands at New York, all or part of this: $43,500—capital nominal loan 5%, 1912, Republic of Liberia, which you propose to buy back, in view of the amortizement of the loan.

"We have noted that you will advise us by cable, in case the propositions we may submit should be accepted.

"In reply, we wish to inform you that we have, up to the present, no offer to transmit to you in view of this transaction; we shall hasten, of course, to let you know what propositions we shall be able to get ready at the desired time.

"We add that we have communicated your said letter to our agency at Geneva, asking it, so as to avoid delay, to address you its propositions direct, if occasion arises."

On July 28, we received the following letter from Hope & Company:

"We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 15th ult., informing us that you, as fiscal agents of the Republic of Liberia 5% loan of 1952, are desirous of buying $43,500 of these bonds for the sinking fund.

"We are much obliged to you for having approached us in this connection, regretting that the very difficult means of communication with your side as well as the impossibility of having securities shipped thither are an impediment to act in this matter, so that we, under these circumstances, prefer not to act upon your suggestion as to making you an offer of the said bonds."

Neither the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas, nor Hope & Company, ever submitted any bonds in pursuance of our request.

On July 11, Mr. Dunning, our representative in London, cabled us as follows:

"Cable eleven offered any part fifty thousand Liberia eighty-eight seven-eighths net New York."

to which we replied on July 12, as follows:

"Liberia offers must be made Aug. 1. See our cable 66."

On July 27, Fleming & Company cabled:

"Responsible broker offers fifty thousand dollars Liberia eighty-six half terms your letter fifteenth June."

As bonds had meanwhile been offered to us at 85 we cabled Fleming & Company on August 2:

"Will defer definite commitment purchase until August seventh can purchase Liberia bonds at eighty-five will buy at lowest price make offer."

A similar cablegram was on the same day sent to Mr. Dunning.

On August 3, Fleming & Company:

"Liberia cable received broker now reduces price to eighty-four and half New York flat terms your letter fifteenth June presume may expect final reply eighth August."

On August 4, Mr. Dunning cabled:

"Liberia bond holders here have pooled holdings and offered direct hence market bare."

On August 7, we cabled Fleming & Company:

"Commitment deferred until fourteenth can you do better than eighty-four and one-half?"

On August 16, we received the following cablegrams from Fleming & Company:

"Liberia received offers fifty thousand dollars eighty-three and half half five thousand ninety will cable later today if further received.

"Second cable. Liberia beyond fifty-five thousand dollars no further offers received."

On August 17, we cabled Robert Fleming & Company:

"Liberia bonds offered here eighty-three flat. Can you do better."

and, on August 18, we received the following answer:

"Liberia offer of fifty thousand reduced to eighty-two three-quarters flat."

On August 19, we received an offer from holders in this country to sell bonds at 82½, which we considered advisable to accept, and we accordingly cabled Robert Fleming & Company on that day as follows:

"Have purchased Liberian bonds required for sinking fund at eighty-two and one half."

From the foregoing, it appears that the Council of Foreign Bondholders, on behalf of whom we assume the British Ambassador is writing, took no advantage of the opportunity of offering any bonds for purchase for the sinking fund.

The offers seem to have been made through a broker acting for an undisclosed principal, and when it became apparent that no firm offer was forthcoming, we felt it incumbent upon us to put an end to what was becoming an undignified bickering by accepting the lowest price offered, which was six and three-eighths points lower than the original offer by the English broker, and by so much more to the advantage of the Republic of Liberia.

Respectfully yours,

ANDREW MILLER, Jr., Assistant Cashier

No. 2015

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 14, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: On November 5 last, Mr. de Laboulaye of your Embassy called at the Department to say that you desired it made of record that the Government of the French Republic supported the position of the British Government as stated in the British Ambassador's note of October 19, in regard to the administration of the sinking fund on the Liberian Five Per Cent Gold Loan of 1912.

The position of the British Government as stated in the British Ambassador's note above mentioned was in effect that, in confining the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund to the private issue, the fiscal agents (The National City Bank of New York) had acted contrary to a provision of the loan agreement which, it was stated, required the bonds to be purchased in the open market as far as was practicable.

It being found that the Department of State was without any information as to the procedure of The National City Bank of New York in this matter, a copy of the British Ambassador's note was communicated to the Bank, with a request that the Department be fully advised in the matter.

I have the honor to enclose herewith, for your information, a copy of the Bank's reply,⁷ from which it would seem to appear that the Bank endeavored to act in fairness to all the bondholders.

MY DEAR MR. LANSING: I enclose herewith copy of a memorandum I have just received from my Government, with regard to certain conditions prevailing along the American side of the line, and I would greatly appreciate it if your excellency would be so kind as to give this matter your valued consideration, as it surely appears to be a matter of vital importance that some remedial action might be taken to prevent the frequency with which I understand the neutrality laws are being violated by political agitators who live under the shelter of the laws of this country and now and then break the laws of neutrality whenever it seems to be propitious for them to do so.

[Inclosure—Translation]

Mr. Arriola, Chief of the Mexican Secret Service in the United States, to the Department of Foreign Affairs

QUERÉTARO, December 16, 1916.

Taking into consideration that the present conferences have for a purpose to definitely establish a suitable policy between Mexico and the United States, to which both Governments will be subjected in their future relations, I consider it my duty to call your attention to the American vigilance service along the frontier, the deficiency of which has had so much to do in our international affairs, due more than anything else to the scarce personnel which the Department of Justice has at its disposal to watch all that which might be considered a violation of the neutrality laws of that country to the detriment of ours. It is not my intention to accuse or criticize the American Government, as I am a witness that on many occasions the American agents have been very well disposed to assist our Government and whenever I have asked them to do so, but unfortunately, they have been unable to prevent in many cases the large contrabands of arms and ammunition and a constant propaganda of the reactionaries, due to the fact that many of the agents of the Department of Justice do not speak the Spanish language and their personality does not make it easy for them to mix among the groups of reactionaries, and even though they would be able to go between them they do not speak the language sufficiently to understand the plottings that are being prepared against our Government, due to the fact that the number of agents which the American Government has in the frontier is very small, as there are places in California, Arizona and Texas where there is no agent at all. In other places, like Tucson, Arizona, there is only one agent and in places like El Paso, San Antonio, New Orleans and other large cities there are between three to five, but these agents in their majority are always busy with their own affairs, as I have personally observed it, and on other occasions when I have personally pointed out the necessity of increasing the vigilance in matters concerning our country they have shown me very good will but they have not the time. It is, therefore, that I consider it my duty to report this to your office in order that the matter be brought to the attention of the American Government through our representative in Washington, asking for a competent number of agents from the Department of Justice devoted exclusively, if possible, to investigating plottings against our Government, for the purpose of avoiding constant combination all along the border and with whom the Mexican Secret Service would be willing to cooperate in behalf of the welfare of the two Governments, and I am sure that if the American Government would take equal pains to those displayed by our Government all of these plottings would cease within a very short time.

¹Continued from For. Rel. 1916, p. 463

Our political enemies are very careful in not using means which might fall within the action of the neutrality laws, confining themselves to the publication of alarming and exaggerated reports, which excite public opinion and cause immense harm to our country, and also by forming political groups described under bombastic names of leagues, clubs and fraternities, which might be avoided by the American Government and would also prevent the purchase of war material by the enemies of our Government which they openly are carrying on in many parts of the United States.

The system that has been established on the border, as well as in many points in the interior of the country, referring to the sale of arms and ammunition is the following: Every commercial house in this class of merchandise must supply a duplicate invoice of the sale to the agents of the Department of Justice, as has been shown to me by a few of them, but as many of the houses engaged in this trade are enemies of our Government, I have discovered that they only send to the agents whatever suits their convenience, making a great many clandestine sales to the followers of Villa without making any mention of them to the agents of the Department of Justice, these goods afterwards being smuggled into Mexican territory, evading in the majority of cases the vigilance of the American officials. To substantiate the above, I will mention a concrete case, to wit: During the last month of August the hardware store of a Mr. Henry Mohr, situated No. 309, in South Eagle Pass Street, was selling large quantities of ammunition to Villa and in one of the sales was reported to the Department of Justice. This ammunition was taken from the store of Mr. Mohr to his residence in small amounts, and as a witness of this maneuvering I can name Benito Rodriguez, a clerk of the above-mentioned store and a follower of ours who informed me quietly of the above. The person who carried this ammunition is Jose Loya, a brother of a Villista captain, who is now in Chihuahua. Also the ex-Villista Colonel Davila and Sabino and David Guadarrama are constantly purchasing ammunition without any notice of this having been given to the Department of Justice, and all this is due to the fact that the number of agents of the American Government is very limited, as I can assure you that vigilance in the United States is limited to the Department of Justice, no participation in this work being taken by the civilian authorities, who in many cases appear to be friendly to the reactionaries and as a proof of this I will cite the following cases: At Tucson, Arizona, there is a paper called El Combate, published by the well-known reactionary General Santiago Riveros and a Dr. Servin, who are also the leaders of revolutionary meetings in that place and who recently have been accused of securing 200 saddles in the house of Leonardo Gamez and 200 horses through the assistance of a man named Serrano, and at the same time it is known they are organizing at Zaporit and a mining camp in the State of Arizona named Washington, and notwithstanding their activities these men enjoy all kinds of consideration because they are propagandists among the Mexican element of the candidates for Governor and sheriff and have the support of the authorities. Similar occurrences happen in El Paso, Texas, whose Mayor, Mr. Tom Lee, was a defender of Huerta and is a decided partisan of the old régime and is at the present time very much dissatisfied because the Alderetes, American citizens of much political influence in all that region, were not able to secure the concession for gambling in Ciudad Juarez, and we have, therefore, in Mayor Lee a terrible enemy. The very same thing happens in San Diego, California, where the official interpreter of the county sheriff is a decided Felicista and took active participation in the coup d'état of Huerta, and like the above named there are many others I could mention.

I hope therefore that the Department under your worthy charge may take some action so that the American Government may be requested to increase its vigilance on the border.

It is my candid opinion that the withdrawal of the American troops from Chihuahua would produce satisfactory results and would place the responsibility for restoring order in Mexico on the de facto Government where it belongs. If de facto Government fails its weakness will soon be demonstrated and all the world will understand. Our troops should all be kept near the international border and in my opinion no more state troops should now be mustered out as they are needed here and probably there may be greater need a little later on.

EAGLE PASS, January 12, 1917, 11 a. m.

A messenger arriving Eagle Pass yesterday from Torreon sent to border by Consul O'Hea gives following confidential report:

Villistas personally commanded by Villa, healthy and strong, entered Torreon December 24 after Government forces in demoralized condition evacuated city unknowingly leaving five hundred Yaqui Indians there who turned in favor Villistas joining their column. Sixty Chinese, five Arabs and approximately eighty Carranza sympathizers were murdered, the bodies left like carrion in street, and had not been buried on 8th when messenger left. All printing establishments were destroyed, several dwellings, stores looted, hundred thousand dollars loan levied, one hundred fifty cars merchandise loaded on trains and carried north which bandits abandoned near Jiminez on account lack of coal. Villistas left Torreon on December 29 marching northward after which Government forces under General Maycotte entered city. Villistas strength estimated after being joined by bands operating around Torreon at four thousand men. Stirring speeches were made by Villa at Casino in Torreon saying next move would be defeat of General Murguia then drive Pershing from Mexican soil. Torreon in worse condition than ever before. Messenger expresses doubt that Government commander has inflicted severe defeat on bandits as reported.

The Secretary of War presents his compliments to the Honorable the Secretary of State, and has the honor to inclose, herewith, for his information, copy of a letter from the commanding general, Southern Department, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, dated January 10, 1917, quoting a report made by the Department intelligence officer, relative to the present status and activities in the plan of San Diego.

NEWTON D. BAKER

[Inclosure]

The Chief of Staff, Southern Department, to the Adjutant General of the Army

HEADQUARTERS, SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT,
Fort Sam Houston, Texas, January 10, 1917.

PLAN OF SAN DIEGO

The following report is made by the Department intelligence officer, having been obtained by his secret service branch:

An agent of ours spent from December 8 to 31 in Mexico investigating, among other things, the present status and activity under the plan of San Diego. He reports in substance as follows:

I learned nothing concerning this movement until December 11 in Monterrey where I found that de la Rosa is no longer confined in the general barracks where he remained for so long a time. I then went to Villaldama, and while there, on the 12th, I learned that Garza and Ramos had been there and had gone on to Lampazos on mining business. On the 14th I managed to join Basilio Ramos on the train and traveled with him to Monterrey. He told me that the revolutionary movement, in his opinion, is about to end as everyone is disappointed, and the men could no longer be held together because the leaders were without funds. At Monterrey I learned that Ramos was going to Saltillo and decided that I would have some business there too, and so left Monterrey on the 15th with Ramos. On the 16th Ramos stated that he had a commission from Garza to see the Governor of the State, Gustavo Espinosa Mireles, who had promised to help the revolution with funds. After his interview Ramos stated that he could get nothing at all from the Governor. We then returned on the 17th to Monterrey, where Ramos stated that, being unable to do anything else, he was going to Laredo to see his family.

On the 22d I returned to Monterrey from my other investigations around Victoria, upon which I have already reported, and on the following day, the 23d, I went to see Joaquin Sado, former secretary to de la Rosa, and he told me that General Ricaut had de la Rosa in the barracks near the station because there had been some trouble between the general and de la Rosa, and that the latter had made the offer to the First Chief to drop the revolutionary plan entirely and turn everything over to the Carrancistas if they would release him from confinement. So far as I have been able to learn, no attention has been paid by Carranza to this offer.

On the 28th I learned that Fierros had been in Mexico City for some time; that he had written that he would return shortly with funds with which to start active operations again. I also learned, however, that none of the followers believed this. On the 29th I talked to some of Garza's officers, and some of the other leaders in the movement, and they were all much disappointed.

My conclusion is that, for some months at least, nothing need be feared from this movement as it is dying from lack of funds. My opinion is that those who found it to their interest to keep the matter going some months ago, now find that conditions have changed, and they knowing that their positions in office are not assured, are not handing out funds for movements like this, but are retaining them for their future personal use.

On the 30th, in Matamoras, I spoke to several of Pizano's men and they told me that the revolution had completely fallen through; that for a long time they had been held together merely by promises, and as in course of time they became certain that there would be no more funds the majority of them had gone their several ways and resumed their former occupations.

I feel absolutely certain that this movement, for the time being, has ceased to exist, and that it cannot be revived unless funds be furnished, and there seems to be no intention on the part of anyone to furnish such funds.

Those buildings at Palomas that are occupied by our troops are the property of the Palomas Land and Cattle Company, who gave authority for their occupancy by us. Our troops are not occupying all the buildings there but they are all claimed by the Palomas Land and Cattle Company.

These buildings are the most ordinary cheap grade of adobe shacks, used by the owners of the ranch as shelter for their employees. It is understood that the Mexican Government at one time occupied one of the buildings as a telegraph office and, at various times, have quartered small detachments of troops in some of the other buildings, but it is my understanding and my firm belief that the Mexican Government has no title to any of them.

It is evident Government troops are trying to capture and surround Villa, the several thousand Government troops moving in a westerly direction from Torreon in accordance with troops from south. Among these troops are numbers being sent by General Murguia from north. It is probable under pressure of pursuit Villa has already moved in a westerly direction toward the Sierras, where of course it is difficult to catch him. The overwhelming forces certainly will be able to eliminate, if not annihilate, rebel forces, and he probably has got away with not more than a few hundred men and all news states he has broken his forces up into guerrilla bands.

Other information brought to border to-day states five troop trains passed through Saltillo 6th and also 2,000 men under General Dieguez have left railroad south of Torreon cutting across country hoping to intercept Villa before he gets into Sierras. Pursuit of Villa seems well organized and complete dissolution of his bands probable. Authorities express hopes announcing his capture if Dieguez can only reach border of Sierras ahead of him.

No. 14

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Mexico City, March 13, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I presented my letters of credence to Mr. Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, charged with the executive power of the Union, at Guadalajara, Jalisco, on the 3d instant.

On the evening of the 28th of February, I received a message by telephone from General Aguilar, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, informing me that he and Mr. Arredondo were about to leave for Guadalajara to confer with the First Chief and stating that he was commissioned by the latter to invite me to accompany him. I accepted and we left within the hour. We arrived without incident at Guadalajara the following evening at 8 o'clock and were met at the station by General Manuel M. Dieguez, Governor of the State of Jalisco; General Benjamin Hill, commanding the garrison of Mexico City; Manuel Amaya, Chief of the Protocol of the Foreign Office; and others.

At noon of the 3d, I was escorted to the palace by a troop of cavalry, accompanied by the Chief of the Protocol, Mr. Amaya, and General Davilla, Governor of Guanajuato. On account of my hurried departure none of the official staff of the Embassy accompanied me on my visit to Guadalajara.

The usual ceremony was observed. The Star Spangled Banner was played and arms presented by the guard on my arrival at the palace. At the head of the stairs I was met by General Amado Aguirre and conducted to the reception room, where Mr. Carranza and certain members of his cabinet awaited me standing. I advanced and read the following speech:

Mr. First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, charged with the executive power of the Nation.

The President has committed to my charge the interests of the United States near the de facto Government of Mexico. I have accepted this honor with genuine pleasure. In the conduct of my mission I shall endeavor faithfully to interpret the sincere and earnest desire of the Government and people of the United States to cultivate the closest and most friendly relations with the Government and people of Mexico.

The courteous reception and many kind attentions I have received since my arrival on Mexican soil speak eloquently of the friendly spirit which animates the officials of Your Excellency's Government, and I enter upon my duties with the most delightful impressions of Mexico and the most pleasant anticipations.

The President has charged me to convey to Your Excellency his friendly greetings and best wishes to your personal happiness and the success of the Government of which you have the honor to be the head.

I beg to present, Sir, my formal letter of credence as Ambassador of the United States, to which Mr. Carranza read the following reply:

Mr. Ambassador: I experience a pleasant feeling of satisfaction in receiving from your hands the formal credentials by which the President of the United States of America accredits you as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of that great Nation before the Government of the United Mexican States which I have the honor to represent.

I am glad to have heard from your lips that you accept with real pleasure such a well deserved honor and that in the discharge of your delicate functions you will endeavor faithfully to interpret the sincere and ardent desire of the Government and people of the United States of America to cultivate the closest and most friendly relations with the Government and people of my country.

You may rest assured, Mr. Ambassador, that Mexico will reciprocate this friendly feeling, and that her Government will afford you all facilities to the end that you may carry out your program of improving the relations for the good of the interests of both nations.

The courtesies which you have received since you arrived on Mexican soil, and for which you express your gratitude, are no more than the demonstrations of our good will to initiate, upon a basis of the greatest cordiality, the new policy of mutual respect and consideration which must exist between two peoples whose propinquity and community of interests demand of them a perfect and reciprocal understanding for their best development. These marks of courtesy, moreover, have been a well deserved homage to your personality, of which we were already well informed.

I beg of you, Mr. Ambassador, to transmit to the President of the United States of America my most cordial greetings, in response to those which he sends through you to me, and my best wishes for his personal happiness, and, as well, that you will accept the expression of my desire that your stay in my country may be pleasant.

I then sat down and conversed a few moments with the First Chief, after which General Aguilar presented me to Mr. Bonillas, Minister of Communications, recently appointed Ambassador to Washington; Mr. Roque Estrada, Acting Minister of Justice; and General Hill; and General Dieguez. I then retired and the ceremony was concluded.

I had expected to return immediately to the Capital but a small band of so-called bandits burned a wooden railway bridge near La Piedad station and I was forced to remain in Guadalajara until it could be repaired.

On the 5th of March, the First Chief invited me to accompany him on the presidential train to Lake Chapala, some thirty-five miles east of Guadalajara. Here a fiesta was given in his honor, a number of the prominent families of the city accompanying him. On the journey I had a long talk with Mr. Carranza on the whole subject of United States-Mexican relations. General Aguilar was present at the interview. The particular subjects discussed will form the subjects of separate despatches. The interview was most cordial, and both Mr. Carranza and General Aguilar promised to do everything possible to facilitate the work of my mission and to bring about a sympathetic and friendly understanding between the two Governments.

I remained at Lake Chapala until the 8th, when General Aguilar telegraphed that the line was again open and invited me in Mr. Carranza's name to accompany him as far as Irapuato on my return journey to Mexico City. This invitation I accepted gladly and had another opportunity to converse with Mr. Carranza easily and informally. The First Chief traveled in state, in the presidential train, accompanied by his staff and guests. An escort of one thousand troops accompanied us, also a repair train. There were in all six special trains. Long stops were made at the various stations where large holiday crowds turned out to welcome the First Chief and the usual speeches were made. It was exceedingly interesting and picturesque.

In company with the Minister for Foreign Affairs I left the First Chief at 11 o'clock at a small station along the line and proceeded in another special train to Mexico City where I arrived at six in the evening on the 9th.

Details of the ceremonies will be found amongst the newspaper clippings forwarded in this pouch.

Ambassador Fletcher to the Secretary of State

No. 16

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Mexico City, March 13, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that elections for President of the Republic, and for Deputies and Senators of the National Congress, were held Sunday, March 11. The preliminary arrangements for these elections, as well as the procedure on election day, were in accordance with the electoral law, decreed by General Carranza under authority granted him in the recently adopted Constitution.

The following general summary of the procedure already followed, and yet to be followed, in the complete inauguration of the new Constitutionalist Government is given you in advance of the translation of the electoral law which I expect to forward to the Department in the near future.

The vote is based on the census of 1910 (one Deputy for each 60,000 inhabitants) and on the territorial division of 1912. The registration of voters was that made last October for the election of Deputies to the Constitutional Congress, revised and brought up to date by a board of three registrars for each municipality, and publicly posted February 20. Four days were then allowed for additions, changes and protests, and the final corrected lists were posted March 4.

Separate ballots for President, Deputy and Senator were printed by each municipality and distributed to the voters before the evening of the day preceding the election, the hour of delivery being recorded, and the voter's receipt being taken, if he knew how to write.

In each district the superintendent of election, his alternate and the three registrars met at 8 a. m., and if nine voters had not presented themselves at that hour, the police were called upon to produce sufficient voters to make up that number, and they elected a board of five to act as judges of election. The polls were formally opened at 9 a. m. and closed at 3 p. m. If the voter could write he prepared his own ballot by writing in the name of the candidate voted for and signing the ballot with his own name. If he could not write, this was to be done for him at the polling place (according to the law) the voter being accompanied by a witness and announcing the names of the candidates for whom he wished to vote.

The stationing of troops near the polling place was forbidden, and soldiers were required to vote individually and unarmed. The influencing of voters by judges, as well as by any one near the polling place, was prohibited. Each political party, as well as each candidate, was allowed one representative at the polling place with the right to protest for causes specified in the law.

The electoral law prescribes in minute detail the manner in which the vote shall be counted, and provides many safeguards against fraud. This official count will be made in each electoral district March 15, and sent to the Secretary of the Congress of Deputies, except that the returns for Senators will be sent to the State election board for final count which will be forwarded to the Secretary of the Senate.

Senators and Deputies-elect will meet in this city April 2 and appoint credentials committees—that of the House consisting of fifteen members divided into groups of three each, and that of the Senate consisting of six members divided into two groups of three each. Each chamber will appoint an additional committee of three members each to report on the credentials of the members of the other committees. These committees will make their reports April 8, and the members declared elected will take the oath of office April 14 and organize preparatory to the opening of the extra sessions of Congress April 15 at 5 p. m.

The first duty of the Congress is to act as an electoral college and appoint a committee of thirty-one members to make the official count of the vote for President of the Republic. This committee will make its report April 26 to the Congress, which will declare the successful candidate for President of the Republic for the period December 1, 1916, to November 30, 1920, and notify him to appear before Congress at 5 p. m. May 1 to take the oath of office.

The preelection campaign brought many candidates into the field, especially for the position of Deputy, and considerable interest was aroused throughout the Republic, although it probably was due more to the work of individual candidates than to organized party effort.

My personal observations in this city and the reports of the press indicate that the election was held without incident of any special importance.

Although the claim made by the press of this city that a million and a half votes were cast for President of the Republic probably is an exaggeration, still the number is likely to exceed greatly the total of any other election held in the country since its independence.

It is generally considered by the well posted friends of the First Chief that he will be in control of both Houses of Congress, at least at the beginning of his administration, and I am told confidentially that special care has been taken to elect to the Senate high officers of the Constitutionalist army, and others closely identified with the President-elect.

Report on the proceedings of the Commission

SIR: I beg to submit herewith a report on the proceedings of the American and Mexican Joint Commission, including certain documents hereinafter enumerated.

The Commission first assembled at the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, on Monday, September 4, 1916, in response to an invitation of the Secretary of State. The luncheon tendered to the Commissioners by the Secretary of State was the occasion of a series of brief addresses in which the Secretary of State, the Honorable Robert Lansing; the Confidential Agent of the Constitutionalist Government, the Honorable Eliseo Arredondo; the Chairman of the American Commission, the Honorable Franklin K. Lane, and the Chairman of the Mexican Commission, the Honorable Luis Cabrera, outlined in general terms the international significance of the work of the Commission. (For text of these addresses see Appendix A.)²

On Tuesday, September 5, the Commission proceeded to New London, Connecticut, and on the morning of Wednesday, September 6, the first formal session was held at the Hotel Griswold. The mass of documentary evidence submitted to the Commission by the State Department clearly indicated the close relation existing between the border situation and the disturbed domestic conditions in Mexico, and as the discussions proceeded it became increasingly evident that no solution satisfactory to the American people could be reached unless the international aspects of some of Mexico's internal problems, such as the protection of life and property of foreigners resident in Mexico, were fully considered by the Commission.

The American Commissioners, realizing the difficulties of the position of their Mexican colleagues, approached the whole situation in a sincere spirit of helpful cooperation, assuring the Mexican Commissioners that it was the desire of the ²Not printed.

Government and people of the United States to be helpful to Mexico, and that through such helpfulness, the interests both of Mexico and the United States would best be subserved.

At an early stage in the deliberations, the Mexican delegates informed the American Commissioners that their instructions required them first to consider and reach an agreement on the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil and the safeguarding of the border before proceeding to the consideration of any other questions. Further discussion brought out the fact that the instructions which they had received required them not only to reach an agreement on the withdrawal of troops before proceeding to the consideration of any other questions, but that the withdrawal must be an accomplished fact before any of the larger questions involved in the relations between the United States and Mexico could be discussed. The American Commissioners endeavored to make clear to their Mexican colleagues that the position thus taken was out of harmony with the intent of the two Governments as expressed in the notes exchanged prior to the appointment of the Commission and with the credentials of the Mexican Commissioners, submitted at the first session of the Commission. (See Appendix B.) They immediately urged upon the Mexican Commissioners the importance of securing additional instructions of a more liberal nature and in closer harmony with the purposes for which the Commission was created.

The early deliberations of the Commission took a wide range, owing to the desire of the American Commissioners to have presented to them a complete picture of domestic conditions in Mexico. The American Commissioners proceeded on the assumption that the border incursions were merely a symptom of the abnormal conditions prevailing in Mexico, and that, therefore, in order to deal with the situation with any degree of thoroughness it was necessary to ascertain the basic causes of the trouble. The Mexican Commissioners continued to urge the immediate withdrawal of American troops on the ground that the presence of these troops aroused considerable feeling in the Mexican people, and that it was necessary, in order to allay this feeling, to maintain large bodies of Mexican troops in a position watchful of American military movements. The withdrawal would, in the view of the Mexican Commissioners, free a considerable body of troops for the much needed service of pursuing and capturing raiding bands.

The discussion of withdrawal naturally led to a consideration of the question of border patrol, and during this discussion the American Commissioners impressed upon the Mexican Commissioners that to the people of the United States the question of the protection afforded to the lives and property of Americans resident in Mexico was quite as important as the safeguarding of the border.

Much of the time during the first three weeks in September was devoted to an explanation by the Mexican Commissioners of the purposes of the Carranza Government. They explained in detail the gradual extension of civil government, the attempted reorganization of taxation, and the future plans of the de facto Government.

While these matters were under consideration, word was received that Villa had captured Chihuahua City. This proved to be the first of a series of incidents which disturbed the proceedings of the Commission. The ease with which Chihuahua was taken, the impotence of the Constitutionalist forces and the manifest incompetence of the military leaders in Chihuahua removed all assurance that the de facto Government would be able to fulfill any promises with reference to the safeguarding of the international boundary. The American Commissioners were, therefore, placed in the embarrassing position of treating with the representatives of a government whose ability to fulfill any obligations that might be inserted in an agreement with reference to the safeguarding of the international boundary, had been placed in serious doubt.

It became increasingly evident, as time proceeded, that the Mexican Commissioners were bound by secret instructions which would prevent the consideration of any questions until an agreement had been reached with reference to the withdrawal of troops and the safeguarding of the international boundary. In view of this fact, the American Commissioners decided that it would be important to submit a program of work which would clarify the situation and would secure from the de facto Government a clear statement of its position. With this end in view, the American Commissioners drafted a formal communication which was submitted to the Mexican delegates on September 22. This communication reads as follows:

SEPTEMBER 22, 1916.

To The Honorable Luis Cabrera, The Honorable Ygnacio Bonillas, The Honorable Alberto J. Pani,

GENTLEMEN: Would this be a satisfactory program for the Joint Commission: That while the military details of a plan of border control formulated by us are under consideration at Washington, we pass to the consideration of three questions:

1. Protection to life and property of foreigners in Mexico.
2. Establishment of a claims commission.
3. Religious tolerance.

It being understood between us that our effort shall be to reach a tentative understanding upon these questions which the American Commissioners regard as of certainly no less importance than that of border control, and it being further understood that the border control matter shall not be made dependent in any way upon our agreement upon these above-mentioned questions.

[We beg [etc.]]

FRANKLIN K. LANE
GEORGE GRAY
JOHN R. MOTT

The Mexican Commissioners immediately transmitted this communication to Mexico City, and during the two weeks that followed constant inquiries were made as to whether a reply had been received. Owing to the closing of the Hotel Griswold at New London, it was necessary for the Commission to transfer its sessions to Atlantic City. An adjournment was taken on September 27, the Commission reassembling at the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, on October 1.

On October 6, the Mexican Commissioners informed their American colleagues that a reply had been received from Mexico City, but the precise content thereof was not disclosed. They informed the American Commissioners, however, that a formal communication had been drafted based on the instructions received. This was dated October 6, and reads as follows:

ATLANTIC CITY, October 6, 1916.

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: In answer to your communication, under date of September 22 last, and referring to the matters discussed at the session of yesterday, the Mexican delegates beg to say that after having carefully consulted both the text and the spirit of their credentials, they have come to the conclusion that, in view of the tenor of their instructions, and convinced that they faithfully interpret the feeling of the Mexican people, believe that the following is the program to which the deliberations should conform:

PROGRAM OF WORK

First. Withdrawal of American forces from Mexican territory.

Second. Safeguarding and patrolling of the border.

Third. Agreement in regard to the pursuit of outlaws at the border.

If happily we should reach a solution satisfactory to both Governments in regard to the questions presented above, the Mexican Commissioners will then be ready to deal with such other questions as the American delegates may wish to submit, provided such questions are of an international character and contribute to establish the most frank cordiality in the relations between the two countries.

While the American Forces remain on Mexican territory the Mexican delegates consider it their duty not to take up any subject other than those immediately connected with the border situation.

It is understood that the conclusions that may be reached in the discussion concerning points one, two and three of the program shall not be made dependent in any way upon the results of the discussion concerning the other questions submitted.

Reports received from official and unofficial sources during the early portion of October indicated that conditions were steadily growing worse, not only in northern Mexico but also in many sections of the central and southern portions of the Republic. Some of the despatches received by the American Commissioners were submitted to their Mexican colleagues, but to all the facts presented, the Mexican Commissioners made reply that no marked improvement of conditions could be expected until the complete withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil. They constantly emphasized the fact that the presence of these troops was undermining the Carranza Government and that not until they were withdrawn could the United States Government expect the de facto Government of Mexico to secure complete control of the situation. On October 25 the Mexican Commissioners presented a proposal which was intended to secure the cooperation of American and Mexican forces in assuring the safety of the northern portion of Chihuahua. This proposal reads as follows:

COMISION UNIDA MEXICANA-AMERICANA,
Atlantic City, October 25th, 1916.

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, in accordance with opinions interchanged at our last session, and the two previous, have the honor to submit to your consideration the following suggestions:

First. Whereas, the expedition styled punitive, against the Columbus raiders has actually destroyed the band of outlaws, exterminating them all, or most of them, as may be seen from the corresponding official American despatches;

Second. Whereas, this was the sole object of the said expedition, according to explicit declaration of President Wilson, the American Senate's ratification, and instructions to General Funston;

Third. Whereas, the invasion and permanence of the American forces in Mexican territory has provoked and fostered the organization of new bands of outlaws and rebels, and their union, due to the exaltation of popular sentiment against foreign invasion, and is transforming the bandit who led the Columbus raid into the hero who is defending the national honor;

Fourth. Whereas, the American forces, without the consent of the Mexican Government, could not continue the pursuit of the new bands of outlaws without occasioning greater injuries than those caused by the outlaws themselves;

Fifth. Whereas, consequently the American forces in Chihuahua State find themselves restricted to police the rural districts within the zone that they actually occupy, and to protect the corresponding extension of the border, and Sixth. Whereas, finally the stay of the American forces in the State of Chihuahua, without the consent of the Mexican Government constitutes a flagrant violation of the sovereignty of a friendly nation, and an unjustified offense to its people.

We trust that the Honorable American Commissioners, animated with a spirit of justice, and resolved to build on a sound foundation real cordiality in future relations between the great Republic of the North, and Mexico and the other Nations of Latin America, will agree to recommend to their Government the withdrawal of the American forces from Mexican territory, in the manner to be agreed upon by the respective military commanders of both Nations, in order to fulfill the two following requirements:

A. That during the withdrawal of the American forces, through the cooperation of the forces of both Nations, the present conditions of safety may subsist in the zone occupied by the American forces in Chihuahua State, and along the corresponding extension of the border.

B. That the complete evacuation of the American forces will have been terminated on or before December 31, 1916.

Awaiting your kind reply and the suggestions which it may please you to make regarding the manner, date, and conditions of withdrawal of forces,

We beg [etc.]

LUIS CABRERA
YGNACIO BONILLAS
ALBERTO J. PANI

This plan was not acceptable to the American Commissioners for several reasons, mainly because of the conviction that no effective plan of cooperation between the armed forces of the two countries could be arranged.

Furthermore, the American Commissioners were anxious to secure from their Mexican colleagues an assurance that the larger and more important questions would receive consideration as soon as the question of withdrawal and border control had been disposed of.

It was at this time that the American Commissioners reached the conclusion that it would be well to place before their Mexican colleagues a complete, constructive program involving not only the adjustment of the immediate questions pending between the United States and Mexico, but the establishment of helpful cooperation between the two peoples in the solution of some of Mexico's most serious problems. This program was submitted to the Mexican Commissioners on October 27, and reads as follows:

HOTEL TRAYMORE,
Atlantic City, October 27, 1916.

To The Honorable Luis Cabrera, The Honorable Ygnacio Bonillas, The Honorable Alberto J. Pani,

GENTLEMEN: We beg to submit, for your consideration, the following outline of agreement, the adoption of which will, we sincerely believe, accomplish the purposes for which this Commission was created:

The Mexican Commissioners have constantly emphasized the importance of arriving at some definite and concrete results with reference to the withdrawal of American troops and the question of border control. The American Commissioners are sincerely desirous of meeting the wishes of their Mexican colleagues with reference to an early agreement on these two questions, as well as of arriving at satisfactory conclusions on other matters of common concern. They, therefore, propose that an immediate agreement be reached by this Commission with reference to withdrawal of troops and border control, and that pending the ratification of such agreement by the respective Governments, the Mexican Government give formal assurance that it will agree, in principle, to the other proposals contained in this memorandum, and which are to be considered an integral part of the agreement, it being understood, however, that no public announcement of any kind whatsoever shall be made either by this Commission or by any member thereof, or by either of the Governments, until the plan of withdrawal of troops and border control has been ratified by the two Governments, nor until the Mexican Government shall have given the above assurance, and which shall be announced along with the plan of withdrawal.

I

THE PROPOSAL WITH REFERENCE TO WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS AND GUARDING THE BORDER

1. Withdrawal of Troops. The United States agrees to withdraw the American troops from Mexican soil in accordance with the following plan:

(a) Within thirty days after the ratification of this agreement the American forces shall be withdrawn northward as far as Colonia Dublan, provided that within said thirty days no raid within seventy-five miles of the present position at El Valle has taken place.

(b) At the end of a further period of sixty days, or earlier if the Government of the United States deems it advisable, the American troops shall be completely withdrawn from Mexican soil either by marching to Columbus, New Mexico, or via the Mexico Northwestern Railway to El Paso, Texas, or by both methods, as the Government of the United States may elect.

2. Guarding the Border. Each of the Governments parties to this agreement shall guard its side of the boundary line without any zone of pursuit, thereby making each Government responsible for lawless acts committed along the border by persons coming from its own territory into the territory of the other.

II

THE ADDITIONAL PROPOSALS SUBMITTED HEREWITH TO THE MEXICAN COMMISSIONERS, AND FORMING PART OF THIS AGREEMENT, ARE AS FOLLOWS:

1. Enforcement of neutrality laws. The United States will use every means at its disposal to prevent within its jurisdiction, conspiracies against the de facto Government, or against established order in Mexico.

2. Protection of life and property of foreigners. The Government of Mexico solemnly agrees to afford full and adequate protection to the lives and property of citizens of the United States and other foreigners, and this protection shall be adequate to enable such citizens of the United States or other foreigners to resume the operation of mines or other industries in which they may be interested. The United States reserves the right to reenter Mexico and to afford such protection by its own military forces, in the event of the Mexican Government failing to do so. In case Americans are killed in the United States by marauders, the United States reserves the right to pursue such marauders until they are captured.

The United States Government agrees to use every means at its disposal to assure adequate protection to Mexican citizens resident on American territory.

3. Recognition of property rights. That all property rights heretofore acquired by citizens of the United States or other foreigners, in accordance with the established constitutional laws of the Mexican Republic, shall be regarded valid. Should any question arise with reference to the validity of such property rights, the Mexican Government agrees that the determination of such rights shall be had through due process of law and adjudication by the regularly constituted tribunals of the country.

4. Claims Commission. The Mexican Government agrees in principle to the establishment of a Mixed Claims Commission, which shall give proper consideration to all claims of citizens of the United States and other foreigners arising out of injury to person or property subsequent to November 20, 1910. A subsequent protocol will determine the constitution of this Commission, the terms of submission, and the rules which shall govern the tribunal.

5. Religious tolerance. The Mexican Government agrees to give effect to the constitutional provision relating to freedom of conscience in a broad spirit of religious tolerance.

6. Elimination of disease and relief of distress and of starvation. The Mexican Government agrees to afford every facility to such agencies in the United States as may wish to combat disease and to relieve the distress and starvation now prevailing in many sections of the Republic.

We beg [etc.]

FRANKLIN K. LANE
GEORGE GRAY
JOHN R. MOTT

The portion of this program, reserving the right on the part of the United States to reenter Mexico in case the de facto Government failed adequately to protect the lives and property of foreigners, elicited an immediate response on the part of the Mexican Commissioners reading as follows:

OCTOBER 27, 1916.

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: Referring to your communication dated October 26, which was submitted to us at the session of this morning, and which we have read with most careful attention, we beg to say that we deem it our duty not to allow a moment to pass by without informing you of our complete dissent from the proposition that the Government of Mexico could agree that the United States should reserve the right to enter our country in order to give protection, by means of its own armed forces, to the life and property of its nationals.

We do not believe that any nation which considers itself sovereign could consent to a stipulation of this nature. So far as we are concerned, not only are we unable to admit such a proposition, but we consider it necessary to affirm in writing that we cannot even listen to such a proposal.

The purpose of our coming to the United States is precisely to secure the withdrawal of American troops which are on Mexican soil without the consent of our Government, and in violation of the sovereignty of our country. There has been nothing in our attitude, in discussing the affairs of Mexico, which could give rise to the impression in the Honorable, the American Commissioners, that we were disposed to receive a proposal that implied the abandonment of the sovereignty of our country.

We are, furthermore, surprised to find that in your letter dated October 25, you place an agreement on the points contained in Chapter 2 of the memorandum as a condition to the withdrawal of the American forces. This condition we find in contradiction with the terms of your memorandum of September 22, in which you indicate clearly that the withdrawal of troops would not depend on the discussion of the other questions.

All the other portions of your letter will be given our most careful consideration, and will be made the subject of a reply at the next session. The present letter is, therefore, to be considered simply as the expression of our complete dissent from the points above mentioned.

We beg [etc.]

LUIS CABRERA
YGNACIO BONILLAS
ALBERTO J. PANI

The days immediately succeeding the presentation of the proposal of October 27 were devoted to an attempt on the part of the American Commissioners to ascertain whether it would be possible to reach an agreement with reference to withdrawal of troops and border control, which would at the same time be consistent with the safety of the southern border of the United States. During these days the Mexican Commissioners constantly referred to the fact that they were convinced that as soon as they were in a position to tell Mr. Carranza that definite and concrete results had been obtained with reference to withdrawal of troops and border control, he would authorize them to proceed to the consideration of the other questions which the American Commissioners deemed of such vital importance.

On November 2, adjournment was taken until November 10. Immediately after reconvening, the Commission addressed itself to the consideration of several tentative plans relating to the safeguarding of the international boundary. On November 17 the Mexican Commissioners submitted a proposal covering three points:

1. The withdrawal of troops.
2. The safeguarding of the border.
3. The pursuit of marauders.

This proposal reads as follows:

ATLANTIC CITY, November 17, 1916.

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: The present status of our discussions makes it necessary in our opinion to define in writing the provisions of the proposed agreements which the Mexican Commissioners would be disposed to accept.

Withdrawal of troops. Regarding the withdrawal of troops, the Mexican Commissioners would deem acceptable the memorandum drawn up by Messrs. Mott and Pani, in the manner in which it was approved by all the Commissioners at the session of November 13:

Article I. The Government of the United States agrees to begin the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil as soon as practicable, such withdrawal to be completed not later than ——— (forty (40) days after the ratification of this agreement by both Governments).

Article II. General Pershing shall determine the manner in which the withdrawal shall be effected, so as to comport with the dignity of the United States as a friendly power, and so as to ensure the safety of the territory affected by the withdrawal.

Article III. It is understood that the territory evacuated by the American forces will be occupied and adequately protected by the Constitutionalist forces. The Mexican commander shall determine the plan for the occupation and protection of the territory evacuated by the American forces.

Article IV. The American and Mexican commanders shall deal separately, or wherever practicable in cooperation, with any obstacle which may arise tending to delay the withdrawal. In case there are any further activities of the forces inimical to the de facto government, which threaten the safety of the international border along the northern section of Chihuahua, the withdrawal of American forces shall not be delayed beyond the period strictly necessary to overcome such activities.

Article V. The withdrawal of American troops shall be effected by marching to Columbus, or by using the Mexican Northwestern Railroad to El Paso, or by both routes, as may be deemed most convenient or expedient by the American commander.

Safeguarding the border. With respect to the safeguarding of the border, the Mexican Commissioners would be disposed to accept, in substance, the suggestion made by Commissioner Lane, in his memorandum of October 10, in the final revision given thereto by Commissioner Gray, Articles I, IV, V, VI, VII and VIII:

Article I. For the protection of the border during the period when abnormal conditions exist, there shall be cooperation on the part of the military commanders of both countries, to whatever extent may be practicable.

Article IV. There shall be a full and mutual interchange of information between the military commanders on both sides to the end that such lawless incursions may be anticipated and defended against.

Article V. There shall be a mutual use of railroads on both sides of the border for the carriage of troops or supplies used in the defence of the border or in the pursuit of marauders.

Article VI. Mutual scouting shall be permitted within a distance of ten miles of the border, provided such privilege be given in writing by the respective commanders, but such scouting under no circumstances is to occur within ten miles of any fixed military camp, or within ten miles of any town having more than one hundred inhabitants.

Article VII. The United States will continue to employ such means, consistent with its laws, as will tend to prevent on the American side of the border, the organization of filibustering expeditions or any other hostile conspiracies against the Mexican Government.

Article VIII. This agreement shall remain in full force for a period of four months. If neither of the Governments parties to this agreement shall give notice to the other, ten days previous to its expiration, of its intention to terminate the same, it shall further remain in force until thirty days after either of the Governments shall have given notice to the other of such intention.

Pursuit of marauders. Regarding the pursuit of marauders, the Mexican Commissioners would accept the reciprocal border crossing, provided that it be adequately regulated in order that, without detracting from the efficiency of the pursuit, it may be compatible with the sovereignty of both countries.

In this regard, we would accept, in substance, the suggestions proposed by the Department of State under date of April 4:

Article I. It is agreed that the regular government forces of the two republics may reciprocally cross the part of the boundary line comprised between the Colorado River and Piedras Negras, and within a zone of sixty kilometers in either country counted from the said line, with the object of pursuing bands of armed men that may have entered from one country to the other, committed outrages in foreign territory and escaped across the boundary line.

Article II. The reciprocal crossing agreed to in Article I shall only take place in comparatively uninhabited or unprotected parts of the territory on either side of the boundary line, and in no case at a distance less than ten kilometers from any cantonment or city in the territory in which the pursuit is being conducted, unless the cantonment or city be situated in a mountainous district wherein communication is difficult.

Article III. The commander of the forces crossing the frontier under the terms of this agreement will, at the time of crossing the frontier, or before if possible, give notice of his proposed movement and of the number of troops in his command, to the nearest commanding officer of the civilian authorities of the country whose territory he is about to enter.

Article IV. The Government of the country in which the pursuit takes place will cooperate by every means with the pursuing force to the end that the lawless bands be speedily captured or exterminated.

Article V. The pursuing force will retire to its own territory as soon as it shall have overtaken and overcome within the zone the lawless bands being dealt with. In no case shall the pursuing force establish itself or remain on foreign territory for more than fifteen days, unless by special agreement between the two Governments.

Article VI. No pursuit shall be undertaken on the territory of the other country unless begun within three days after the flight of the lawless band across the boundary line.

Article VII. Under no pretext or consideration whatever shall the pursuing forces of either country occupy cities or cantonments situated in the country in which the pursuit is conducted, in accordance with the terms of this agreement. The Government of the pursuing forces shall defray the cost of subsistence of the troops and all other expenses connected with their entry on foreign territory.

Article VIII. All abuses committed by the pursuing forces shall be punished by the government to which they belong, according to the gravity of the offense. The persons directly responsible for such abuses shall be withdrawn from the frontier and indemnities shall be promptly given to all those who may have suffered injury.

Article IX. Should the inhabitants of one country commit outrages on the foreign pursuing forces, the government of the country where the outrages were committed will be responsible to the government of the other country only in case of denial of justice and refusal to punish the guilty persons.

Article X. This agreement will go into effect upon the date of signature, and will remain in force until one of the parties shall give the other in advance two months' written notice of its intention to terminate the agreement.

In Testimony Whereof, we have signed this agreement, this _____ day of _____ nineteen sixteen, etc.

If the agreement regarding the reciprocal border crossing is not possible, the Mexican Commissioners believe that the agreements respecting the withdrawal of troops and cooperation to safeguard the border should remain unaffected; but if the American Commissioners believe that not even this last agreement can be maintained, then the Mexican Commissioners would accept the agreement for the withdrawal of troops upon the basis of leaving to each country the care of its own border, in conformity with the principles of international law.

With the assurance [etc.]

LUIS CABRERA
YGNACIO BONILLAS
ALBERTO J. PANT

In view of the fact that in spite of repeated attempts no definite assurance could be secured from the Mexican Commissioners that after an agreement had been reached with reference to the withdrawal of troops and border control, they would proceed to the other questions which the Government of the United States deemed of vital importance, the American Commissioners felt it important to hold a conference with the President as soon as possible in order to lay the situation before him. Pending this conference, it was deemed best to withdraw, for the time being, the definite proposals that had been under discussion. On Saturday evening, November 18, Secretary Lane held a conference with the President, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War, in Washington. On Monday, November 20, the American Commissioners met for the purpose of redrafting a plan for the withdrawal of troops and border control. At the session of Tuesday, November 21, Secretary Lane informed the Mexican Commissioners that he had held a prolonged conference with the President, and had presented to him a history of the negotiations of the Commission. In addition he presented to the President a mass of information, some of which was favorable to the de facto Government, but much of which indicated not only distressing conditions in Mexico, but the inability of the de facto Government to control the situation. Continuing, Secretary Lane said, in substance:

The desire of the President to see the de facto Government strengthened and placed in a position to restore order in Mexico has in no way diminished. In this respect the views of the members of the American Commission are entirely in harmony with those of the President, and it was probably for this reason that they were selected to fulfill this mission. With the President, we are anxious to see a Mexico strong, independent, sovereign, and completely fulfilling her domestic as well as her international obligations. The President's purpose and our purpose in coming into this conference was to draft with you a constructive program which would strengthen the Carranza Government, and would assist in the restoration of order and prosperity in Mexico. This was our hope and it is still our expectation.

I must inform you, in all solemnity, that the President's patience is at an end, and that he regards present conditions in Mexico as intolerable.

The plan of withdrawal of troops and border control which we are proposing to you this morning is but a step toward that larger constructive program which we confidently expect you to draw up in the same spirit of helpfulness and cooperation in which we approach these questions. Nothing short of this will satisfy either the Government or the people of the United States, and it is well for you to know this clearly and definitely at the present moment. We do not wish to do anything that will either hurt your pride or diminish your sovereignty. We have no designs on the integrity of your territory or your freedom of action in the determination of your national policy, but we are deeply and vitally interested in the fulfillment of your obligations to protect the lives and property of foreigners who have cast their lot with you, and in the satisfactory adjustment of every question which affects the cordial relations between the United States and your country. This can only be done through a policy characterized by frankness, cordiality, mutual trust and cooperation. If, however, you have reached the conclusion that you do not desire the cooperation of the United States, if you feel that you want to cut yourselves off completely, it is well for us to know this as soon as possible, as it will vitally affect our policy with reference to Mexico.

Mr. Cabrera here made the statement that it was evident from Secretary Lane's presentation that Mexico would have to follow the road indicated by the United States. To this Secretary Lane replied:

There is no desire on the part of the United States to dictate to Mexico the policy that she should pursue. We have assured you time and again that we desire to respect your sovereignty and independence, but it is evident that many of the problems confronting you cannot be satisfactorily solved unless you have the friendship and the cooperation of the United States. It is up to you three gentlemen to determine whether Mexico is to have the benefit of such cooperation, or whether she desires to pursue a policy of isolation. This latter policy can lead to but one result, namely the downfall of the Carranza Government, with all the consequences that will involve.

At this session the American Commissioners submitted a draft of Protocol of Agreement ad referendum, providing for the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican territory and the protection of the American-Mexican international boundary. It was evident from the discussions that the plan submitted would be acceptable to the Mexican Commissioners, and early in the afternoon a tentative agreement was reached.

At this session the American Commissioners informed the Mexican Commissioners that the plan as outlined covered two points, namely the withdrawal of troops and the safeguarding of the border, but that with reference to the pursuit of marauders the Government of the United States had formulated a policy, concerning the terms of which the American Commissioners were authorized to inform the Mexican Commissioners, and which they might transmit to their Government. This statement took the following form, and was inserted in the minutes of November 21, 1916:

It is essential, as a matter of governmental policy, that the United States reserve the right to deal with any serious hostile incursion from Mexico into American territory as may be deemed advisable at the time, including the right to pursue marauders into Mexican territory when such pursuit is necessary to our own protection. Duly mindful of the obligations imposed upon us by international law, such pursuit will not be intended, and should not be considered an act hostile to the Constitutionalist Government of Mexico.

To this statement of policy the Mexican Commissioners immediately took exception, on the ground that the principles thus formulated were not in harmony with the plan of border control as contained in the proposed agreement. At this session the American Commissioners also submitted to their Mexican colleagues a letter requesting the definite assurance of the de facto Government that upon the ratification of the Protocol of Agreement with reference to the withdrawal of troops and border control, the Mexican Commissioners would be authorized to proceed forthwith to the consideration of the other vital questions. At the session of November 22 this letter, at the request of the Mexican Commissioners, was slightly amended, and in its final form reads as follows:

NOVEMBER 22, 1916.

To The Honorable Luis Cabrera, The Honorable Ygnacio Bonillas, The Honorable Alberto J. Pani,

GENTLEMEN: Having arrived at an agreement as to the withdrawal of troops and border control, we desire, in accordance with instructions from the President of the United States, to request an assurance from the Citizen First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army entrusted with the Executive Power of the Mexican Nation that when the above-mentioned agreement is approved by both governments, you are authorized to meet at once and take up with the American Commissioners those questions deemed by the American Government of vital importance; such as protection of life and property of foreigners in Mexico, the establishment of an international claims commission, and such other questions as may be submitted by the American or Mexican Commissioners affecting the continuance and strengthening of the friendly relations between the two countries, with a view to arriving at definite conclusions, to be submitted to the two governments for their approval.

We understood from the examination of the notes exchanged between the Departments of State of the two countries that as soon as an agreement satisfactory to both countries with reference to withdrawal of troops and border control was reached, we should immediately pass to the consideration of the other questions deemed vital to the strengthening of cordial relations between the two countries. This view has not been accepted by all of the Mexican Commissioners. It is essential, therefore, for us to know whether the First Chief's interpretation of the authority of this Commission is such as to empower you to proceed, as soon as the agreement relating to the withdrawal of troops and border control is approved, to the consideration of the other questions which the American Commissioners deem of vital importance. It is, of course, understood, as we have repeatedly stated that the fulfilment of the terms of the agreement as to withdrawal of troops and border control shall not be made dependent in any way upon our agreement concerning the questions referred to in the body of this letter.

We beg [etc.]

FRANKLIN K. LANE
GEORGE GRAY
JOHN R. MOTT

Furthermore, at the session of November 22, the American Commissioners informed the Mexican Commissioners that they would submit the proposed Protocol of Agreement to their Government, for approval, when the assurance asked for in the above letter was given. At the session of Friday, November 24, the Protocol was signed by the American and Mexican Commissioners. (Copy of Protocol follows.)

Protocol of agreement ad referendum. Withdrawal of American troops from Mexican territory and protection of American-Mexican international boundary.

Memorandum of an Agreement signed this twenty-fourth day of November, one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, by Franklin K. Lane, George Gray, and John R. Mott, Special Commissioners of the President of the United States of America, and Luis Cabrera, Ygnacio Bonillas, and Alberto J. Pani, Special Commissioners of the Citizen First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army entrusted with the Executive Power of the Mexican Nation:

ARTICLE I

The Government of the United States agrees to begin the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil as soon as practicable, such withdrawal, subject to the further terms of this agreement, to be completed not later than ———; that is to say forty (40) days after the approval of this agreement by both Governments.

ARTICLE II

The American commander shall determine the manner in which the withdrawal shall be effected, so as to ensure the safety of the territory affected by the withdrawal.

ARTICLE III

The territory evacuated by the American troops shall be occupied and adequately protected by the Constitutionalist forces, and such evacuation shall take place when the Constitutionalist forces have taken position to the south of the American forces so as to make effective such occupation and protection. The Mexican commander shall determine the plan for the occupation and protection of the territory evacuated by the American forces.

ARTICLE IV

The American and Mexican commanders shall deal separately, or wherever practicable in friendly cooperation, with any obstacles which may arise tending to delay the withdrawal. In case there are any further activities of the forces inimical to the Constitutionalist Government which threaten the safety of the international border along the northern section of Chihuahua, the withdrawal of American forces shall not be delayed beyond the period strictly necessary to overcome such activities.

ARTICLE V

The withdrawal of American troops shall be effected by marching to Columbus, or by using the Mexican Northwestern Railroad to El Paso, or by both routes, as may be deemed most convenient or expedient by the American commander,

ARTICLE VI

Each of the Governments parties to this agreement shall guard its side of the international boundary. This, however, does not preclude such cooperation on the part of the military commanders of both countries, as may be practicable.

ARTICLE VII

This agreement shall take effect immediately upon approval by both Governments. Notification of approval shall be communicated by each Government to the other.

In testimony whereof, we have signed, sealed and interchanged reciprocally, this Protocol of Agreement, ad referendum, in the English and Spanish languages, at Atlantic City, New Jersey, this twenty-fourth day of November, in the Year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and sixteen.

At the time of signing it was understood by the American and Mexican Commissioners that the Protocol would not be submitted to the Government of the United States for approval until the American Commissioners had received the assurance asked for in their letter of November. It was, furthermore, decided that if the Protocol were approved by Mr. Carranza, and the further assurance were given that the Mexican Commissioners were authorized to proceed to the consideration of the other questions deemed of vital importance, the Commission would reassemble on Friday, December 8, 1916, at 10 o'clock, at such place as might be designated by the Secretary of State of the United States, after consultation with Mr. Arredondo. There was a further understanding that if Mr. Carranza's reply was unfavorable, there would be no necessity for further sessions of the Commission.

On December 8 word was received from the Mexican Commissioners that Mr. Pani was returning from Querétaro with the reply of the First Chief, but no indication was given with reference to the nature of this reply. It was evident from information received from the Secretary of the Mexican Commissioners that Mr. Pani was returning from Querétaro with a number of modifications proposed by the First Chief. On December 12 word was received from the Mexican Commissioners, requesting a preliminary conference in Philadelphia, and it was decided to hold this conference on Monday, December 18.

The Commission assembled at 10:45 a. m. at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. Mr. Pani presented verbally and informally an account of his conference with the First Chief. At the afternoon session the Mexican Commissioners submitted a formal communication embodying the views of the de facto Government with reference to the proposed Protocol of Agreement. This communication reads as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, December 18, 1916.

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: Reducing to writing the subjects which were treated verbally during our session of today, we have the honor of informing you that the Citizen First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army has not ratified the Protocol of Agreement submitted to his consideration, for the reasons which we briefly give herewith:

The First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army considers that, as the presence of the American troops on our soil constitutes a violation of the sovereignty of Mexico, the acceptance of any agreement for the withdrawal of troops subject to conditions which later might justify a postponement in the withdrawal of said troops, would be interpreted as a tacit agreement on the part of the Mexican Government with the present occupation.

The Mexican Government does not wish to place itself in such a position, that owing to unforeseen circumstances which might later occur, it should seem to sanction a posteriori the presence of American troops on Mexican soil.

From this point of view the Mexican Government would desire that the wording of the agreement should be sufficiently explicit, so as not to occasion future difficulties in its interpretation and execution. The Mexican Government was likewise unable to approve the agreement after having been notified of the declared purposes of the American Government, of reserving to itself the faculty of sending into Mexican territory future expeditions in pursuit of outlaws. Under such conditions, the Mexican Government either could not have signed the agreement, because it would have been tantamount to agreeing tacitly to the policy announced by the American Government, or, in case of signing such an agreement, it would have been compelled to protest against new intentions of violating our territory, and this would lead to an unstable and perilous situation for the preservation of peace between both countries, which is precisely what the Mexican Government has tried to avoid by proposing that these conferences be held.

The Citizen First Chief believes that, the mutual respect for the sovereignty of both countries being the only solid basis for the preservation of peace and good relations between Mexico and the United States, the solution of our difficulties must be sought in the cooperation for the protection and vigilance of the border, thus precluding and avoiding causes of friction, instead of following a line of policy pointed out by the American Government, of sending into Mexico future military expeditions, which would only jeopardize said good relations.

As regards the discussion of the other subjects which the American Commission desires to submit to the Mexican delegates, the First Chief confirms the attitude taken by the latter, that such matters should be discussed after the withdrawal of the American troops will have taken place, if happily some conclusion respecting the vigilance and protection of the border be reached.

In brief, the Constitutionalist Government believes that any agreement regarding the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil which may be reached, must be effected without implying consent, either express or tacit, with the present occupation, without sanctioning in the future the said occupation, and without authorizing or tolerating in the future a new expedition of American forces into Mexican territory.

The Mexican delegates consider that it is possible to find a new formula which may fulfill the conditions suggested by the First Chief, in view of the good disposition which they do not doubt exists on the part of the American Commissioners to reach an agreement compatible with the respect for the sovereignty of our country.

With the assurance [etc.]

LUIS CABRERA
YGNACIO BONILLAS
ALBERTO J. PANI

At the same time the Mexican Commissioners submitted, in concrete form, the proposed changes in the Protocol, as follows:

PROTOCOL OF AGREEMENT, AD REFERENDUM, SIGNED AT ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., NOVEMBER 24, 1916.

CHANGES PROPOSED AT SESSION HELD AT PHILADELPHIA, DECEMBER 18, 1916.

Article I. The Government of the United States agrees to begin the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil as soon as practicable, such withdrawal, subject to the further terms of this Agreement, to be completed not later than——; that is to say forty (40) days after the approval of this Agreement by both Governments.

Article I. At this session the American Commissioners presented their reply to the communication of the Mexican Delegates of December 18. This reply reads as follows:

BELLEVUE-STRATFORD HOTEL,
Philadelphia, December 19, 1916.

To The Honorable Luis Cabrera, The Honorable Ygnacio Bonillas, The Honorable Alberto J. Pani,

GENTLEMEN: After careful consideration of the proposals of the Mexican Commissioners as to changes in the Protocol, the American Commissioners are unanimously of the opinion that the proposed changes are impracticable and unwise. Each of the suggested changes was the subject of extended discussion by the entire Commission, and the members of the Commission could not come to an agreement upon them.

There is no reason, in the opinion of the American Commissioners, why this Protocol should not be approved by both Governments. After months of study and discussion, the Protocol was agreed to by all members of the commission. It was the result of their best united effort to compose the differences between the two countries. It was submitted to the First Chief with the request for an assurance from him that, if it were satisfactory to him, the Mexican Commissioners would be authorized to proceed to the discussion of other vital questions.

We have not insisted nor urged that the Mexican Government recognize our right to occupy Mexican territory, even under such novel and necessitous conditions as have existed; and it will not be contrary to the spirit of our discussion for the approval of your Government to be given to this instrument with such expression of Mexican authority and right as to you may be desirable. Such expression could be spread upon the minutes or could be added to the Protocol.

For Mexico to reject the Protocol as unsatisfactory ends the function of this Commission. For Mexico to refuse to give the assurance asked for must have the same effect. If an agreement is reached the United States will withdraw her troops in strict compliance therewith, but the agreement to do this must be taken as equivalent to the fulfilment of the promise. To refuse to recognize this makes an issue of the good faith of the United States.

We would view with keenest regret such an inevitable termination of the work of the Commission, upon which we all entered with high hopes. We earnestly trust that the situation will be so met as to permit us to advance to the constructive consideration of those questions the proper settlement of which will tend to strengthen the ties of friendship between Mexico and the United States.

We beg [etc.]

The reply thus submitted practically brought the session to a close. It was decided to adjourn, to meet at 11 o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, January 2, 1917, provided that on or before Tuesday, December 26, 1916, the Chairman of the American and Mexican sections of the Commission deemed it necessary to reconvene the Commission. At this session a statement was made to the Mexican Commissioners on behalf of the American Commissioners, and was inserted in the minutes, reading as follows:

most convenient or expedient by the American commander.

Article V. Until a satisfactory agreement is reached for the mutual protection of the border and the pursuit of outlaws, each of the contracting Governments shall protect its side of the boundary line. This, however, does not preclude such cooperation on the part of the military commanders of both countries as may be practicable.

Article VI. This Agreement shall take effect immediately upon approval by both Governments. Notification of approval shall be communicated by each Government to the other.

It shall be understood that if we meet for the discussion of other questions, the American Commissioners will not ask that any final agreement shall be reached as to any such questions while the American troops are in Mexico.

On Wednesday, December 27, 1916, Mr. Cabrera went to Washington, where he held a conference with Secretary Lane, and submitted the reply of the Mexican Commissioners to the communication of the American Commissioners of December 19. This reply reads as follows:

NEW YORK, December 27, 1916,

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: We are in receipt of instructions from the First Chief of the Constitutional Army in charge of the Executive Power of the Mexican Republic, which enable us to reply to your letter of the 19th instant, and confirm his former decision not to approve the Protocol, ad referendum, dated November 24, 1916. We deem it unnecessary in this letter to dwell upon the considerations which have led the Mexican Government to withhold its approval of the Protocol, inasmuch as they have been clearly set forth in our letter of the 18th instant, and remain unchanged at the present time. The Mexican Government is not willing to agree to the withdrawal of American troops under conditions which, because of subsequent and unexpected circumstances, might be interpreted as legalizing a posteriori the presence of American troops on Mexican soil.

Furthermore, the statement of the American Government reserving to itself the right to send further military expeditions into Mexico in pursuit of outlaws made it practically impossible for the Mexican Government to ratify the proposed Protocol.

In our capacity as members of the Joint Commission, we consider it our duty to exert every effort to the end that the United States and Mexico may find a satisfactory solution of their present difficulties, and we are still confident that it will be possible to reach an understanding, upon the basis of the proposals made to the American Commissioners at the session of Tuesday morning, December 19. We do not doubt that the American Commissioners will be actuated by the same spirit. In any event, we await their decision with regard to future labors of the Commission.

We fail to understand how, in spite of the express terms of the diplomatic correspondence, which led to these conferences, the American Commissioners consider that the functions of the Joint Commission come to an end because of the fact that the Protocol is unsatisfactory to the Mexican Government, or because we are not disposed to discuss the other matters, which the American Commissioners wish to consider as long as the American forces have not left our territory, and no agreement has been reached concerning the protection and safeguarding of the border.

The Mexican and American Joint Commission was created for the purpose of studying and proposing to their respective governments

"an immediate solution to the two points which constitute the real cause of the controversy between the two countries, to wit, * * * the retirement of the American forces * * * and the protection of the frontier" (Notes of the Mexican Government of July 4 and August 2, 1916), and in case that

"happily a solution satisfactory to both Governments of the questions set forth * * * may be reached, the Commission may also consider such other matters the friendly arrangement of which would tend to improve the relations of the two countries; it being understood that such recommendations as the Commission may make shall not be binding upon the respective Governments until formally accepted by them." (Note of the State Department of the 28th of July, 1916.)

The Joint Commission after three months of labor was unable to reach any solution concerning the protection and safeguarding of the border, and the Mexican Delegation had to confine itself to accepting an agreement concerning the withdrawal of American troops on the only terms to which the American Delegation would agree. This does not mean that an agreement more satisfactory to both countries could not have been found but rather that the Protocol was accepted with the idea of bringing the discussions to a conclusion and of formulating a concrete proposal for submission to our Government, since, as the American Commissioners may recall, we were not, as they were, in a position previously to consult our Government regarding each of the terms of the Protocol. It was clearly understood, furthermore, that the above-mentioned Protocol was to be submitted to the judgment of the Mexican Government, which Government reserved its freedom of action concerning the same. If, therefore, in conformity with the diplomatic correspondence which led to the appointment of the Commission, with the credentials of the Mexican Commissioners, with the tenor of the discussions of the Commission and with the wording of the Protocol itself; this agreement was to be submitted to the approval of the First Chief, we fail to understand how the mere fact that it has not been ratified by him should be construed as a reason for bringing the conference to an end. It would be incompatible with the above-mentioned facts, to assume that the Protocol must be ratified in the terms formulated by the Joint Commission. This would be equivalent to stating that the Mexican Government was deprived of its freedom of action; a conclusion contrary to diplomatic practice, even in negotiations between plenipotentiaries.

We also wish to call your attention to the fact, that, according to the diplomatic correspondence, the functions of the Joint Commission cannot extend to questions other than those relating to the international boundary until a solution satisfactory to both countries had been reached with reference to this matter. Our Government believes that, under present conditions, we should not discuss these other matters as long as American troops remain on Mexican soil. This does not mean a lack of confidence in the good faith of the United States, but is dictated by a proper regard for the dignity of our country. If, as was stated on several occasions during our recent sessions in Philadelphia, it is possible to effect the complete withdrawal of American forces in one week, the discussion of the other matters would not be deferred for any considerable period.

Awaiting your esteemed reply [etc.]

LUIS CABRERA
YGNACIO BONILLAS
ALBERTO J. PANI

On Tuesday, January 2, 1917, the American Commissioners assembled in the private office of Secretary Lane, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., to consider the reply of the Mexican Commissioners. It was decided to send a further communication to the Mexican Commissioners, the final form of which was agreed upon at a conference held on Wednesday, January 3, 1917. This reply reads as follows:

JANUARY 3, 1917.

To The Honorable Luis Cabrera, The Honorable Ygnacio Bonillas, The Honorable Alberto J. Pani,

GENTLEMEN: We are in receipt of your favor of December 27, announcing that for the second time the First Chief of the Mexican Government has declined to agree to the Protocol submitted to him by both the Mexican and American Commissioners.

In your esteemed favor there are matters concerning which we think it timely that we should speak, lest there be misunderstanding. It is said, for instance, that the Mexican Government is not willing to agree to the withdrawal of the American troops under conditions, which, because of subsequent and unexpected circumstances, might be interpreted as legalizing a posteriori the presence of American troops on Mexican soil.

It may suffice as expressive of our view to quote from our letter to you of December 19, in which this passage will be found:

"We have not insisted nor urged that the Mexican Government recognize our right to occupy Mexican territory, even under such novel and necessitous conditions as have existed; and it will not be contrary to the spirit of our discussion for the approval of your Government to be given to this instrument with such expression of Mexican authority and right as to you may be desirable. Such expression could be spread upon the minutes or could be added to the Protocol."

It will be recalled also that during our conferences this preamble to any proposed Protocol was tendered by us as expressive of our friendly attitude:

"Whereas, the so-called punitive expedition of the United States, under the command of General John Pershing, into the territory of Mexico, was undertaken for the sole purpose of pursuing and capturing, if possible, the bandit Francisco Villa and the band under his command, or of dispersing the same, and

"Whereas, the said expedition, from the necessity of the situation, was obliged to start with the utmost promptness, and acted under the tacit assumption of the acquiescence of the Mexican Government, after understood to be informally expressed, and

"Whereas, there is no longer necessity for the presence of American troops on Mexican territory, and

"Whereas, the American Government has no desire to continue that presence against the protest of the Mexican Government, or even to appear to violate the sovereignty of Mexico:

It is therefore agreed" * * *

Again it is stated by you that

"The statement of the American Government reserving to itself the right to send further military expeditions into Mexico in pursuit of outlaws made it practically impossible for the Mexican Government to ratify the proposed Protocol."

We beg to call your attention to the fact that such statement was not included in the Protocol. It was made in the form of an announcement of the policy which this Government would be compelled to follow if, unhappily, raids such as the Columbus massacre were repeated. The language to which you refer was this:

"It is essential, as a matter of governmental policy, that the United States reserve the right to deal with any serious hostile incursion from Mexico into American territory as may be deemed advisable at the time, including the right to pursue marauders into Mexican territory when such pursuit is necessary to our own protection. Duly mindful of the obligations imposed upon us by international law, such pursuit will not be intended, and should not be considered an act hostile to the Constitutionalist Government of Mexico."

This was a frank declaration of what our Government considered its right of self-protection, and was worded so that any such action, if found later to be necessary, would be undertaken with due regard for the obligations imposed by international law, and should not be regarded as an act of hostility. So long as Mexico was not able to safeguard its side of the international boundary we do not wish to have a pursuit of our common enemy regarded as an act adverse to your interest, and we gave this notice as a word of caution against a wrong interpretation being placed upon our act either by your people or by our own.

With reference to your proposals of December 19, we would respectfully represent that such proposals called for an unconditional withdrawal of our troops from Mexico, one that should begin immediately and be continuous hereafter, without stating any definite time when the withdrawal should be effected. The provision in the signed Protocol was that the American troops should withdraw within forty days after ratification of the agreement by both Governments, and this was inserted at your request, and not at ours, it being your desire that a definite date should be fixed.

In the same proposals you omitted Article II, of the Protocol which reads:

"The American Commander shall determine the manner in which the withdrawal shall be effected, so as to ensure the safety of the territory affected by the withdrawal."

Why so reasonable a provision should be eliminated was not made apparent.

Under Article III of the Protocol agreed to it was provided that our troops abandoned the territory now occupied, such territory should be occupied and held by your troops. This you omit from your proposals, although it was clearly intended to give to the de facto Government the territory abandoned and insure against its occupation by bandits who might threaten our border and harass your own people.

In Article IV of the Protocol, it had been agreed that:

"In case there are any further activities of the forces inimical to the Constitutionalist Government which threaten the safety of the international border along the northern section of Chihuahua, the withdrawal of American forces shall not be delayed beyond the period strictly necessary to overcome such activities."

This provision which was also omitted in your proposals was manifestly a limitation upon our right to delay our withdrawal for any period longer than necessary to overcome those forces inimical to your Government.

You state that one reason why the Mexican Commissioners have not been disposed to discuss other matters than the withdrawal of troops and the protection of the border is that an agreement has not been reached concerning protection and safeguarding of the border.

Again you refer to this same point in the language: "The Joint Commission, after three months of labor, was unable to reach any solution concerning the protection and safeguarding of the border, etc."

After repeated efforts to frame a system of cooperative border control, the Commission concluded that the wisest system that could be devised would be one made by the army officers of both Governments stationed at the border. The Protocol signed at Atlantic City recognizes the possibility of such cooperation, and our promise was made that an effort in this direction would be seriously undertaken through the War Department.

While your letter and the proposals made suggest an unconditional withdrawal, it has certainly been our conception of the duty of this Commission that it was to find wise conditions upon which the withdrawal could be made; otherwise there would have been no purpose in the conference. The language of our respective letters of authority gives proof that it was contemplated by both Governments that there were matters of moment upon which agreement was necessary or advisable before withdrawal could reasonably be expected by you or effected by us. Indeed, we recall no proposal during the conference from you that did not contain conditions precedent to withdrawal.

In our communication of September 22 this question was presented:

"Would this be a satisfactory program for the Joint Commission:

"That while the military details of a plan of border control formulated by us are under consideration at Washington, we pass to the consideration of three questions:

- "1. Protection of life and property of foreigners in Mexico
- "2. Establishment of a claims commission
- "3. Religious tolerance

"It being understood between us that our effort shall be to reach a tentative understanding upon those questions which the American Commissioners regard as of certainly no less importance than that of border control, and it being further understood that the border control matter shall not be made dependent in any way upon our agreement upon these above-mentioned questions."

Under your interpretation of your authority, our conferences were limited to the question of withdrawal and border control, and we asked assurance that if the Protocol regarding withdrawal and border control was signed we could immediately pass to those other questions of vital importance to us. To allay all fear that the presence of American troops would be used to compel an agreement upon these matters that would not be entirely agreeable to you, the American Commissioners spread upon the minutes this statement:

"It shall be understood that if we meet for the discussion of other questions the American Commissioners will not ask that any final agreement shall be reached as to any such questions while the American troops are in Mexico."

We have read with much interest the portion of your communication relating to the diplomatic correspondence leading up to the appointment of this Commission and we desire to express our complete accord with the views you have expressed as to the reserved right of either Government to withhold its approval of an agreement signed ad referendum. But the exhaustive discussions of the last three months have convinced us that the attitude of the de facto Government as to this Protocol, as well as to the character of the amendments proposed by you at the sessions in Philadelphia, would make such further discussion fruitless and would only delay the solution of the questions now pending between the United States and Mexico.

We are sincerely reluctant to contemplate the closing of our conferences as a Commission. You may perhaps have been under embarrassment, as you suggest, because of your long distance from the seat of your Government. With this in mind we took frequent and sometimes extended adjournment, that full opportunity to consult your home officials might be given. It is not, however, in our mind that mutual effort in the direction of composing the differences between the two Governments should cease. We would suggest the advisability of all further negotiations being conducted under conditions which would make this embarrassment impossible. We trust that you share with us the hope that the prolonged, thorough and intimate conferences that we have had during the recent months may not be without fruit.

We beg [etc.]

FRANKLIN K. LANE
GEORGE GRAY
JOHN R. MOTT

The delivery of this communication was entrusted to Dr. Mott, and he was furthermore, requested to take up with the Mexican Commissioners the question of the desirability of holding any further sessions of the Commission. At the same time the American Commissioners decided to submit a preliminary report to the President. An appointment was made for a conference with the President at five o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, January 3, and at this conference a report was submitted to the President in the following terms:

JANUARY 3, 1917.

TO THE PRESIDENT: The Commissioners appointed by you on August 31 last to meet with the Commissioners appointed by the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, to consider and if possible arrive at a satisfactory solution of the controversies pending between the Government of the United States and the de facto Government of Mexico with reference to the withdrawal of American troops from Mexican soil, the protection of the international boundary, and such other questions as might be submitted by the respective Governments, beg to present a report regarding the situation which now confronts them.

Your Commissioners have addressed themselves preferentially to the two questions above mentioned, namely, the withdrawal of troops and the safeguarding of the border. From the beginning of our negotiations we have impressed upon the Mexican Commissioners the importance of disposing of these two questions at the earliest possible moment, in order that the Commission might proceed to the consideration of a constructive program which would be helpful to Mexico and at the same time would satisfactorily settle those matters which are of vital concern to the United States and profoundly affect the amicable relations between the two countries. Of these, the most important is the protection of life and property of Americans and other foreigners who have taken up residence in Mexico.

After prolonged negotiations, which consumed far more time than we had anticipated, the Commission reached an agreement on November 24, 1916, with reference to the withdrawal of troops and the safeguarding of the international boundary. This agreement was signed by all the members of the American and Mexican delegations, and it was our earnest hope and expectation that we would proceed forthwith to the consideration of the other questions, which we regard as quite as vital to Mexico as to the United States. In this hope and expectation we have been disappointed. At the session of the Commission held in Philadelphia on December 18 we were informed that the First Chief had refused to ratify the Protocol for reasons set forth in a letter of the Mexican Commissioners dated December 18, and which is appended hereto. [Printed ante]

At the session of December 19 the Mexican Commissioners submitted a series of amendments to the Protocol, which received the careful consideration of the American Commissioners, and were found to be unacceptable. Our conclusions were communicated to the Mexican Commissioners in a letter dated December 19, a copy of which is submitted herewith. [Printed ante]

We have now received from the Mexican Commissioners a written communication dated December 27, in which the refusal of the First Chief to ratify the Protocol is confirmed. [Printed ante]

The sessions of the Commission held since the signing of the Atlantic City Agreement, and the careful consideration given by your Commissioners to the amendments to the Protocol proposed by the Mexican Commissioners have forced us reluctantly to the decision that no agreement satisfactory to both parties with reference to the withdrawal of troops and border control can be reached by this Commission.

Because of the urgency of the other questions involved in our relations with Mexico, your Commissioners have reached the conclusion that the interests of both countries require that the question of the withdrawal of American troops be settled directly by the Government of the United States.

We remain firm in our conviction that the Protocol signed at Atlantic City on November 24, 1916, fully safeguards the interests of both countries. We, therefore, beg to suggest that it would be wise for the Government of the United States, voluntarily and of its own initiative, to put the provisions of the Protocol into effect, as far as practicable. This question once disposed of, it may be possible to pass on, through direct diplomatic negotiations with the executive head of the de facto Government, to the grave and serious questions to which we believe that Government cannot refuse attention.

The careful study of the mass of information submitted to us through official and other channels, has created in our minds the deepest misgivings with reference to the course of events in Mexico. We have eagerly searched for indications that the revolutionary government was fulfilling the avowed purposes of its platform, but this has revealed to us most disquieting economic, financial, sanitary and social conditions, which involve untold misery and suffering for the masses of the people. Furthermore, the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention now in session at Querétaro indicate a fixed and settled purpose to place in the organic law of the Republic provisions which tend to make the position of foreigners in Mexico intolerable, which open the door to confiscation of legally acquired property and which carry with them the germs of serious international friction.

It is this grave menace that creates in us the deepest anxiety and a desire no less insistent to have these matters taken up with the least possible delay.

We are deeply sensible, Mr. President, of the confidence which you have reposed in us, and sincerely trust that our prolonged conferences with the Mexican Commissioners may have served to clear the way for the carrying forward, through other and more direct channels, of the negotiations which have so closely occupied us in recent months.

We have the honor [etc.]

On Sunday, January 6, Commissioner Pani went to Washington to have a talk with Secretary Lane. He submitted to Secretary Lane a letter from the Mexican Commissioners which was intended as a reply to the communication of January 3. This reply reads as follows:

JANUARY 6, 1917.

To The Honorable Franklin K. Lane, The Honorable George Gray, The Honorable John R. Mott,

GENTLEMEN: We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 3, fully appreciative of the cordial spirit which animates the same.

We believe with you that our association of more than three months has laid the foundation for a closer understanding between the two countries. We are furthermore confident of the happy conclusion of further efforts, if, as we are certain will occur, the obstacles which the Joint Commission encountered up to the present time are removed.

We beg [etc.]

YGNACIO BONILLAS
ALBERTO J. PANI

At this conference, it was decided to hold a meeting in New York on Monday, January 15.

The Commission assembled on Monday afternoon, January 15, at the Hotel Biltmore. At this session a number of proposals were submitted both by the American and the Mexican Commissioners, the purpose of which was to issue a joint statement on the work and recommendations of the Commission. After prolonged discussion no agreement could be reached, and it was decided to adjourn sine die without issuing any formal statement.

On Tuesday, January 16, Secretary Lane submitted to the President, in the name of the American Commissioners, a supplementary report, reading as follows:

"JANUARY 16, 1917.

"DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Your Commission, appointed to act with a like body created by the Government of Mexico to compose the differences between the two Governments, begs to advise that the joint body adjourned yesterday, January 15. At our meeting yesterday the American Commissioners proposed the following resolution:

"Whereas, this Commission was created by the Governments of Mexico and the United States to promote a better understanding between the two peoples, and thus bring about a relationship that would make for their mutual interest and the realization of their ideals as neighboring Republics, and

"Whereas, it is our hope that by the friendly and long-continued consideration of those conditions along our common border and within Mexico, which have given rise to the present difficulties, a door has been opened to such a fuller understanding of the purposes and plans of both Mexico and the United States,

"It is hereby resolved, that this Commission does now adjourn, recommending to both Governments the reestablishment of full diplomatic relations under which may be carried on directly the further negotiations necessary to secure these ends:

- "1. The protection of the life, property and other rights of foreigners in Mexico
- "2. The establishment of an International Claims Commission
- "3. The elimination of the causes that may lead to further misunderstanding, friction or clash between Americans and Mexicans."

This the Mexican Commissioners would not agree to, unless it was preceded by a recommendation on the part of the American Commissioners that the troops be withdrawn. To this, in accordance with your instructions, we refused to accede. Inasmuch as the Mexican Government had refused to agree to the Protocol signed by the members of the Joint Commission, we told them that the matter of withdrawal was now one which must be left entirely to the determination of yourself, as President.

The Commission having come to an end, we suggest that the United States is now free to follow any course in the matter of such withdrawal which may seem consistent with the protection of our own territory and the friendly relations which it wishes to promote between the two Republics. We would recommend that full diplomatic relations be reestablished between the two Governments for the further consideration of the matters set forth in the above resolutions.

Respectfully yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE

APPENDIX B

The Citizen First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, in view of the merits which distinguish you, has deemed it proper to appoint you as Member of the Diplomatic Commission, made up of Mr. Luis Cabrera, Attorney-at-law, of yourself, and of Mr. Ygnacio Bonillas, Civil Engineer, under the Chairmanship of the first named, and which must proceed to Washington in order to treat with the Commission appointed for the purpose by the American Government regarding the questions which have arisen between Mexico and the United States, respecting the Columbus incident, as well as the other points which may be submitted to your consideration by the American Commission, and such as the Mexican Diplomatic Commission consider proper in order to establish the frankest cordiality in the relations between both countries, with the understanding that the decisions and rulings which may be taken by the Commissions of both countries may be previously submitted to the approval of the Citizen First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army and ratified by him, in keeping with special and specific instructions which have been given you in writing by order of the aforesaid Citizen First Chief.

All of which I make known to you for your guidance, trusting that you will fulfil your mission with the zeal and patriotism that distinguish you.

[Translation]

NATIONAL PALACE,
Mexico, May 1, 1917.

GREAT AND GOOD FRIEND: I have the honor to inform Your Excellency that having been elected by the free vote of my fellow-citizens to the presidency of the republic, I have, on this day, taken possession of my high office with the legal formalities.

In fulfilling this agreeable duty, it is extremely satisfactory to me to express to Your Excellency the earnest desire and firm intention of my Government to cultivate and to extend the frank and cordial relations which happily link the United Mexican States with the United States of America over whose destinies Your Excellency presides.

Hoping that Your Excellency entertains the same sentiments with regard to Mexico, I take pleasure in availing of this occasion to express the sincere wishes which I feel for the aggrandizement of the United States of America and for the personal happiness of Your Excellency, at the same time; tendering you the assurances of my highest consideration and especial esteem with which I have the honor to sign myself, Your Excellency's Loyal and Good Friend,

No. 112

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Mexico, May 2, 1917.

SIR: Supplementing my telegram No. 145, May 1, 7 p. m.,² I have the honor to report that in accordance with Transitory Article I of the recently adopted Constitution, President-elect Venustiano Carranza appeared before the Congress yesterday shortly after 5 p. m., and took the oath of office as President of the Republic of Mexico. The Diplomatic Corps was present by invitation and occupied two galleries, the representatives of the Allies in one and the representatives of the Central Powers and neutrals in another.

Mr. Carranza was greeted with applause as he entered the Chamber accompanied by his Cabinet of the pre-Constitutional period, and a number of chiefs of the revolution, among whom were several of the signers of the Plan of Guadalupe.

The ceremony was very simple and lasted not more than ten minutes. After a brief introduction by the presiding officer, the President-elect repeated the oath of office prescribed in the Constitution—that is to say, the oath was not administered to him—and immediately left the Chamber amidst renewed applause.

The presidential party went directly from the Chamber of Deputies to the National Palace, the automobiles carrying me and my staff, accompanied by Mr. Manuel Amayo, Chief of Protocol, being next in line. Shortly after reaching the Palace the several foreign missions constituting the Diplomatic Corps, were received individually, that of the United States being at the head of the line. In presenting my felicitations to President Carranza I had in mind the instructions contained in the Department's telegram number 145, April 28, 7 p. m. President Carranza replied with a simple acknowledgment of his thanks and appreciation.

The event passed off without unusual incident so far as I noticed. The police arrangements were superior to those provided for the formal opening of Congress on April 15 reported on in my despatch number 83 of April 18.² Dense crowds collected along the line of march from the Camara to the National Palace and in the large public square in front of the Palace, but they were good natured and were easily kept in order by a double file of soldiers.

For a more detailed account of the ceremonies attending the inauguration, I beg to refer to the press clippings which I am sending in this pouch.

EXCELLENCY: The town of Ojinaga, Chihuahua, fronting Presidio, Texas, on the other side of the Rio Grande, was attacked May 30 by Villista forces under Ornelas and other chiefs, and after twelve hours of struggle, the Constitutional Government forces, in view of the enemy's superior numbers had to withdraw and cross the river, gathering at the Mexican Consulate, under the responsibility of the Consular Agent at Presidio, Texas, Mr. Cosme Bengoechea, and with the authorization of the Town Mayor, Mr. Mitchell.

Yesterday afternoon the Villistas evacuated Ojinaga, upon the arrival there of General Figueroa, who is pursuing them, and to follow them up he needs the contingent refuged at Presidio. As Mayor Mitchell states that he cannot permit the return to Mexico of those men without authorization from the State Department, I beseech your excellency to issue the necessary orders so that the authorities of Presidio, Texas, may allow the soldiers who retreated thereto after the fight at Ojinaga, to return to Mexican soil.

Department has just been informed officially that a force of Villistas, estimated one thousand strong, is attacking Ojinaga. It is feared that this attack may endanger American life and property in Texas. Press reports indicate desperate fighting going on, bullets falling on American side, and scores of Mexicans crossing into United States, fearing massacre.

It is desired that you communicate foregoing to appropriate Mexican authorities, and impress upon them the urgent necessity of providing adequate protection against border raids and attacks. If you see no objection thereto, you may say that it is the opinion of this Government that the Mexican Government should immediately concentrate its energies to suppress bandits along border, and that campaign in oil fields may well be postponed for this and other reasons until danger of frontier raids by bandits has been entirely eliminated, and border made safe to citizens of both countries.

637. Department's 608. Through friends in Congress I am endeavoring to obtain text of articles already approved.

Article 3 as approved makes all primary education nonsectarian and lay. This means the prohibition of schools carried on or controlled by the various Roman Catholic orders and by the different Protestant missions boards. Most of the latter and many of the former are American.

PARKER

647. Article 28 of the new Constitution was approved yesterday. In effect it prohibits monopolies except coinage, mails, telegraphs, copyrights and patents and the issue of paper money by one sole bank controlled by the Government. Exception is also made for associations or societies which sell their products directly to foreign markets and do not deal in articles of prime necessity.

The enforcement of this article will work hardship on many industries such as smelters, foundries, etc., which have hitherto enjoyed certain privileges in way of exemption from taxation for a period of years and will probably result in withdrawal of considerable foreign capital. Although Article 14, already approved, states that no law shall be given retroactive effect there is a strong belief that this present article will be taken advantage of for the formation of laws in accordance with which retroactive judgments will be made.

File No. 812.011/11a

The Secretary of State to Mr. Parker, representing American interests

[Telegram]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 22, 1917, 5 p. m.

621. The Department's attention has been called to certain proposed provisions relating to rights of foreigners in Mexico which provisions it appears, the convention in session at Querétaro has decided to incorporate into the Mexican Constitution.

The first paragraph of Article 27, relating to the expropriation of private property appears to confer on the executive the power to determine, without any legislative authority and without any judicial recourse being afforded to property owners to protect their rights, the necessity or utility of property the condemnation of which to him may seem advisable. The vesting of such extensive powers in the executive appears objectionable. It would seem desirable that at least the question as to whether property is taken for a public purpose should always be subject to judicial review.

The seventh paragraph of the same article provides that civil and commercial companies may not own and operate for themselves properties of an area greater than that absolutely necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes of their creation, and that the executive shall in every case determine the appropriate area. The objection to a provision so capable of capricious application appears evident. The precise conditions under which the power vested in the executive may be exercised are not defined. No safeguards are afforded against unwise or arbitrary executive acts. The fact that purchases would seemingly in all cases be subject to executive sanction would alone appear to show the impossibility of any proper practicable application of such a provision. While it is hardly to be supposed that it is intended to give this provision retroactive effect, should this be done such action would apparently result in confiscation of property rights vested under existing laws and treaty stipulations, since no provision is made for compensation for property taken and since property would evidently not under such conditions be taken in the proper exercise of the right of expropriation.

Article 28, providing that there shall be no exemption from taxation would apparently, if improperly given a retroactive effect, impair the obligation of contracts of many foreign corporations now operating under agreements, concluded either with the Mexican Federal Government or with Mexican states, which provide for certain exemptions from taxation for periods that have not yet expired.

By the first and second paragraphs of Article 33 it is provided that the executive may expel from the country forthwith and without judicial process any foreigners whose presence he may deem inadvisable, and that there shall be no appeal from his decree. These provisions apparently confer authority on the executive to expel foreigners without regard for the general practice of nations which confines the exercise of the power of expulsion to cases in which just cause for the exercise of this harsh measure are clearly shown. The express power of the executive to expel, for reasons satisfactory to himself, aliens who have been permitted to enter Mexico, would seemingly place all aliens in that country in a position of insecurity and would appear to be at variance with the apparently growing tendency of nations to restrict the exercise of this right with a view to affording safeguards against the expulsion of aliens in an arbitrary manner inconsistent with the proper protection of their just rights, and with a view to the observance of the rules of international comity.

The third paragraph of Article 33 provides that foreigners may not acquire real estate unless they shall declare their intention to waive their citizenship and the protection of their governments in all matters appertaining to the property. The Government of the United States has in the past made clear, as doubtless have other nations, that it cannot concede the right of Mexico to limit, by its municipal law, this Government's right of intervention to protect the rights of its citizens residing or sojourning in that country, nor concede that waivers such as those referred to in this provision can annul the relations of citizens to their own government and extinguish the obligation of this Government to protect its citizens in Mexico. In so far as the proposed provision would hamper the transfer to another foreigner of foreign owned lands, it would apparently in a sense be confiscatory of rights enjoyed by the foreign owner from the time of his acquisition of the property.

You will immediately bring the foregoing to the attention of General Carranza and say that the above-mentioned provisions seem to indicate a proposed policy toward foreigners which is fraught with possible grave consequences affecting the commercial and the political relations of Mexico with other nations. You will point out that the Government of the United States cannot, of course, acquiesce in any direct or indirect confiscation of foreign-owned properties in Mexico. You will further say that the Government of the United States, with a view to avoiding the possibility of the disturbance of hitherto pleasant relations existing between the two Governments, and with a view to avoiding future serious difficulties with any government organized under the proposed constitution, earnestly desires General Carranza to give these matters his careful personal consideration.

Article 1. Every person in the United Mexican States shall enjoy all guaranties granted by this Constitution; these shall neither be abridged nor suspended except in such cases and under such conditions as are herein provided.

Article 2. Slavery is forbidden in the United Mexican States. Slaves who enter the national territory shall, by this act alone, recover their freedom, and enjoy the protection of the law.

Article 3. Instruction is free; that given in public institutions of learning shall be secular. Primary instruction, whether higher or lower, given in private institutions shall likewise be secular.

No religious corporation nor minister of any religious creed shall establish or direct schools of primary instruction.

Private primary schools may be established only subject to official supervision.

Primary instruction in public institutions shall be gratuitous.

Article 4. No person shall be prevented from engaging in any profession, industrial or commercial pursuit or occupation of his liking, provided it be lawful. The exercise of this liberty shall only be forbidden by judicial order when the rights of third persons are infringed, or by executive order, issued under the conditions prescribed by law, when the rights of society are violated. No one shall be deprived of the fruit of his labor except by judicial decree.

Each State shall determine by law what professions shall require licenses, the requisites to be complied with in obtaining the same, and the authorities empowered to issue them.

Article 5. No one shall be compelled to render personal services without due compensation and without his full consent, excepting labor imposed as a penalty by judicial decree, which shall conform to the provisions of clauses I and II of Article 123.

Only the following public services shall be obligatory, subject to the conditions set forth in the respective laws: military service, jury service, service in municipal and other public elective office, whether this election be direct or indirect, and service in connection with elections, which shall be obligatory and without compensation.

The State shall not permit any contract, covenant or agreement to be carried out having for its object the abridgment, loss or irrevocable sacrifice of the liberty of man, whether by reason of labor, education or religious vows. The law, therefore, does not permit the establishment of monastic orders, of whatever denomination, or for whatever purpose contemplated.

Nor shall any person legally agree to his own proscription or exile, or to the temporary or permanent renunciation of the exercise of any profession or industrial or commercial pursuit.

A contract for labor shall only be binding to render the services agreed upon for the time fixed by law and shall not exceed one year to the prejudice of the party rendering the service; nor shall it in any case whatsoever embrace the waiver, loss or abridgment of any political or civil right.

bond from authors or printers, nor restrict the liberty of the press, which shall be limited only by the respect due to private life, morals and public peace. Under no circumstances shall a printing press be sequestrated as the corpus delicti.

The organic laws shall prescribe whatever provisions may be necessary to prevent the imprisonment, under pretext of a denunciation of offenses of the press, of the vendors, newsboys, workmen and other employees of the establishment publishing the writing denounced, unless their responsibility be previously established.

Article 8. Public officials and employees shall respect the exercise of the right of petition, provided it be in writing and in a peaceful and respectful manner; but this right may be exercised in political matters solely by citizens.

To every petition there shall be given an answer in writing by the official to whom it may be addressed, and the said official shall be bound to inform the petitioner of the decision taken within a brief period.

Article 9. The right peaceably to assemble or to come together for any lawful purpose shall not be abridged; but only citizens shall be permitted to exercise this right for the purpose of taking part in the political affairs of the country. No armed assembly shall have the right to deliberate.

No meeting or assembly shall be deemed unlawful, nor may it be dissolved, which shall have for its purpose the petitioning of any authority or the presentation of any protest against any act, provided no insults be proffered against the said authority, nor violence resorted to, nor threats used to intimidate or to compel the said authority to render a favorable decision.

Article 10. The inhabitants of the United Mexican States are entitled to have arms of any kind in their possession for their protection and legitimate defense, excepting such as are expressly prohibited by law and such as the nation may reserve for the exclusive use of the army, navy and national guard; but they shall not bear such arms within inhabited places, except subject to the police regulations thereof.

Article 11. Every one has the right to enter and leave the Republic, to travel through its territory and change his residence without necessity of a letter of security, passport, safe conduct or any other similar requirement. The exercise of this right shall be subordinated to the powers of the judiciary, in the event of civil or criminal responsibility, and to those of the executive, in so far as relates to the limitations imposed by law in regard to emigration, immigration and the public health of the country, or in regard to undesirable foreigners resident in the country.

Article 12. No titles of nobility, prerogatives or hereditary honors shall be granted in the United Mexican States, nor shall any effect be given to those granted by other countries.

Article 13. No one shall be tried according to private laws or by special tribunals. No person or corporation shall have privileges nor enjoy emoluments which are not in compensation for public services and established by law. Military jurisdiction shall be recognized for the trial of criminal cases having direct connection with military discipline, but the military tribunals shall in no case and for no reason extend their jurisdiction over persons not belonging to the army. Whenever a civilian shall be implicated in any military crime or offense, the cause shall be heard by the corresponding civil authorities.

Article 14. No law shall be given retroactive effect to the prejudice of any person whatsoever.

No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, property, possessions or rights without due process of law instituted before a duly created court, in which the essential elements of procedure are observed and in accordance with previously existing laws.

In criminal cases no penalty shall be imposed by mere analogy or even by a priori evidence, but the penalty shall be decreed by a law in every respect applicable to the crime in question.

In civil suits the final judgment shall be according to the letter or the juridical interpretation of the law; in the absence of the latter, the general legal principles shall govern.

Article 15. No treaty shall be authorized for the extradition of political offenders, or of offenders of the common class, who have been slaves in the country where the offense was committed. Nor shall any agreement or treaty be entered into which abridges or modifies the guaranties and rights which this Constitution grants to the individual and to the citizen.

Article 16. No one shall be molested in his person, family, domicile, papers or possessions, except by virtue of an order in writing of the competent authority setting forth the legal ground and justification for the action taken. No order of arrest or detention shall be issued against any person other than by competent judicial authority, nor unless preceded by a charge, accusation or complaint for a specific offense punishable by imprisonment, supported by an affidavit of a credible party or by such other evidence as shall make the guilt of the accused probable; in cases in flagrante delicto any person may arrest the offender and his accomplices, placing them without delay at the disposition of the nearest authorities. Only in urgent cases instituted by the public attorney without previous complaint or indictment and when there is no judicial authority available may the administrative authorities, on their strictest accountability, order the detention of the accused, placing him at the disposition of the judicial authorities. Every search warrant, which may only be issued by the judicial authority and which must be in writing, shall specify the place to be searched, the person or persons to be arrested and the objects sought, to which the proceeding shall be strictly limited; at the conclusion of which, a detailed written statement shall be drawn up in the presence of two witnesses proposed by the occupant of the place to be searched, or, in his absence or refusal, by the official making the search.

Administrative officials may enter private houses solely for the purpose of determining that the sanitary and police regulations have been complied with; they may likewise demand the exhibition of books and documents necessary to prove that the fiscal regulations have been obeyed, subject to the respective laws and to the formalities prescribed for cases of search.

Article 17. No one shall be imprisoned for debts of a purely civil character. No one shall take the law into his own hands, nor resort to violence in the enforcement of his rights. The courts shall be open for the administration of justice at such times and under such conditions as the law may establish; their services shall be gratuitous and all judicial costs are accordingly prohibited.

Article 18. Detention shall be exercised only for offenses meriting corporal punishment. The place of detention shall be different and completely separated from that set apart for the serving of sentences.

The Federal and State Governments shall organize in their respective territories the penal system—penal colonies or prisons—on the basis of labor as a means of regeneration.

Article 19. No detention shall exceed three days except for reasons specified in the formal order of commitment, which shall set forth the offense charged, the substance thereof, the time, place and circumstances of its commission, and the facts disclosed in the preliminary examination; these facts must always be sufficient to establish the corpus delicti and the probable guilt of the accused. All authorities ordering any detention or consenting thereto, as well as all agents, subordinates, wardens or jailers executing the same, shall be liable for any breach of this provision.

The trial shall take place only for the offense or offenses set forth in the formal order of commitment. If it shall develop in the course of trial that another offense different from that charged has been committed, a separate accusation must be brought. This, however, shall not prevent the joinder of both causes of action, if deemed advisable.

Any maltreatment during apprehension or confinement; any molestation inflicted without legal justification; any exaction or contribution levied in prison are abuses which the law shall correct and the authorities repress.

Article 20. In every criminal trial the accused shall enjoy the following guaranties:

I. He shall be set at liberty on demand and upon giving a bond up to ten thousand pesos, according to his status and the gravity of the offense charged, provided, however, that the said offense shall not be punishable with more than five years' imprisonment; he shall be set at liberty without any further requisite than the placing of the stipulated sum at the disposal of the proper authorities or the giving of an adequate mortgage bond or personal security.

II. He may not be forced to be a witness against himself; wherefore denial of access or other means looking towards this end is hereby strictly prohibited.

III. He shall be publicly notified within forty-eight hours after being turned over to the judicial authorities of the name of his accuser and of the nature of and cause for the accusation, so that he may be familiar with the offense with which he is charged, may reply thereto and make his preliminary statement.

IV. He shall be confronted with the witnesses against him, who shall testify in his presence if they are to be found in the place where the trial is being held, so that he may cross-examine them in his defense.

V. All witnesses which he shall offer shall be heard in his defense, as well as all evidence received, for which he shall be given such time as the law may prescribe; he shall furthermore be assisted in securing the presence of any person or persons whose testimony he may request, provided they are to be found at the place of trial.

VI. He shall be entitled to a public trial by a judge or jury of citizens who can read and write and are also citizens of the place and district where the offense shall have been committed, provided the penalty for such offense be greater than one year's imprisonment. The accused shall always be entitled to trial by jury for all offenses committed by means of the press against the public peace or against the safety, domestic or foreign, of the Republic.

VII. He shall be furnished with all information of record needed for his defense.

VIII. He shall be tried within four months, if charged with an offense the maximum penalty for which does not exceed two years' imprisonment, and within one year, if the maximum penalty be greater.

IX. He shall be heard in his own defense, either personally or by counsel, or by both, as he may desire. In case he shall have no one to defend him, a list of official counsel shall be submitted to him in order that he may choose one or more to act in his defense. If the accused shall not desire to name any counsel for his defense, after having been called upon to do so at the time of his preliminary examination, the court shall appoint counsel to defend him. The accused may name his counsel immediately on arrest and shall be entitled to have him present at every stage of the trial; but he shall be bound to make him appear as often as required by the court.

X. In no event may imprisonment or detention be extended through failure to pay counsel fees or through any other pecuniary charge, by virtue of any civil liability or other similar cause. Nor shall detention be extended beyond the time set by law as the maximum for the offense charged.

The period of detention shall be reckoned as a part of the final sentence.

Article 21. The imposition of all penalties is an exclusive attribute of the judiciary. The prosecution of offenses belongs to the public prosecutor and to judicial police, who shall be under the immediate command and authority of the public prosecutor. The punishment of violations of municipal and police regulations belong to the administrative authorities, and shall consist only of a fine or of imprisonment not exceeding thirty-six hours. Should the offender fail to pay the fine this shall be substituted by the corresponding period of arrest, which shall in no case exceed fifteen days.

Should the offender be a workman or unskilled laborer, he shall not be punished with a fine greater than the amount of his weekly wage or salary.

Article 22. Punishments by mutilation and infamy, by branding, flogging, beating with sticks, torture of any kind, excessive fines, confiscation of property and any other penalties, unusual or working corruption of the blood, are prohibited.

Attachment proceedings of the whole or part of the property of any person made under judicial authority to cover any civil liability arising out of the commission of any offense, or by reason of the imposition of any tax or fine, shall not be deemed a confiscation of property.

Capital punishment is likewise forbidden for all political offenses; in the case of offenses other than political it shall only be imposed for high treason committed during a foreign war, parricide, murder with malice aforethought, arson, abduction, highway robbery, piracy and grave military offenses.

Article 23. No criminal case shall have more than three instances. No person, whether acquitted or convicted, shall be tried again for the same offense. The practice of discharging in one instance is abolished.

Article 24. Every one is free to embrace the religion of his choice and to practice all ceremonies, devotions or observances of his respective creed, either in places of public worship or at home, provided they do not constitute an offense punishable by law.

Every religious act of public worship shall be performed strictly within the places of public worship, which shall be at all times under governmental supervision.

Article 25. Sealed correspondence sent through the mails shall be free from search, and its violation shall be punishable by law.

Article 26. No member of the army shall in time of peace be quartered in private dwellings, without the consent of the owner; nor shall he demand any other exaction. In time of war the military may demand lodging, equipment, provisions and other assistance, in the manner provided by the corresponding martial law.

Article 27. The ownership of lands and waters comprised within the limits of the national territory is vested originally in the Nation, which has had, and has, the right to transmit title thereof to private persons, thereby constituting private property.

Private property shall not be expropriated except for reasons of public utility and by means of indemnification.

The Nation shall have at all times the right to impose on private property such limitations as the public interest may demand as well as the right to regulate the development of natural resources, which are susceptible of appropriation, in order to conserve them and equitably to distribute the public wealth. For this purpose necessary measures shall be taken to divide large landed estates; to develop small landed holdings; to establish new centers of rural population with such lands and waters as may be indispensable to them; to encourage agriculture and to prevent the destruction of natural resources, and to protect property from damage detrimental to society. Settlements, hamlets situated on private property and communes which lack lands or water or do not possess them in sufficient quantities for their needs shall have the right to be provided with them from the adjoining properties, always having due regard for small landed holdings. Wherefore, all grants of lands made up to the present time under the decree of January 6, 1915, are confirmed. Private property acquired for the said purposes shall be considered as taken for public utility.

In the Nation is vested direct ownership of all minerals or substances which in veins, layers, masses or beds constitute deposits whose nature is different from the components of the land, such as minerals from which metals and metaloids used for industrial purposes are extracted; beds of precious stones, rock salt and salt lakes formed directly by marine waters, products derived from the decomposition of rocks, when their exploitation requires underground work; phosphates which may be used for fertilizers; solid mineral fuels; petroleum and all hydrocarbons—solid, liquid or gaseous.

In the Nation is likewise vested the ownership of the waters of territorial seas to the extent and in the terms fixed by the law of nations; those of lakes and inlets of bays; those of interior lakes of natural formation which are directly connected with flowing waters; those of principal rivers or tributaries from the points at which there is a permanent current of water in their beds to their mouths, whether they flow to the sea or cross two or more States; those of intermittent streams which traverse two or more States in their main body; the waters of rivers, streams or ravines, when they bound the national territory or that of the States; waters extracted from mines; and the beds and banks of the lakes and streams hereinbefore mentioned, to the extent fixed by law. Any other stream of water not comprised within the foregoing enumeration shall be considered as an integral part of the private property through which it flows; but the development of the waters when they pass from one landed property to another shall be considered of public utility and shall be subject to the provisions prescribed by the States.

In the cases to which the two foregoing paragraphs refer, the ownership of the Nation is inalienable and may not be lost by prescription; concessions shall be granted by the Federal Government to private parties or civil or commercial corporations organized under the laws of Mexico, only on condition that said resources be regularly developed, and on the further condition that the legal provisions be observed.

Legal capacity to acquire ownership of lands and waters of the nation shall be governed by the following provisions:

I. Only Mexicans by birth or naturalization and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters and their appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. The Nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree before the Department of Foreign Affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to such property, and accordingly not to invoke the protection of their Governments in respect to the same, under penalty, in case of breach, of forfeiture to the Nation of property so acquired. Within a zone of 100 kilometers from the frontiers, and 50 kilometers from the sea coast, no foreigner shall under any conditions acquire direct ownership of lands and waters.

II. The religious institutions known as churches, irrespective of creed, shall in no case have legal capacity to acquire, hold or administer real property or loans made on such real property; all such real property or loans as may be at present held by the said religious institutions, either on their own behalf or through third parties, shall vest in the Nation, and any one shall have the right to denounce property so held. Presumptive proof shall be sufficient to declare the denunciation well-founded. Places of public worship are the property of the Nation, as represented by the Federal Government, which shall determine which of them may continue to be devoted to their present purposes. Episcopal residences, rectories, seminaries, orphan asylums or collegiate establishments of religious institutions, convents or any other buildings built or designed for the administration, propaganda or teaching of the tenets of any religious creed shall forthwith vest, as of full right, directly in the Nation, to be used exclusively for the public services of the Federation or of the States, within their respective jurisdictions. All places of public worship which shall later be erected shall be the property of the Nation.

III. Public and private charitable institutions for the sick and needy, for scientific research, or for the diffusion of knowledge, mutual aid societies or organizations formed for any other lawful purpose shall in no case acquire, hold or administer loans made on real property, unless the mortgage terms do not exceed ten years. In no case shall institutions of this character be under the patronage, direction, administration, charge or supervision of religious corporations or institutions, nor of ministers of any religious creed or of their dependents, even though either the former or the latter shall not be in active service.

IV. Commercial stock companies shall not acquire, hold or administer rural properties. Companies of this nature which may be organized to develop any manufacturing, mining, petroleum or other industry, excepting only agricultural industries, may acquire, hold or administer lands only in an area absolutely necessary for their establishments or adequate to serve the purposes indicated, which the Executive of the Union or of the respective State in each case shall determine.

V. Banks duly organized under the laws governing institutions of credit may make mortgage loans on rural and urban property in accordance with the provisions of the said laws, but they may not own nor administer more real property than that absolutely necessary for their direct purposes; and they may furthermore hold temporarily for the brief term fixed by law such real property as may be judicially adjudicated to them in execution proceedings.

VI. Properties held in common by co-owners, hamlets situated on private property, pueblos, tribal congregations and other settlements which, as a matter of fact or law, conserve their communal character, shall have legal capacity to enjoy in common the waters, woods and lands belonging to them, or which may have been or shall be restored to them according to the law of January 6, 1915, until such time as the manner of making the division of the lands shall be determined by law.

VII. Excepting the corporations to which Clauses III, IV, V and VI hereof refer, no other civil corporation may hold or administer on its own behalf real estate or mortgage loans derived therefrom, with the single exception of buildings designed directly and immediately for the purposes of the institution. The States, the Federal District and the Territories, as well as the municipalities throughout the Republic, shall enjoy full legal capacity to acquire and hold all real estate necessary for public services.

The Federal and State laws shall determine within their respective jurisdictions those cases in which the occupation of private property shall be considered of public utility; and in accordance with the said laws the administrative authorities shall make the corresponding declaration. The amount fixed as compensation for the expropriated property shall be based on the sum at which the said property shall be valued for fiscal purposes in the catastral or revenue offices, whether this value be that manifested by the owner or merely impliedly accepted by reason of the payment of his taxes on such a basis, to which there shall be added ten per cent. The increased value which the property in question may have acquired through improvements made subsequent to the date of the fixing of the fiscal value shall be the only matter subject to expert opinion and to judicial determination. The same procedure shall be observed in respect to objects whose value is not recorded in the revenue offices.

All proceedings, findings, decisions and all operations of demarcation, concession, composition, judgment, compromise, alienation or auction which may have deprived properties held in common by co-owners, hamlets situated on private property, settlements, congregations, tribes and other settlement organizations still existing since the law of June 25, 1856, of the whole or a part of their lands, woods and waters, are declared null and void; all findings, resolutions and operations which may subsequently take place and produce the same effects shall likewise be null and void. Consequently all lands, forests and waters of which the above-mentioned settlements may have been deprived shall be restored to them according to the decree of January 6, 1915, which shall remain in force as a constitutional law. In case the adjudication of lands, by way of restitution, be not legal in the terms of the said decree, which adjudication has been requested by any of the above entities, those lands shall nevertheless be given to them by way of grant, and they shall in no event fail to receive such as they may need. Only such lands, title to which may have been acquired in the divisions made by virtue of the said law of June 25, 1856, or such as may be held in undisputed ownership for more than ten years are excepted from the provision of nullity, provided their area does not exceed fifty hectares. Any excess over this area shall be returned to the commune and the owner shall be indemnified. All laws of restitution enacted by virtue of this provision shall be immediately carried into effect by the administrative authorities. Only members of the commune shall have the right to the lands destined to be divided, and the rights to these lands shall be inalienable so long as they remain undivided; the same provision shall govern the right of ownership after the division has been made. The exercise of the rights pertaining to the Nation by virtue of this article shall follow judicial process; but as a part of this process and by order of the proper tribunals, which order shall be issued within the maximum period of one month, the administrative authorities shall proceed without delay to the occupation, administration, auction or sale of the lands and waters in question, together with all their appurtenances, and in no case may the acts of the said authorities be set aside until final sentence is handed down.

During the next constitutional term, the Congress and the State Legislatures shall enact laws, within their respective jurisdictions, for the purpose of carrying out the division of large landed estates, subject to the following conditions:

(a) In each State and Territory there shall be fixed the maximum area of land which any one individual or legally organized corporation may own.

(b) The excess of the area thus fixed shall be subdivided by the owner within the period set by the laws of the respective locality; and these subdivisions shall be offered for sale on such conditions as the respective governments shall approve, in accordance with the said laws.

(c) If the owner shall refuse to make the subdivision, this shall be carried out by the local government, by means of expropriation proceedings.

(d) The value of the subdivisions shall be paid in annual amounts sufficient to amortize the principal and interest within a period of not less than twenty years, during which the person acquiring them may not alienate them. The rate of interest shall not exceed five per cent per annum.

(e) The owner shall be bound to receive bonds of a special issue to guarantee the payment of the property expropriated. With this end in view, the Congress shall issue a law authorizing the States to issue bonds to meet their agrarian obligations.

(f) The local laws shall govern the extent of the family patrimony, and determine what property shall constitute the same on the basis of its inalienability; it shall not be subject to attachment nor to any charge whatever.

All contract and concessions made by former Governments from and after the year 1876 which shall have resulted in the monopoly of lands, waters and natural resources of the Nation by a single individual or corporation, are declared subject to revision, and the Executive is authorized to declare those null and void which seriously prejudice the public interest.

Article 28. There shall be no private nor governmental monopolies of any kind whatsoever in the United Mexican States; nor exemption from taxation; nor any prohibition even under cover of protection to industry, excepting only those relating to the coinage of money, to the postal, telegraphic, and radio-telegraphic services, to the issuance of bills by a single banking institution to be controlled by the Federal Government, and to the privileges which for a limited period the law may concede to authors and artists for the reproduction of their work; and lastly, to those granted inventors or improvers of inventions for the exclusive use of their inventions.

The law will accordingly severely punish and the authorities diligently prosecute any accumulating or cornering by one or more persons of necessities for the purpose of bringing about a rise in price; any act or measure which shall stifle or endeavor to stifle free competition in any production, industry, trade or public service; any agreement or combination of any kind entered into by producers, manufacturers, merchants, common carriers or other public or quasi-public service, to stifle competition and to compel the consumer to pay exorbitant prices; and in general whatever constitutes an unfair and exclusive advantage in favor of one or more specified person or persons to the detriment of the public in general or of any special class of society.

Associations of labor organized to protect their own interests shall not be deemed a monopoly. Nor shall cooperative associations or unions of producers be deemed monopolies when, in defense of their own interests or of the general public, they sell directly in foreign markets national or industrial products which are the principal source of wealth of the region in which they are produced, provided they be not necessities, and provided further that such associations be under the supervision or protection of the Federal Government or of that of the States, and provided further that authorization be in each case obtained from the respective legislative bodies. These legislative bodies may, either on their own initiative or on the recommendation of the Executive, revoke, whenever the public interest shall so demand, the authorization granted for the establishment of the associations in question.

Article 29. In cases of invasion, grave disturbance of the public peace or any other emergency which may place society in grave danger or conflict, the President of the United Mexican States only with the concurrence of the Council of Ministers, and with the approval of the Congress, or if the latter shall be in recess, of the Permanent Committee, shall have power to suspend throughout the whole Republic or in any portion thereof, such guaranties as shall be a hindrance in meeting the situation promptly and readily; but such suspension shall in no case be confined to a particular individual, but shall be made by means of a general decree and only for a limited period. If the suspension occur while the Congress is in session, this body shall grant such powers as in its judgment the Executive may need to meet the situation; if the suspension occur while the Congress is in recess, the Congress shall be convoked forthwith for the granting of such powers.

CHAPTER II

CHAPTER II

The Legislative Power

Article 50. The legislative power of the United Mexican States is vested in a general Congress which shall consist of a House of Representatives and a Senate.

SECTION I

Election and Installation of the Congress

Article 51. The House of Representatives shall consist of representatives of the Nation, all of whom shall be elected every two years by the citizens of Mexico.

Article 52. One representative shall be chosen for each 60,000 inhabitants or any fraction thereof exceeding 20,000, on the basis of the general census of the Federal District and of each State and Territory. Any State or Territory in which the population shall be less than that fixed by this article shall, nevertheless, elect one representative.

Article 53. There shall be elected an alternate for each representative.

Article 54. The election of representatives shall be direct, in accordance with the provisions of the electoral law.

Article 55. Representatives shall have the following qualifications:

I. They shall be Mexican citizens by birth and in the enjoyment of their rights.

II. They shall be over twenty-five years of age on the day of election.

III. They shall be natives of the States or Territories respectively electing them, or domiciled and actually resident therein for six months immediately prior to the election. The domicile shall not be lost through absence in the discharge of any elective office.

IV. They shall not be in active service in the Federal Army, nor have any command in the police corps or rural constabulary in the districts where the elections respectively take place, for at least ninety days immediately prior to the election.

V. They shall not hold the office of secretary nor assistant secretary of any executive Department nor of justice of the Supreme Court, unless they shall have resigned therefrom ninety days immediately prior to the election.

VI. No State Governor, Secretary of State of the several States, nor State Judge shall be eligible in the districts within their several jurisdictions, unless they shall have resigned from their office ninety days immediately prior to the day of election.

VI. They shall not be ministers of any religious creed.

Article 56. The Senate shall consist of two Senators from each State and two from the Federal District, chosen in direct election.

Each State Legislature shall certify to the election of the candidate who shall have obtained a majority of the total number of votes cast.

Article 57. There shall be elected an alternate for each Senator.

Article 58. Each Senator shall serve four years. The Senate shall be renewed by half every two years.

Article 59. The qualifications necessary to be a Senator shall be the same as those necessary to be a Representative, excepting that of age, which shall be over thirty-five on the day of election.

Article 60. Each House shall be the judge of the election of its members and shall decide all questions arising therefrom.

Its decisions shall be final.

Article 61. Representatives and Senators are inviolable for opinions expressed by them in the discharge of their duties, and shall never be called to account for them.

Article 62. Representatives and Senators shall be disqualified during the terms for which they have been elected from holding any Federal or State commission or office for which any emolument is received without previous permission of the respective House; in the event of their accepting such commission or office they shall forthwith lose their representative character for such time as they shall hold such appointive office. The same provision shall apply to alternate representatives and senators, when in active service. The violation of this provision shall be punished by forfeiture of the office of Representative or Senator.

Article 63. The Houses shall not open their sessions nor exercise their functions without a quorum, in the Senate of two-thirds, and in the House of Representatives of a majority of the total membership; but the members present of either House shall meet on the day appointed by law and compel the attendance of the absentees within the next thirty days, and they shall warn them that failure to comply with this provision shall be taken to be a refusal of office, and the corresponding alternates shall be summoned forthwith; the latter shall have a similar period within which to present themselves, and on their failure to do so the seats shall be declared vacant and new elections called.

Representatives or Senators who shall be absent during ten consecutive days without proper cause or without leave of the President of the respective House, notice of which shall be duly communicated to the House, shall be understood as waiving their right to attend until the next session, and their alternates shall be summoned without delay.

If there shall be no quorum to organize either of the Houses or to continue their labors, once organized, the alternates shall be ordered to present themselves as soon as possible for the purpose of taking office until the expiration of the thirty days hereinbefore mentioned.

Article 64. No Representative or Senator who shall fail to attend any daily session without proper cause or without previous permission of the respective House, shall be entitled to the compensation corresponding to the day on which he shall have been absent.

Article 65. The Congress shall meet on the first day of September of each year in regular session for the consideration of the following matters:

I. To audit the accounts of the previous year which shall be submitted to the House of Representatives not later than ten days after the opening of the session. The audit shall not be confined to determining whether the expenditures do or do not conform with the respective items in the budget, but shall comprise an examination of the exactness of, and authorization for, payments made thereunder, and of any liability arising from such payments.

No other secret items shall be permitted than those which the budget may consider necessary as such; these amounts shall be paid out by the secretaries of executive departments under written orders of the President.

II. To examine, discuss and approve the budget for the next fiscal year, and to lay such taxes as may be needed to meet the expenditures.

III. To study, discuss and vote on all bills presented and to discuss all other matters incumbent upon the Congress by virtue of this Constitution.

Article 66. The regular session of the Congress shall last the period necessary to deal with all of the matters mentioned in the foregoing article, but it may not be extended beyond the thirty-first day of December of the same year. Should both Houses fail to agree as to adjournment prior to the above date, the matter shall be decided by the Executive.

Article 67. The Congress shall meet in extraordinary session whenever so summoned by the President, but in such event it shall consider only the matter or matters submitted to it by the President, who shall enumerate it or them in the respective call. The President shall have power to convene in extraordinary session only one of the Houses when the matter to be referred to it pertains to its exclusive jurisdiction.

Article 68. Both Houses shall hold their meetings in the same place and shall not move to another without having first agreed upon the moving and the time and manner of accomplishing it, as well as upon the place of meeting, which shall be the same for both Houses. If both Houses agree to change their meeting place but disagree as to the time, manner and place the President shall settle the question by choosing one of the two proposals. Neither House may suspend its sessions for more than three days without the consent of the other.

Article 69. The President of the Republic shall attend at the opening of the sessions of the Congress, whether regular or extraordinary, and shall submit a report in writing; this report shall, in the former case, relate to the general state of the Union; and in the latter, it shall explain to the Congress or to the House addressed the reasons or causes which rendered the call necessary and the matters requiring immediate attention.

Article 70. Every measure of the Congress shall be in the form of a law or decree. The laws or decrees shall be communicated to the Executive after having been signed by the Presidents of both Houses and by one of the secretaries of each. When promulgated, the enacting clause shall read as follows:

The Congress of the United Mexican States decrees (text of the law or decree).

SECTION II

Origin and Formation of the Laws

Article 71. The right to originate legislation pertains:

- I. To the President of the Republic;
- II. To the Representatives and Senators of the Congress;
- III. To the State Legislatures.

Bills submitted by the President of the Republic, by State Legislatures or by delegations of the States shall be at once referred to committee. Those introduced by Representatives or Senators shall be subject to the rules of procedure.

Article 72. Bills, action on which shall not pertain exclusively to one of the Houses, shall be discussed first by one and then by the other, according to the rules of procedure as to the form, time of presentation and other details relative to discussions and votes.

(a) After a bill has been approved in the House where it originated it shall be sent to the other House for consideration. If passed by the latter it shall be transmitted to the President who, if he has no observations to make thereto, shall immediately promulgate it.

(b) Bills not returned by the Executive within ten working days with his observations to the House in which they originated, shall be considered approved, unless during the said ten days the Congress shall have adjourned or suspended its sessions, in which event they shall be returned on the first working day after the Congress shall have reconvened.

(c) Bills rejected in whole or in part by the Executive shall be returned with his observations to the House where they originated. They shall be discussed anew by this House and if confirmed by a two-thirds majority vote of the total membership shall be sent to the other House for reconsideration. If approved by it, also by the same majority vote, the bill shall become law and shall be returned to the Executive for promulgation.

The voting in both Houses shall be by yeas and nays.

(d) Bills totally rejected by the House not originating them shall be returned with the proper observations to the House of origin. If examined anew and approved by a majority of the members present, they shall be returned to the House rejecting them, which shall once again take them under consideration, and if approved by it, likewise by the same majority vote, they shall be sent to the Executive for the purposes of Clause (a); but if the said House fail to approve them, they shall not be reintroduced in the same session.

(e) Bills rejected in part or modified or amended by the House of revision shall be discussed anew in the House of origin, but the discussion shall be confined to the portion rejected or to the amendments or additions, without the approved articles being altered in any respect. If the additions or amendments made by the House of revision be approved by a majority vote of the members present in the House of origin, the bill shall be transmitted to the Executive for the purposes of Clause (a); but if the amendments or additions by the House of revision be rejected by a majority vote of the House of origin they shall be returned to the former House in order that the reasons set forth by the latter may be taken into consideration.

(f) The same formalities as are required for the enactment of laws shall be observed for their interpretation, amendment or repeal.

(g) No bill rejected in the House of origin before passing to the other House shall be reintroduced during the session of that year.

(h) Legislative measures may be originated in either House, excepting bill-dealing with loans, taxes or impost, or with the raising of troops which must have their origin in the House of Representatives.

(i) Whenever a bill shall be presented to one House it shall be first discussed there unless one month shall have elapsed since it was referred to committee and not reported, in which event an identical bill may be presented and discussed in the other House.

(j) The President shall not make any observations touching the resolutions of the Congress or of either House when acting as an electoral body or as a grand jury, nor when the House of Representatives shall declare that there are grounds to impeach any high federal authority for official offences.

Nor shall he make any observations touching the order for a call issued by the Permanent Committee as provided in Article 84.

Article 97. All Circuit and District Judges shall be appointed by the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation; they shall have such qualifications as by law required, shall serve four years and shall not be removed except by impeachment proceedings or for incapacity to discharge their duties, in accordance with the law.

The Supreme Court of Justice may remove the District Judges from one District to another, or it may fix their seats in another locality, as it may deem most advantageous to the public business. A similar procedure shall be observed in the case of Circuit Judges.

The Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation may likewise appoint auxiliary Circuit and District Judges to assist in the labors of such courts as have an excessive amount of business, in order that the administration of justice may be speedy; it shall also name one or more of its members or some District or Circuit Judge or shall designate one or more special commissioners, whenever it shall deem it advisable or on the request of the President or of either House or of any State Governor, solely for the purpose of inquiring into the behavior of any judge or federal justice or into any fact or facts which amount to a violation of any individual rights or to the subversion of the popular will or any other offense punishable by Federal statute.

The Circuit and District Courts shall be assigned among the several Justices of Supreme Court who shall visit them periodically, shall observe the conduct of their judges, listen to any complaint presented against them and perform all such other acts as the law may require. The Supreme Court shall appoint and remove at will its clerk of the court and other employees on the roster established by law. The Circuit and District Judges shall likewise appoint and remove at will their respective clerks and employees.

The Supreme Court shall choose each year one of its members to act as Chief Justice, with the right of re-election.

Each Justice of the Supreme Court on assuming office shall make an affirmation before Congress, or if this is in recess, before the Permanent Committee, as follows:

The Presiding Officer shall say: "Do you promise to perform faithfully and conscientiously the duties of justice of the Supreme Court of the Nation with which you have been charged, and to defend and enforce the Constitution of the United Mexican States and the laws arising thereunder, having ever in mind the welfare and prosperity of the Nation?" To which the Justice shall reply, "I do." On which the Presiding Officer shall answer: "If you fail to do so, may the Nation call you to account."

The Circuit and District Judges shall make the affirmation of office before the Supreme Court or before such other authority as law may determine.

Article 98. No temporary disability of a Justice of the Supreme Court of the Nation not exceeding one month shall be filled, provided there be otherwise a quorum. In the absence of a quorum the Congress, or in its recess the Permanent Committee, shall name a substitute selected from among the candidates submitted by the States for the election of the justice in question and not chosen, to serve during such disability. If the disability does not exceed two months, the Congress, or during its recess the Permanent Committee, shall choose at will a temporary justice.

In the event of the death, resignation or disqualification of any Justice of the Supreme Court, a new election shall be held by the Congress to fill this vacancy as provided in Article 96.

If the Congress shall not be in session, the Permanent Committee shall make a temporary appointment until such time as the Congress shall convene and proceed to the corresponding election.

Article 99. The resignation of a Justice of the Supreme Court of the Nation shall only be accepted for grave cause, approved by the Congress, to whom the resignation shall be tendered. In the recesses of the Congress the power to act on this matter belongs to the Permanent Committee.

Article 100. The Supreme Court shall grant all leaves of absence of its members, when they do not exceed one month; such as do exceed this period shall be granted by the House of Representatives, or during its recess by the Permanent Committee.

Article 101. No Justice of the Supreme Court, circuit or district judge, nor clerk of any of these courts shall under any circumstances accept any State, Federal or private commission or office, excepting honorary titles from scientific, literary or charitable associations. The violation of this provision shall work a forfeiture of office.

Article 102. The office of the Public Attorney shall be organized in accordance with the law, and its officers shall be appointed and removed at will by the Executive. They shall be under the direction of an Attorney General who shall possess the same qualifications as are required for the office of Justice of the Supreme Court.

The Public Attorneys shall be charged with the judicial prosecution of all Federal offenses; they shall accordingly sue out all orders of arrest, assemble and offer all evidence as to the responsibility of the accused, see that the trials are conducted in due order so that the administration of justice may be speedy, pray the imposition of sentence, and in general take part in all matters required by law.

The Attorney General of the Republic shall personally intervene in matters to which the Federal Government is a party, in cases affecting ministers, diplomatic agents and consuls general, and in all controversies between two or more States of the Union, between the Federal Government and a State or between the several Powers of a State. The Attorney General may either personally or through one of the Public Attorneys take part in all other cases in which the Public Attorneys are called upon to act.

The Attorney General shall be the legal advisor of the Government, and both he and the Public Attorneys under his orders shall faithfully obey the law and shall be liable for all breaches or for any violations which they may incur in the discharge of their duties.

Article 103. The Federal tribunals shall take cognizance of:

I. All controversies arising out of laws or acts of the authorities which shall infringe any personal guaranties.

II. All controversies arising out of laws or acts of the Federal authorities which limit or encroach upon the sovereignty of the States.

III. All controversies arising out of laws or acts of the State authorities which invade the sphere of the Federal authorities.

Article 104. The Federal Tribunals shall have jurisdiction over:

I. All controversies of a civil or criminal nature arising out of the application and enforcement of the Federal laws, or out of treaties concluded with foreign Powers. Whenever such controversies affect only private rights, the regular local courts of the States, the Federal District and Territories shall, at the election of the plaintiff, assume jurisdiction. Appeal may be had from all judgments of first instance to the next higher tribunal of the same court in which the case was first heard. Appeal may be taken from sentences of second instance to the Supreme Court of Justice, which appeal shall be prepared, submitted and prosecuted, in accordance with the procedure provided by law.

II. All cases pertaining to admiralty law.

III. All cases to which the Federation may be a party.

IV. All cases arising between two or more States, or between any State and the Federal Government, as well as those arising between the Courts of the Federal District and those of the Federal Government or of a State.

V. All cases arising between a State and one or more citizens of another State.

VI. All cases concerning diplomatic agents and consuls.

Article 105. The Supreme Court of Justice shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all controversies arising between two or more States, between the powers of government of any State as to the constitutionality of their acts, or between one or more States and the Federal Government, and in all cases to which the Federal Government may be a party.

Article 106. The Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation shall likewise have exclusive jurisdiction to determine all questions of jurisdiction between the Federal tribunals, between these and those of the States, or between those of one State and those of another.

Article 107. All controversies mentioned in Article 103 shall be prosecuted by the injured party in accordance with the judicial forms and procedure which the law shall establish, subject to the following conditions:

I. The judgment shall always be so drawn as to affect exclusively private individuals, and shall confine itself to affording them redress in the special case to which the complaint refers; but it shall make no general statement as to the law or the act that may have formed the basis for the complaint.

II. In civil or penal suits, excepting those mentioned in Clause IX hereof, the writ of amparo shall issue only against final judgments when no other ordinary recourse is available by which these judgments may be modified or amended, if the violation of the law shall have occurred in the judgment, or if, although committed during the course of the trial, objection was duly noted and protest entered against the denial of reparation, and provided further that if committed in first instance it shall have been invoked in second instance as a violation of the law.

Notwithstanding the foregoing provision, the Supreme Court may in penal cases waive any defects in the petition when there has been a manifest violation of the law which has left the petitioner without recourse, or when he has been tried by a law not strictly applicable to the case, provided failure to take advantage of this violation has been merely an oversight.

III. In civil or penal suits the writ of amparo shall issue only if substantial portions of the rules of procedure have been violated, and provided further that the said violation shall deprive the petitioner of means of defense.

IV. In addition to the case mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, the writ of amparo shall issue only on a final judgment in a civil suit—provided the requirements set forth in Clause II hereof have been complied with—when the judgment shall be contrary to the letter of the law applicable to the case or contrary to its legal interpretation, when it includes persons, actions, defenses or things which have not been the object of the suit, or finally when all these have not been included either through omission or express refusal.

When the writ of amparo is sought against mesne judgments, in accordance with the provisions of the foregoing clause, these rules shall be observed, as far as applicable.

V. In penal suits, the authorities responsible for the violation shall stay the execution of final judgment against which the writ of amparo has been sought; for this purpose the petitioner shall, within the period set by law, give notice, under oath, to the said authorities of the interposition of this recourse, accompanying it with two copies of the petition, one of which shall be delivered to the opposing party and the other filed.

VI. The execution of a final judgment in civil suits shall only be stayed when the petitioner shall give bond to cover damages occasioned thereby, unless the other party shall give a counter bond (1) to guarantee that the normal conditions and relations previously existing be restored, and (2) to pay the corresponding damages, in the event of the granting of the amparo. In such event the interposition of the recourse amparo shall be communicated as provided in the foregoing clause.

VII. If a writ of amparo be sought against a final judgment, a certified copy of such portions of the record as the petitioner may desire shall be requested from the authority responsible for the violation; to this there shall be added such portions as the other party may desire and a clear and succinct statement by the said authority of the justification of the act protested; note shall be made of this on the record.

VIII. When a writ of amparo is sought against a final judgment, the petition shall be brought before the Supreme Court; this petition, together with the copy required by Clause VII, shall be either presented to the Supreme Court or sent through the authority responsible for the violation or through the District Court of the corresponding State. The Supreme Court shall render judgment without any other formality or procedure than the petition, the document presented by the other party and that of the Attorney General or the Public Attorney he may name in his stead, and shall comprise no other legal question than that contained in the complaint.

IX. When the acts of an authority other than the judicial are involved or the acts of the judiciary exercised outside of the suit or after the termination thereof, or acts committed during the suit whose execution is of impossible reparation, or which affect persons not parties to the suit, the writ of amparo shall be sought before the District Court within whose jurisdiction is located the place where the act protested was committed or attempted; the procedure in this case shall be confined to the report of the authority and to a hearing, the call for which shall be issued in the same order of the court as that calling for the report. This hearing shall be held at as early a date as possible, the testimony of both parties offered, arguments heard which shall not exceed one hour for each side, and finally the judgment which shall be pronounced at the same hearing. The judgment of the District Court shall be final, if the interested parties do not appeal to the Supreme Court within the period set by law and in the manner prescribed by Clause VIII.

In case of a violation of the guaranties of Articles 16, 19 and 20, recourse shall be had through the appellate court of the court committing the breach or to the corresponding District Court. An appeal against the decision of any of these courts may be taken to the Supreme Court.

If the District Judge shall not reside in the same locality as the official guilty of the violation, the judge before whom the petition of amparo shall be submitted shall be determined by law; this judge shall be authorized to suspend temporarily the execution of the act protested, in accordance with the terms established by law.

X. Any official failing to suspend the execution of the act protested, when in duty bound to do so, or when he admits an insufficient or improper bond, shall be turned over to the proper authorities; the civil and penal liability of the official shall in these cases be a joint liability with the person offering the bond and his surety.

XI. If after the granting of an amparo, the guilty official shall persist in the act or acts against which the petition of amparo was filed, or shall seek to render of no effect the judgment of the Federal authority, he shall be forthwith removed from office and turned over for trial to the corresponding District Court.

XII. Wardens and jailers who fail to receive a duly certified copy of the formal order of commitment within the seventy-two hours granted by Article 19, reckoned from the time the accused is placed at the disposal of the court, shall bring this fact to the attention of the court, immediately upon expiration of this period; and if the proper order be not received within the next three hours the accused shall be set at liberty.

Any official who shall violate this provision and the article referred to in the foregoing paragraph shall be immediately turned over to the proper authorities. Any official or agent thereof who, after an arrest has been made, shall fail to place the accused at the disposition of the court within the next twenty-four hours shall himself be turned over to the proper authority.

If the detention be effected outside the locality in which the court is situated, there shall be added to the period mentioned in the preceding sentence the time necessary to travel from the said locality to that where the detention took place

TITLE IV

Responsibility of Officials

Article 108. Senators and Representatives of Congress, Justices of the Supreme Court, Secretaries of Executive Departments and the Attorney General of the Republic shall be liable for all common offenses committed during their term of office, as well as for all official offenses or acts of commission or omission which they may incur in the discharge of their duties.

Governors of States and members of State Legislatures shall be liable for violation of the Constitution and the Federal laws.

The President of the Republic may only be impeached during his term of office for high treason and common offenses of a serious character.

Article 109. If the offense belongs to the common order the House of Representatives, acting as a grand jury, shall determine by a majority vote of its total membership whether there is or is not any ground for proceeding against the accused.

If the finding be favorable to the accused, no further action shall be taken; but such finding shall not be a bar to the prosecution of the charge so soon as the constitutional privilege shall cease, since the finding of the House does not in any way determine the merits of the charge.

If the finding be adverse, the accused shall ipso facto be removed from office and be placed at the disposition of the ordinary courts of justice, except in the case of the President of the Republic, who may only be impeached before the Senate, as in the case of an official offense.

Article 110. No constitutional privilege shall be extended to any high Federal functionary when tried for official offenses, misdemeanors or omissions committed by him in the discharge of any public function or commission, during the time in which, according to law, the privilege is enjoyed. This provision shall be applicable to cases of common offenses committed under the same circumstances. In order that the proceedings may be instituted when the functionary returns to the exercise of his own functions, the rules set forth in Article 104 of the Constitution shall be observed.

Article 111. The Senate acting as a grand jury shall try all cases of impeachment; but it may not institute such proceedings without a previous accusation brought by the House of Representatives.

If the Senate should, after hearing the accused and conducting such proceedings as it may deem advisable, determine by a majority vote of two-thirds of its total membership that the accused is guilty, the latter shall be forthwith removed from office by virtue of such decision, or be disqualified from holding any other office for such time as the law may determine.

When the same offense is punishable with an additional penalty, the accused shall be placed at the disposition of the regular authorities who shall judge and sentence him in accordance with the law.

In all cases embraced by this article and in those included by the preceding both the decisions of the Grand Jury and the findings of the House of Representatives shall be final.

Any person shall have the right to denounce before the House of Representatives offenses of a common order or of an official character committed by high Federal functionaries; and whenever the said House of Representatives shall determine that there exist good grounds for impeachment proceedings before the Senate, it shall name a committee from among its own members to sustain the charges brought.

The Congress shall as soon as possible enact a law as to the responsibility of all Federal officials and employees which shall fix as official offenses all acts of commission or omission which may prejudice the public interest and efficient administration, even though such acts may not heretofore have been considered offenses. These officials shall be tried by a jury in the same manner as provided for trials by jury in Article 20.

Article 112. No pardon shall be granted the offender in cases of impeachment.

Article 113. The responsibility for official breaches and offenses may only be enforced during such time as the functionary shall remain in office and for one year thereafter.

Article 114. In civil cases no privilege or immunity in favor of any public functionary shall be recognized.

Article 120. The State Governors are bound to publish and enforce the Federal laws.

Article 121. Full faith and credit shall be given in each State of the Federation to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of all the other States. The Congress shall by general laws prescribe the manner of proving the said acts, records and proceedings and the effect thereof.

Labor and Social Welfare

Article 123. The Congress and the State Legislatures shall make laws relative to labor with due regard for the needs of each region of the Republic, and in conformity with the following principles, and these principles and laws shall govern the labor of skilled and unskilled workmen, employees, domestic servants and artisans, and in general every contract of labor.

I. Eight hours shall be the maximum limit of a day's work.

II. The maximum limit of night work shall be seven hours. Unhealthy and dangerous occupations are forbidden to all women and to children under sixteen years of age. Night work in factories is likewise forbidden to women and to children under sixteen years of age; nor shall they be employed in commercial establishments after ten o'clock at night.

III. The maximum limit of a day's work for children over twelve and under sixteen years of age shall be six hours. The work of children under twelve years of age shall not be made the subject of a contract.

IV. Every workman shall enjoy at least one day's rest for every six days' work.

V. Women shall not perform any physical work requiring considerable physical effort during the three months immediately preceding parturition; during the month following parturition they shall necessarily enjoy a period of rest and shall receive their salaries or wages in full and retain their employment and the rights they may have acquired under their contracts. During the period of lactation they shall enjoy two extraordinary daily periods of rest of one-half hour each, in order to nurse their children.

VI. The minimum wage to be received by a workman shall be that considered sufficient, according to the conditions prevailing in the respective region of the country, to satisfy the normal needs of the life of the workman, his education and his lawful pleasures, considering him as the head of the family. In all agricultural, commercial, manufacturing or mining enterprises the workmen shall have the right to participate in the profits in the manner fixed in Clause IX of this article.

VIII. The minimum wage shall be exempt from attachment, set-off or discount.

XI. When owing to special circumstances it becomes necessary to increase the working hours, there shall be paid as wages for the overtime one hundred per cent more than those fixed for regular time. In no case shall the overtime exceed three hours nor continue for more than three consecutive days; and no women of whatever age nor boys under sixteen years of age may engage in overtime work.

XII. In every agricultural, industrial, mining or other class of work employers are bound to furnish their workmen comfortable and sanitary dwelling-places, for which they may charge rents not exceeding one-half of one per cent per month of the assessed value of the properties. They shall likewise establish schools, dispensaries and other services necessary to the community. If the factories are located within inhabited places and more than one hundred persons are employed therein, the first of the above-mentioned conditions shall be complied with.

XIII. Furthermore, there shall be set aside in these labor centers, whenever their population exceeds two hundred inhabitants, a space of land not less than five thousand square meters for the establishment of public markets, and the construction of buildings designed for municipal services and places of amusement. No saloons nor gambling houses shall be permitted in such labor centers.

XIV. Employers shall be liable for labor accidents and occupational diseases arising from work; therefore, employers shall pay the proper indemnity, according to whether death or merely temporary or permanent disability has ensued, in accordance with the provisions of law. This liability shall remain in force even though the employer contract for the work through an agent.

XV. Employers shall be bound to observe in the installation of their establishments all the provisions of law regarding hygiene and sanitation and to adopt adequate measures to prevent accidents due to the use of machinery, tools and working materials, as well as to organize work in such a manner as to assure the greatest guaranties possible for the health and lives of workmen compatible with the nature of the work, under penalties which the law shall determine.

XVI. Workmen and employers shall have the right to unite for the defense of their respective interests, by forming syndicates, unions, etc.

XVII. The law shall recognize the right of workmen and employers to strike and to lockout.

XVIII. In the case of public services, the workmen shall be obliged to give notice ten days in advance to the Board of Conciliation and Arbitration of the date set for the suspension of work. Strikes shall only be considered unlawful when the majority of the strikers shall resort to acts of violence against persons or property, or in case of war when the strikers belong to establishments and services dependent on the government. Employees of military manufacturing establishments of the Federal Government shall not be included in the provisions of this clause, inasmuch as they are a dependency of the national army.

XIX. Lockouts shall only be lawful when the excess of production shall render it necessary to shut down in order to maintain prices reasonably above the cost of production, subject to the approval of the Board of Conciliation and Arbitration.

XX. Differences or disputes between capital and labor shall be submitted for settlement to a board of conciliation and arbitration to consist of an equal number of representatives of the workmen and of the employers and of one representative of the Government.

XXI. If the employer shall refuse to submit his differences to arbitration or to accept the award rendered by the Board, the labor contract shall be considered as terminated, and the employer shall be bound to indemnify the workman by the payment to him of three months' wages, in addition to the liability which he may have incurred by reason of the dispute. If the workman reject the award, the contract will be held to have terminated.

XXII. An employer who discharges a workman without proper cause or for having joined a union or syndicate or for having taken part in a lawful strike shall be bound, at the option of the workman, either to perform the contract or to indemnify him by the payment of three months' wages. He shall incur the same liability if the workman shall leave his service on account of the lack of good faith on the part of the employer or of maltreatment either as to his own person or that of his wife, parents, children or brothers or sisters. The employer cannot evade this liability when the maltreatment is inflicted by subordinates or agents acting with his consent or knowledge.

XXIII. Claims of workmen for salaries or wages accrued during the past year and other indemnity claims shall be preferred over any other claims, in cases of bankruptcy or composition.

XXIV. Debts contracted by workmen in favor of their employers or their employers' associates, subordinates or agents, may only be charged against the workmen themselves and in no case and for no reason collected from the members of his family. Nor shall such debts be paid by the taking of more than the entire wages of the workman for any one month.

XXV. No fee shall be charged for finding work for workmen by municipal offices, employment bureaus or other public or private agencies.

XXVI. Every contract of labor between a Mexican citizen and a foreign principal shall be legalized before the competent municipal authority and viséed by the consul of the nation to which the workman is undertaking to go, on the understanding that, in addition to the usual clauses, special and clear provisions shall be inserted for the payment by the foreign principal making the contract of the cost to the laborer of repatriation.

XXVII. The following stipulations shall be null and void and shall not bind the contracting parties, even though embodied in the contract:

(a) Stipulations providing for inhuman day's work an account of its notorious excessiveness, in view of the nature of the work.

(b) Stipulations providing for a wage rate which in the judgment of the Board of Conciliation and Arbitration is not remunerative.

(c) Stipulations providing for a term of more than one week before the payment of wages.

(d) Stipulations providing for the assigning of places of amusement, eating places, cafes, taverns, saloons or shops for the payment of wages, when employees of such establishments are not involved.

(e) Stipulations involving a direct or indirect obligation to purchase articles of consumption in specified shops or places.

(f) Stipulations permitting the retention of wages by way of fines.

(g) Stipulations constituting a waiver on the part of the workman of the indemnities to which he may become entitled by reason of labor accidents or occupational diseases, damages for breach of contract, or for discharge from work.

(h) All other stipulations implying the waiver of any right vested in the workman by labor laws.

XXVIII. The law shall decide what property constitutes the family patrimony. These goods shall be inalienable and shall not be mortgaged, nor attached, and may be bequeathed with simplified formalities in the succession proceedings.

XXIX. Institutions of popular insurance established for old age, sickness, life, unemployment, accident and others of a similar character, are considered of social utility; the Federal and State Governments shall therefore encourage the organization of institutions of this character in order to instill and inculcate popular habits of thrift.

XXX. Cooperative associations for the construction of cheap and sanitary dwelling houses for workmen shall likewise be considered of social utility whenever these properties are designed to be acquired in ownership by the workmen within specified periods.

No. 326

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 6, 1917.

SIR: Article 27, paragraph 1, of the Mexican Constitution, promulgated February 5, 1917, contains the following provisions:

Only Mexicans by birth or naturalization have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters and other appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop lands, waters or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. The Nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree before the Department of Foreign Affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to such property, and accordingly not to invoke the protection of their Governments in respect to the same, under penalty, in case of breach, of forfeiture to the Nation of property so acquired. Within a zone of 100 kilometers from the frontiers, and of 50 kilometers from the sea coast, no foreigner shall under any conditions acquire direct ownership of lands and waters.

It seems quite clear from this language of the Constitution that the renunciation of national rights is intended to cover only the property which may be acquired, but the Department desires to know whether this clause is being construed by the Mexican Government as calling for complete renunciation of American citizenship.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in accordance with the Transitory Article No. 6 of the recently adopted Constitution, the Congress met in extraordinary session on the 15th instant. The First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, charged with the Executive Power of the Nation, appeared before it to give an account of his stewardship, and read a long report of the events which have taken place since the beginning of the revolution.

HENRY P. FLETCHER

Report of President-elect Venustiano Carranza covering the period of the revolution from February 18, 1913, to April 15, 1917, read at the formal opening of Congress, April 15, 1917

DEPUTIES AND SENATORS: The Revolution of 1910, headed by the illustrious apostle Francisco I. Madero, having triumphed, the legitimate powers of the Republic were established by the sovereign will of the people, in substitution for the military dictatorship which emanated from the Plan of Tuxtepec, and which had weighed heavily upon the country for so many years; but the elements of the old régime could not be satisfied with their defeat, and thus began, from the first days of the establishment of the legitimate Government, the reactionary agitations which quickly came to a head in the military uprising at Vera Cruz, inspired by General Félix Díaz and seconded by various military men who were garrisoning that port in October 1912.

The mildness of the proceedings instituted against those responsible for this criminal attempt, and the mistake made of bringing to this capital the man principally responsible for the same, where all the hatreds which the new régime (because of the large interests which it necessarily had to wound) had engendered in the favorites of the former dictatorship, were boiling with extreme activity, were the primary reasons which brought about the strengthening of the reaction and permitted it to acquire the form and organization necessary to destroy the legitimate authority, and to again supplant it with a new military power, which openly proclaimed itself everywhere as being indispensable for the maintenance of order among the Mexican people.

It was inevitable, therefore, that the rebellion should develop fatally, as it did, in the early hours of the morning of Sunday, February 9, 1913, when the School of Aspirantes and some of the Federal Army, led away from their duty through the maneuvers of General Félix Díaz and Generals Bernardo Reyes and Manuel Mondragón, openly rose in arms.

From that moment, therefore, the fight against the legitimate Government began, a fight in which it was to be expected that the latter would easily win, due on the one hand to the small number of mutinous troops, and on the other, to the many and important elements which the Government possessed to reduce the rebels to submission; but, unfortunately, the evil was deep-rooted, ambition had no bounds, and treason contaminating all, had drowned completely the sentiment of duty and extinguished in its entirety military honor. It was thus that General Victoriano Huerta, to whom at an ill hour had been entrusted the defense of our institutions and the support of the Federal Powers, brought upon himself and upon the Army the most odious stain recorded in our history, by usurping the Supreme Power of the country on the afternoon of February 18, imprisoning the President of the Republic, the Vice President and the Cabinet.

The Government of the State of Coahuila, of which I was at that time in charge, had followed with the keenest interest all the developments of the struggle; for this reason I was greatly surprised at the receipt of the telegram from General Huerta, received at a late hour of the date indicated, stating that, authorized by the Senate, he had assumed the Executive Power and that the President and his Cabinet were prisoners.

Upon receipt of Huerta's message I resolved immediately to assume a firm attitude against so great a crime, and putting my decision into practice I, at an early hour of the following day, transmitted the message in question to the State Legislature. Inasmuch as the Senate was not empowered to appoint the First Magistrate of the Nation, and therefore, had not the right legally to authorize General Huerta to assume the character of President of the Republic, I declared that I was resolved to comply with the sacred duties of my office and trusted that the decision of the State Legislature would be in accord with the principles of legality and with the interests of the Fatherland.

Now is the time to express, as I do with great pleasure, the sincerest admiration for the Representatives who formed the Legislature of Coahuila, for the reason that on the same date, February 19, Decree No. 1421 was issued denying recognition of General Huerta as Chief of the Executive Power, as well as recognition of his acts; extraordinary faculties in all branches of the public administration were granted to the State Executive for the purpose of raising forces to assist in the upholding of the Constitutional order in the Republic; and lastly, it was ordered that the State Governments and the Chiefs of the Federal forces, of the Rurales and of the auxiliary forces of the Federation, be invited to second the attitude of the Coahuila Government.

In compliance with this decree, the Government of which I had charge issued the circular of February 19, in which, after an exposition of the offenses committed by General Huerta, I concluded by saying that the "Government under my charge, complying with the sovereign mandates of our Political Constitution, obedient to our institutions, faithful to its duties, and animated by the purest patriotism, felt compelled to disown and disavow that unqualifiable crime committed against our Fundamental Law, and invited the Governments and all the Chiefs of the States in the Republic to second the movement for law and order."

It is known to all that General Huerta, desiring that an appearance of legality be given to the usurpation he had just committed, forcibly obliged the President and Vice President of the Republic to tender their resignations, so that he himself might be appointed Minister of Government by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, who in turn assumed the Presidency of the Republic in place of the Constitutional President, only to resign this position immediately in order that it might pass to Huerta.

This proceeding, obviously made effective by force of arms, could not legitimize for a single instant the usurpation committed against the Powers legally constituted, nor much less give the slightest appearance of constitutionality to all that intriguing which so enveloped all the institutions of the country, especially when a few days later Messrs. Madero and Pino Suárez were assassinated to the horror of the entire world, their disappearance at any cost being the desire of the leaders of the military uprising, who imagined that in this manner they could tranquilly enjoy the fruits of their crimes.

Coincident with these events the Consul and Vice Consul of the United States called on me in the Government Palace at Saltillo, stating that they had instructions from the American Ambassador, Henry Lane Wilson, to tell me to abandon my attitude of refusing to recognize the Government of General Huerta, because, according to their statements, resistance would be useless in view of the fact that the usurper had immense resources available to put down the Coahuila movement; and they informed me that the Huerta Government had just been recognized by all Governments having accredited representatives in Mexico City, including the Government of the United States. They added, also by instructions of Ambassador Wilson, that all the Governors of States had accepted the new order of things and that I was the only one who maintained a rebellious attitude. To all this I answered that I was aware of the resources at the disposition of the usurpers and of the reduced state of those in my possession, but that I would accept no arrangement and would fulfil my duty as Governor of the State, whatever might be the outcome of the struggle. Later I obtained a copy of the message on the subject sent by Wilson to the Consul and Vice Consul directing them to exert pressure on me and obtain my submission to the "Cuartelazo" Government.

A few days later when I was at my headquarters at Villa de Arteaga, Vice Consul Silliman came to see me again and asked me to state the conditions I would prescribe to avoid war, and he promised to deliver my statement to General Huerta through Ambassador Lane Wilson. I gave him a note to the Ambassador in which I referred to the statements that had been communicated to me in my former interview with the Consul and Vice Consul of the United States, and stated that in order to avoid an armed struggle I demanded that Victoriano Huerta, Félix Díaz, Aureliano Blanquet, and all others connected with the "Cuartelazo" and with the assassination of the President and Vice President of the Republic should leave the country; that the forces that had contributed to the downfall of the legitimate Government should evacuate the capital and should be replaced by forces of the States of Coahuila and Sonora, that Congress should designate a legal successor for the President, and that the new Government on being installed should determine the proper punishment for those soldiers who had failed in their duty.

Vice Consul Silliman promised to deliver this note at the capital of the Republic but I received no answer. I reiterate that its only purpose was to avoid the shedding of blood.

It is opportune to correct at this point a statement made recently by ex-Secretary Knox, who declared in an interview for the press that the intervention of Ambassador Wilson was due to my having approached him requesting his mediation, which declaration is completely in error, since the events were as above stated.

The virile, enthusiastic and opportune protest of the Coahuila Legislature, made without measuring the dangers nor taking into account the insignificant resources available for so great an undertaking in a struggle against men who were equal to any extreme, without scruples and wholly lacking in moral sentiment, and amply supplied with every kind of necessary material, accomplished its purpose. The noble and generous action of the deputies in embracing the cause of law and order at the call of the Executive of the State was simply patriotism in action, conscious of its power, and destined soon to reveal itself by countless acts of heroism, to vindicate the outraged law and restore the lost liberties to the Mexican people; and since all magnificent acts are suggestive, this action everywhere found its response in the hearts of young men who immediately flew to the service of the cause of justice.

The Plan of Guadalupe of March 26, 1913 was the battle cry for the best element of the young manhood of Mexico launched to the four winds of the country against triumphant iniquity. This battle cry was nothing more than the vibrant and ringing declaration of the national sentiment—a declaration that reaffirmed the fundamental purpose, the deliberate will of the Mexican people no longer to permit autocracy again to dominate the destinies of the Nation, enforcing the will of an odious and hated class that for so many years has crushed the aspirations of the Republic, throttling every effort towards progress, killing all idea of liberty and keeping the Mexicans, under the pretext of saving them from anarchy, reduced to a condition of slavery. Such is the farce that has been made of democratic institutions that has served only to replace the will of the people by the imposition of favorites installed by the usurper of public power upon the condition that they serve as pliant instruments in the furtherance of his designs.

Accordingly, by the Plan of Guadalupe which was adopted by the Permanent Committee of the Coahuila Legislature in its decree of April 19 of the same year issued at Piedras Negras, the questions of orderly government in opposition to usurpation, of law in opposition to mob rule, of free institutions in opposition to a military dictatorship, were completely established.

The call made to the Governors of the States exhorting them to support the attitude of Coahuila was responded to by Sonora only; for although the Governor of the State, José M. Maytorena, was not disposed to place himself on the side of law and order, the Legislature openly denounced the usurpation and appointed Ignacio L. Pesqueira, one of the members of the legislature, as acting governor, by decree of March 4, 1913 and refused to recognize Huerta.

The union of Sonora with Coahuila and consequently the adoption of the Plan of Guadalupe by that State took place the 18th of April following, the State being represented by Adolfo de la Huerta and Roberto V. Pesqueira, and also by Alvaro Obregón, Salvador Alvarado, who are today generals in the army, and by other military chiefs.

The contest having been decided upon, the Government entrusted to me had two important objects to accomplish; one, the organization of the public service so far as was possible with a state of war existing, in such a manner that those who took no part in the struggle should suffer the least possible injury; the other, the organization of the Constitutionalist Army in such manner as would enable it to accomplish its task and keep supplied with the elements necessary for its efficiency.

To accomplish the first of these objects the Government entrusted to me issued the decree of May 10, 1913 by which we established the fundamental rules establishing the rights of nationals and foreigners to collect indemnity for damages caused during the revolution of 1910 and those they might suffer during the campaign just entered upon.

Justice as well as public convenience imperiously demanded such a measure, partly because since we were dealing with a war which had for its supreme object the betterment of the Mexican people, the expenses resulting from it should not be borne solely by those persons living in the regions in which the Constitutionalist Army operated, who furnished supplies which could not be paid for immediately because of lack of finances, and the value of which became a debt against the nation to be paid in the manner and under the conditions to be prescribed in due time by a special law enacted for this purpose; also because the conduct of the Government was to be in accordance with the principles of strict morality and this demanded that the rights of foreigners should be respected and that they also should receive proper compensation for any contributions which were made for the public service.

Opportunity is taken here to state in order to avoid erroneous interpretation that the decree to which I have just referred does not treat of those damages that naturally accompany every civil war having their origin in unavoidable events which oftentimes paralyze commerce, such as the unprotected state of the centers of population, public highways and outlying settlements exposed to the ravages of those who, taking advantage of the disorder produced by public calamity, make attacks on life and property their constant aim and occupation; this decree covers only those damages resulting from the appropriations of property of individuals by the Constitutionalist authorities in accordance with the necessities of the service, as is made very clear by Article 3 of the decree and particularly so by the specific provisions of the declarations of the 10th of August 1913.

The circular of June 7, 1913 had the same object in view and was issued expressly to facilitate commerce between the United States of the North and the United Mexican States and for the purpose of avoiding in this manner the suspension of commercial relations between the two countries with resultant severe damage to the inhabitants of the two nations and with marked injury to the financial interests of the public treasury.

In addition, a measure of great importance for the attainment of the object mentioned was the decree of October 7, 1913, which organized the Constitutionalist Government by specifying the Secretaries of State to whom should be entrusted the various branches of the public administration and prescribing the duties that should be performed to meet efficiently the necessities of the moment and begin the institution of the reforms demanded by the social and economic conditions of the country.

Although the duties of the Secretaries of War, Government and Treasury were of transcendental importance for the organization of the army and its maintenance for the protection and the governing of the territory which step by step was being taken away from the usurper, and for the best possible provision of the supplies necessary to meet the daily increasing demands of the campaign, still the duties entrusted to the other Departments were no less necessary or important and any neglect of them would have resulted in my Government being uncertain in its acts and as to their final success.

From the very beginning I had the fixed idea, amply confirmed later on, that victory over the usurper of the public authority could not be gained without concentrating the attention in a special manner on impressing the public conscience with the conviction of the legality of the revolution, and of its necessity for the reestablishment of the authorities selected by the vote of the people, nor without adopting all those measures necessary to overthrow the enemy whether by depriving him of the means of subsistence, or by raising and opposing him with an army efficient not only in numbers but in quality as well.

With this in view and to accomplish the second purpose above mentioned, the office of the First Chief published the decree of April 20, 1913 calling together the generals, chiefs and officers of the liberating army and the Federal Army to organize the Constitutionalist Army, offering to guarantee them their positions in the permanent army on the success of the Constitutionalist cause, excepting only those generals, chiefs and officers who, in October 1912, took part in the rebellion of Vera Cruz, and those who took part in the military crime of February 1913.

I should say in passing that in addition to those chiefs who commanded the forces of Coahuila, Pablo González, Jesús Carranza, Cesáreo Castro, Francisco Coss and other officials, this call was answered only by the forces commanded by the present generals Jacinto B. Treviño, José Agustín Castro, Cándido Aguilar, Agustín Milan and other officials.

With the same purpose already referred to, the decree of May 1, 1913, was issued which put into effect the law of January 25, 1862, so that judgment might be passed on General Victoriano Huerta and his accomplices and those who conspired against the independence and security of the nation might be punished.

With the same object in view the decree of January 4, 1913 was issued which established six army corps and designated the regions controlled by the revolution. For a like purpose the decree of November 1, 1913 was issued putting into effect the laws of organization and jurisdiction of military tribunals. This decree and the other issued previously modified various provisions of former decrees as well as the law of January 25, 1862, and adapted them to the existing conditions; also the decree of July 31, 1914 was issued, providing that Military Judges of Instruction would have jurisdiction over federal crimes, provided that the prisoners should not be judged by the law of January 25.

I will not detain you by calling your attention to the importance and timeliness of these provisions, for their timeliness and importance are revealed by simply mentioning them; no one can fail to see that it was indispensable on the one hand to call to the Constitutionalist ranks all those who took part in the revolution of 1910 as well as the federals who were fully aware of their duties and were disposed to fulfill them, and on the other hand to indicate plainly that Huerta and all those who had assisted him in the "Cuartelazo" as well as those who had initiated the rebellion against the legitimate Government of the Republic would not be left unpunished.

It was also necessary to overcome all obstacles to the progress of the revolution, and with this in view, to punish severely any attempt on the part of the non-combatants who, not satisfied to withhold aid from the liberating party, offered various kinds of assistance to the enemy.

Moreover, I had to contend ceaselessly and with what means I had at hand, with the supporters of the usurper, and it was also necessary to preserve order in the Constitutionalist Army, while not permitting offenses in the civil community to go unpunished. This condition of affairs justified the organization of military tribunals and the extraordinary jurisdiction given them.

Further on in this report, and with the understanding that detailed reports will be made of the activities of the various Departments of Government covering the period from the beginning of the war to date, I will make a brief summary of the most important work of each Department in order that you may see the condition of the public administration in the entire country; but I wish to give a general idea of the more important events.

After having overthrown Huerta's army and forced the officials responsible for the crimes of February 1913 to leave the Republic, and after having obtained the unconditional surrender of the Federalist Army set forth in the treaty of Teoloyucan, I finally occupied the City of Mexico, and by way of complying with the third Article of the Plan of Guadalupe, I issued the decree of August 2, 1914 which prescribed that after that date the Chief of the Constitutionalist Army would have the Executive Power of the Nation.

This act not only happily completed the task undertaken by the Governor of Coahuila with the patriotic and zealous support of the Legislature of that State on the memorable date of March 26, 1913, when the then small Constitutionalist Army raised its banners, but it also signified that the time had arrived for the triumphant revolution to begin a new work, that of restoring the peace and order of the nation without delay.

Permit me to say that the decree to which I have referred clearly demonstrated that the revolution had progressed greatly in a comparatively short time, during which the nation had not suffered any exceedingly great sacrifices, nor any of the very serious damages inevitably attendant upon war, and the sacrifices and damages would have been quickly recompensed had not the spirit of discord once more been incited to light the torch of civil war, bringing greater calamities upon the country and endangering the existence of the Government.

The Government under my charge, at the time of the occupation of the city by the Constitutionalist Army, desired to enter upon the work of national reconstruction; and, desiring to build on a firm foundation and to work in accord with the Constitutionalist Army, thereby avoiding undesirable differences of opinion with their evil consequences, I called together under date of September 5, 1914, a convention of the governors and generals having command of forces, to meet in this city and this same building on the 1st of October 1914.

The only purpose of this assembly (and considering the elements composing it and the purpose for which it was convened, it could have had no other purpose) was to give the person in charge of the Executive Power of the Union a program of Government which would insure prompt and complete compliance with the revolutionary ideal of fundamental public necessities; true this ideal had not been reduced to written form but it was well defined in the public conscience and in the desires of the people, and above all in the conscience and desire of the citizen who had borne arms to save the Republic.

Unfortunately the purpose of the assembly referred to was immediately opposed, on one hand by the principal chiefs of the North objecting to attend on the pretext that in this city they could not express their opinions with complete liberty, and on the other hand because of the poor impression, formed no doubt in good faith, that some chiefs of the other divisions had formed of the mission entrusted to them.

The chiefs who attended the assembly which met in this city the 1st of October 1914 desiring to avoid the break that threatened in the ranks of the Constitutionalist Army, and after an exchange of ideas with those holding contrary views, agreed that the assembly should convene at Aguascalientes and there renew its work on the 10th of October 1914.

From the first moment the assembly at Aguascalientes revealed its tendencies and the ideas that inspired a large part of its members, consisting almost exclusively of the chiefs of the Division of the North; all this indicated that the chiefs who attended the assembly which met in this city had been deceived and that in order to give guaranties to the Zapatistas who were craftily invited on the pretext of accomplishing an impossible reconciliation, they had thereby delivered themselves almost defenseless into the hands of their enemies.

The assembly or convention of Aguascalientes, as it has been called, began, if I may make use of the term, with a new "cuartelazo", after the fashion of Huerta, for it deliberately assumed to represent the nation, declaring itself sovereign with absolute power to appoint the President of the Republic, and to legislate for all branches of the public administration. As has been seen, Huerta usurped the executive power of the nation; the convention of Aguascalientes usurped the legislative power, and attributed to that power a faculty which it does not possess, namely, to select the Chief Executive.

As we have seen, the Aguascalientes convention completely neutralized the purpose of the Junta convened by my Government to prepare a program for returning the country to a Constitutional Government; and it was not until the chiefs had gathered together for this convention with the best intentions possible, that they became convinced that they had been deceived, and that the purpose in view was simply to separate me from the high position in which I had been placed by my being Governor of Coahuila, and by the Plan of Guadalupe of March 26, 1913.

The weakness and corruption of the advisers of the General in charge of the Division of the North, had aroused in him the ambition to install himself as Provisional President of the Republic, and all his efforts were bent towards accomplishment of this purpose.

I shrank from entering upon a new campaign in which much blood surely would be shed, and the welfare of the nation would be destroyed; but the facts demonstrated to even the most casual observer that the individuals of the Division of the North had nothing to offer that was advantageous to the country, and that if the country were delivered to them they would unquestionably have guided it to destruction.

Therefore, much against my will, I had to decide to undertake a new struggle with the forces that had remained loyal to my government, and for the purpose of organizing them I proceeded to the port of Vera Cruz, where I could count on the help and assistance of a liberal and patriotic city, which received me with feverish enthusiasm and denied me no resources that might contribute to success.

To carry out this purpose further, I issued a decree in Córdoba November 20, 1914, in which it was provided the office of the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army and of the Executive Power of the Union, together with the offices of the Secretaries of State, should be established outside of the City of Mexico, and in such places as were best suited to the necessities of the campaign.

My first act, after establishing the residence of the First Chief in the port of Vera Cruz, was to formulate in precise and categorical terms the program which the Government under my charge was to develop and follow in the new period of war about to be initiated; this was absolutely necessary in view of the fact that the new struggle was to have a character entirely different from that carried on against Huerta, because we were dealing with a faction of the Constitutionalist Army that had rebelled against the supreme authority, and it was indispensable to demonstrate to the nation and to the entire world that in this new conflict neither I nor the chiefs and officers who had remained faithful to the Plan of Guadalupe, sought to satisfy mere personal ambitions; on the contrary, once and for all time to put an end to the vices of the past which had taken such deep root in the customs of the Mexican people, and which in more than a century had disturbed their political, economic and social advancement, blocking its progress, interfering with its welfare, and producing a state of constant turmoil, that was the principal cause of the oppressions that have been suffered, and which have been caused by the lack of equilibrium and due circumspection with respect to all the relations which are vital to the existence of a sovereign and free State.

Consequently, my first object was to formulate this program, which was accomplished in the additions made to the Plan of Guadalupe by Decree of December 12, 1914, additions which embraced all the reforms that the Mexican people needed in their institutions to enable them to accomplish seriously and usefully the work of regeneration, without which work they could not take a single step in the path of perfection nor aspire to self-government, but would remain as they had been, victims of the ambitions of the most audacious and subject to the caprices of the most strong.

The reception that these additions received at the hand of the public and the enthusiasm they aroused in the Constitutionalist Army are the best proofs that they were the expression of the national sentiment, and explain why they alone have been the most terrible arm which could be drawn against the rebels, who had no other ideal than that of enriching themselves, nor any other manner of realizing this ideal than by robbing and committing all sorts of crimes. A revolution that has not as its motive a necessity that will admit of no delay in its realization, and that does not aspire to giving real life to an idea of morality and justice, is nothing less than a crime against the existence of a nation.

The first condition for the existence of a State is order, and order cannot be had where there is no law or where it is violated constantly and with impunity; it is the law that determines the relations of the members of a nation among themselves and to the State, that fixes the sphere in which individuals should have liberty of action and the limits within which the organs of the public power should operate in order that the functions of society may encounter no obstacle to their many and legitimate manifestations. Where a man, merely because of a feeling of strength through being armed, believes himself capable of imposing his will on others, and where there is no respect for the life, the liberty and the property of other members of the social body, there can be no law nor morality—fundamental elements of good order. Where any agent whatsoever of public authority believes himself authorized to follow the impulse of caprice and has no curb to contain him in his outbursts of anger, nor sentiment that impels him to see in other men human beings who merit respect, there can be nothing but anarchy, which is the disordered tyranny of many, or despotism which is the tyranny of one only.

The factions which after the overthrow of Huerta opposed the Constitutionalist Government have been conspicuous by the total absence of respect for any law other than their own, due to a complete lack of order, or, what amounts to the same thing, to the complete absence of law. They go to war to kill, they fight for booty, their only guide is the caprice of each one in so far as he may satisfy it; justice for them is vengeance; the motive for an attack on the rights of another is personal antipathy, when it is not the simple desire to do damage; they strike, they wound, they assassinate, they destroy for the sole purpose of showing their strength; fury rouses their brute force to action; the instincts of the savage make them bloodthirsty, and they are irresistibly driven to acts of destruction as the occupation of their erring lives.

In conformity with the program to which I have referred, and which is condensed in the "Additions to the Plan of Guadalupe", my first act was to declare the dissolubility of marriage, in order to place the family on a foundation at one and the same time more rational and more human; later the liberty of the municipality was established as a fundamental condition to free government; and I ordered the immediate restoration to the towns of such lands as had been taken from them through the rapacity of the favorites of the last military dictators, and the presentation of land to those towns which lacked even the most elementary necessities of life.

The Government under my charge has devoted preferential attention to the study of reforms which should be made in the Constitution of 1857, as well as to the most careful study of the agrarian and labor problems, to the end that they might be solved in the most desirable manner; but with respect to the first of these, I found that reforms in the Constitution made by the office of the First Chief would furnish a pretext for continuing to disturb public order, not only to the armed factions, but also to the vanquished factions that formed a part of the old régimes, and this led me, as you know, to convene a Constitutional Congress, which has brought to a happy completion a most brilliant effort, and one that will be of the greatest importance in the history of the Mexican people. You are the first to be selected by the will of the people to represent them in the new life that begins to-day, and on congratulating the nation on the restoration of Constitutional order, I will now make a brief résumé of the present condition of the various departments of the public administration.

(The reports for the various Executive Departments were read and then President-elect Carranza concluded the reading of the report as follows:)

DEPUTIES AND SENATORS: I have finished the heavy load placed on my shoulders by the oath I took as Governor to protect and secure the protection of the Federal Constitution, by the imperative vote of the Legislature of my State, and by the cry of protest made by the heroic youth assembled in the Hacienda de Guadalupe the 26th of March 1913. History in its justice will eventually give its judgment from which there is no appeal, and will declare whether I have fulfilled my duty, and whether the work accomplished is commensurate with what was expected of me and with what might reasonably be demanded of me under the circumstances that existed during the time the task was performed.

I can assure you only of the sincerity and honesty of my intentions, and of my disinterested attitude; I have sought only the redemption of the Mexican people, their aggrandizement by means of a solid education, and their liberty through the establishment of democratic institutions, which they have good reason to look upon as the guarantee of their liberties.

The welfare of the Republic, which from the middle of February 1913 until to-day has demanded all my energy and has been the only object of my vigilance, and which often has caused me anxiety in the midst of many dangers that had to be overcome, is from this moment entrusted to your zeal, and I hope that, with your lights and patriotism you may know how to guide the nation along the road which leads to prosperity and to the sanctity of the law and of justice.

You should not forget even for a moment that you represent a people who wish to be free, and who have made enormous sacrifices to secure institutions which will permit of the realization of this beautiful ideal. For this reason you should always remember that while democracy reaches its decisions by means of the vote for the majority, this does not mean that a majority formed by avarice or the ambitions of agitators who drag along the undiscerning and ignorant multitude to the wrong goal, by exciting the lower passions or by making false promises which are never carried out and which are always chimerical; agitators who, in order to satisfy personal ambitions readily sacrifice the good of the community at the very altars where homage should be rendered to truth.

Democracy alone can establish concord among all social classes through the harmonizing of interests on the basis of the independence of men, and especially of the members of a single political body, and of perfect equality among them; it is not and cannot be, in essence and in truth, other than the government of reason which, high, profound and serene, feeling the pulse of national life, and duly considering its history, necessities and tendencies, seeks adequate measures for the establishment and preservation of its vital forces, measures which are a safeguard for the elimination of evils which menace its existence or make such existence difficult and unfortunate, and reforms which raise its spirits and ennoble its purpose, awakening and fortifying sentiments of charity for the helpless and of liberation for those who suffer from social injustices, and of fraternity and sympathy for all.

For this reason, democracy sincerely and honestly seen and honorably practiced, should not look for the majority in party politics whatever the party or the name it bears, but in the representation of all classes and of all legitimate interests.

You are not the representatives of one party but of the people as a whole; to give preference, therefore, to the interests of one class or group in prejudice to those of another would be not only unjust but dangerous. In your hands lies the establishment of democratic institutions, and it will be your task to show that the revolution has not been sterile; should you not do so the only result will be the substitution of the arbitrary will of one by the capricious and oppressive will of many. If you are today free from the pressure and guidance of those higher up, your decorum and the dignity of the Congress requires that you also be entirely independent of all others; whatever may compromise your liberty also compromises the future of the Republic.

Over the entrance to the Academy of the genial Plato this inscription appeared: "Only he who knows geometry enters here". In this august assembly the noise of discordant passion should not penetrate and its tempestuous waves should not cross this threshold, for herein only the serene voice of reason should be heard searching for truth, and the sonorous voice of patriotism demanding that the Nation shall be great. Because of this, and in order to comply with your mission, you should always remember that none should enter here but he who has but one ideal: the public good; one desire only: to make the people free; one passion only: love for the Fatherland.

[Inclosure—Translation—Extract]

Report of First Chief Carranza in charge of the Executive Power of Mexico, read April 15, 1917, in the Chamber of Deputies

The Huerta usurpation not having been recognized by the Government and Legislature of Coahuila, and the campaign against the usurper having been undertaken in accordance with the Plan of Guadalupe, the principal care of the First Chief in matters relating to foreign relations was to get in communication with the Government of the United States, the only Government with which this could be done, due to the fact that the principal nations of Europe hastened to recognize the Government of Huerta as legal, without attaching importance to the series of crimes incident to its establishment. Notwithstanding the fact that the President of the United States of the North had on many occasions expressed the opinion that the Huerta Government was wholly illegal, and that consequently it could not be recognized, it is also true that he was far from eager to recognize the Government of Coahuila, and what was more important, to remove all obstacles to the easy supply of the war material indispensable to the struggle.

With this in mind, one of my first acts was to request the United States to remove the embargo which had been placed on all kinds of war materials and I pointed out that this embargo would accomplish no other purpose than to aid Huerta in a very effective way, because the Constitutionalist Government had not been able to make sufficient preparation and could not possibly manufacture the arms and ammunition which its army imperatively needed and moreover, had no ports where such materials could be entered, while Huerta could utilize the arms and ammunition plants of Europe without the least difficulty and could also import their products without the least opposition through the sea-ports which he had in his possession.

The Government of the United States in view of the fact that the situation created by the embargo on war materials assisted the usurper, finally removed the embargo a year after the beginning of the struggle against Huerta, and consequently it was easy for me thereafter to provide one of the most essential necessities of the campaign.

Because of this action of the Government of the United States, an action which in reality was nothing more than the logical consequence of the opinion the United States formed most correctly and justly of the criminal conduct of Huerta, he and his lieutenants interpreted this action as aid given the revolution by the United States and from this moment began a campaign to create difficulties between the United States and the headquarters of the First Chief, an endeavor promoted by the supporters of the old régime and the enemies of the Constitutionalist Government and one which they have continued to promote up to the present time.

The first difficulty came as a result of the death of the British subject, William Benton, which happened in Ciudad Juárez February 16, 1914. Since the Government of England had recognized Huerta and consequently had no representative at the headquarters of the First Chief, that Government appealed to the Government of the United States which had such representative to endeavor to secure permission for a commission composed of foreigners of which an English consul should be a member, to enter Mexican territory to identify the remains of Benton, as well as to initiate the complaint which the Government of Great Britain desired to make.

Desiring to disclose all that had occurred so that complete justice might be secured, the First Chief ordered a scrupulous and careful investigation and appointed for this purpose a reputable commission composed of honorable Mexicans, but in order to avoid establishing a system by which the nations which had recognized Huerta might make complaints through the mediation of the United States in matters connected with persons or property of their nationals, but without the Government of those nations appearing, I informed the Government of the United States that I would continue to give careful and thorough attention to the complaints and demands made in favor of its subjects, but, considering the dignity of the Republic, and out of respect for the personality of the supreme chief of the Constitutionalist army, I would not permit the intervention of the United States in matters relating to subjects of other nations if such nations were not willing to conform to diplomatic usages, especially since not the slightest obstacle prevented them from accrediting representatives to handle all such matters.

After this failure to accomplish their infamous purpose the reactionaries and enemies of the Constitutionalist Government redoubled their efforts to provoke a conflict by criminal methods; one of the most serious incidents was that which occurred in Tampico.

On the 9th of April 1914 some uniformed sailors under an officer, belonging to the American ship Dolphin and aboard one of the ship's launches, landed at a storehouse near the Iturbide bridge for the purpose of securing gasoline and the Commander of the Huerta forces at the bridge ordered that they be arrested and brought before him under guard. The American Government demanded satisfaction for these acts and if the matter had been handled with proper regard for justice a satisfactory arrangement doubtless could have been reached without difficulty, but the Huerta administration maneuvered so that the event assumed magnified proportions, and in the end the Americans occupied the customhouse and took possession of the port of Vera Cruz, however not without the shedding of blood on both sides, because of the resistance spontaneously made by the students of the naval school and the residents of that port; the Huerta commander and his troops fled precipitately. This deplorable occurrence illustrates the tortious methods of Huerta.

As a matter of fact, the usurper's Government utilized this affair as a political maneuver in an effort to put an end to the lessening of its prestige, thereby compromising the safety of the country in an endeavor to promote its own ambitious ends. With false boastings the patriotism of the Mexican people was exploited and an effort made to sow the seeds of discord in the Constitutionalist army with the idea of uniting it to that of the usurper under the pretext that it was needed for the national defense, but in reality for the purpose of offsetting the triumphs of the revolution. The Constitutionalist army through its worthy chiefs refused to listen to such perfidious suggestions although it promptly undertook to fulfil its patriotic duty under the circumstances.

On receiving wireless information of what had occurred, in a despatch sent by the American consul at Torreón acting under instructions of the American Secretary of State, the Constitutionalist Government addressed to the Government of the United States of the North the note of April 29, 1914, in which a well-defined attitude was assumed without vacillation. This note stated that the Mexican nation, the real Mexican nation, had not recognized the usurper who was attempting to drown the free institutions of the country in blood; that the acts of the usurper and his accomplices could not be supported as legal acts of the national sovereignty nor as representing the true sentiment of the Mexican nation which is friendly towards the North American people; that this illegality of the Government of Huerta was supported by the fact that it had not been recognized by the Government of the United States, Argentine, Chile, Brazil and Cuba; that the usurper was an offender who came within the jurisdiction of the Constitutionalist Government, the only government that represented the national sovereignty in accordance with the spirit of Article 128 of the Political Constitution of Mexico; that the acts of the usurper never could be sufficient to involve the Mexican people in a disastrous war with the United States because no sympathy existed between the usurper's Government and the Mexican people, due to the fact that it was not the legitimate representative of the national sovereignty.

I clearly and vigorously represented that notwithstanding these facts, the invasion of our territory, the continued occupation of Vera Cruz by American forces or the violation of those rights which constitute our status as a sovereign, free and independent state, would drive us to an unequal but worthy struggle which I desired to avoid by every honorable means before the two nations should reach the point of breaking off the peaceful relations which united them. With this as a fundamental principle and considering the declarations of the American Senate to the effect that the United States of the North would not interfere with the Mexican nation nor consider the proposition of making war upon it, considering also that the acts of hostility were out of proportion to the equitable demands of the case, and moreover that the usurper of Mexico was not a person to extend reparation, I concluded by solemnly inviting the American Government to put an end to the hostile act referred to, to order its forces to withdraw from the places in their possession in the port of Vera Cruz, and to present to the Constitutionalist Government through me as Constitutionalist Governor of the State of Coahuila and Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, the appropriate demand growing out of the events that took place in the port of Tampico, with full assurance that this demand would be considered in a spirit of justice and conciliation.

Events developed along these lines, as you know since they are notorious; the usurper Huerta was overthrown; the Convention was converted into a focus of rebellion and the infidelity of Villa completed the situation and embarrassed the triumphal progress of the Constitutional army at the moment it was about to accomplish final success, that is, just when it was in control of nearly the entire country and just when my Government had occupied the metropolis only to abandon it for strategic reasons.

In the course of these events and while still in the midst of a most difficult situation, the Constitutionalist Government constantly insisted upon the evacuation of the port of Vera Cruz by the invading forces; this was done November 23, 1914, and on that date our national flag waved once more over that heroic city which came into the possession of the Constitutionalist forces; it is worthy of mention that this result was accomplished without impairing the reputation and honor of the Republic and without accepting any intervention whatever in our internal affairs. By the unanimous petition of the Board of Trade in behalf of merchants and property owners of the port of Vera Cruz on the one hand, and on the other in behalf of those who had occupied public positions during the usurpation of the American forces, but had submitted to the authority of the Constitutionalist Government, I issued two decrees—one directing that the import duties paid by those first mentioned above should not be again paid, and the other granting amnesty to the second mentioned above; thus was ended this incident which might have involved a disastrous war between the two countries which by sentiment and interests ardently desire peace.

Coincident with the occupation of the port of Vera Cruz, the honorable Plenipotentiaries of Brazil, Argentine, and Chile, with the authority of their respective Governments, tendered me as superior chief of the Constitutionalist forces their good offices to mediate in the conflict between Mexico and the United States of the North, an invitation which I accepted with sincere gratefulness in principle and so stated in the note of April 20, 1914, referring to the matter and written in the city of Chihuahua.

The above-named plenipotentiaries addressed a communication to me proposing that I should enter into a general armistice while a peaceful solution was being sought for the threatened conflict between Mexico and the United States; I categorically declined to accept, and stated that the conflict was provoked intentionally by Victoriano Huerta and should be settled independently of our internal struggle for right and liberty; moreover, I deemed a suspension of hostilities and military activities disadvantageous to the Constitutionalist cause and to the advantage of Huerta only; and I believed that the civil war in Mexico between the usurper and the people in arms should be continued without cessation until peace should be secured and until the interrupted constitutional régime should be reestablished.

I immediately communicated with the same plenipotentiaries on the 3d of May, requesting that they state the points they wished to cover in their good offices in the conflict referred to. They began the A. B. C. Conference in Niagara Falls without granting my request relative to the facts and points which should be discussed, and consequently I informed them on the 25th of the same month of May, through our confidential agent in Washington that I had appointed no representatives in anticipation of their reply, it being my understanding that these conferences should not be continued without delegates being present in representation of the First Chief of the Constitutionalist army who represented the majority of the inhabitants and the majority of the armed forces of the Republic.

The A. B. C. conferences were continued without transmitting to me any reply whatsoever to those very essential particulars; the conferences were participated in by the representatives of Argentine, Brazil and Chile, by delegates from the American Government and by envoys of General Victoriano Huerta, but they were held before I had appointed my representatives and without my taking any part in them.

This was the situation when the plenipotentiaries communicated with me August 15, 1915, proposing in substance that together with political and military chiefs engaged in the struggle against constitutionalism, we should assemble at some point to be determined upon to exchange ideas and decide the fortunes of the country and establish a peaceful government which should adopt the measures adequate for constitutional reconstruction and proceed to call general elections; all this was to be done, naturally, through the intervention of these same plenipotentiaries who tendered their good offices.

To these extraordinary suggestions I replied in a categorical manner in a note despatched the 10th of September 1915 that as First Chief of the Constitutionalist army in charge of the Executive Power of the Republic I could not consent to have the internal affairs of the Republic settled by mediation nor on the initiative of any foreign Government, since the undeniable duty of all was to respect the sovereignty of the nation; and that in accepting an invitation to take part in conferences with the chiefs of the rebel faction in order that peace might return to Mexico I would do grave injury to the independence of the Republic and would establish a precedent for foreign interference in the settlement of internal affairs, an act which of itself would be sufficient to prevent me from adopting the suggestion out of consideration for the legitimate defense of the sovereignty of the Mexican people and other American nations.

Moreover, I briefly summarized the complete program of the revolution referring to the reforms which were to constitute the foundation of our new social organization and which we already had begun to establish. I stated that I in my official character had the great responsibility of securing the wishes of the nation and could not by means of such an arrangement endanger the future of the country nor permit the enemies of the cause I represent to participate directly in the government; that one sad experience had demonstrated the fatal consequences of such an arrangement; that the people had responded with enthusiasm to the campaign being waged against the usurper; that this campaign had been victorious; that Francisco Villa had been overthrown and the revolution had triumphed over new obstacles placed in its path; that I could count on an army of 150,000 men; that progress had been made in the reconstruction of the country and its return to normal conditions; that railway traffic had been resumed and improvements had been made in the railway lines, and that entering into negotiations with the contaminating factions would be equivalent to a renunciation by my headquarters of victory gained at the cost of terrible sacrifices, would necessitate my resignation as Chief of the Constitutionalist army and as the authority in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation and would be a violation of the faith and confidence placed in me by the army and the Mexican people.

In view of all this, and further considering that no one had the right to prevent our people in the very near future from enjoying the bounteous harvest of their desperate struggle, I closed by stating that I could not accept the invitation extended me.

This was the last word of the Constitutionalist Government with respect to the conferences at Niagara Falls and the mediation offered by the A. B. C.

Without doubt the American Government was convinced by the accuracy of the facts and the force of the arguments used, for it recognized the First Chief of the Constitutionalist army in charge of the Executive Power of the Union as the de facto Government of the Republic.

The enemies of the new order of things established in the country, tenacious in their criminal efforts to bring about American intervention at whatever cost, provoked new and serious conflicts on the northern frontier; the most serious was that which occurred when the border town of Columbus was assaulted March 9, 1916 by Villa and his lieutenants, who, constantly attacked and defeated by the Constitutionalist forces had fled to the interior of the States of Chihuahua and Sonora. On receiving the first official notice of this attack my Government sent the Government of the United States the note of March 12, 1916 suggesting that a convention be held to arrange for the reciprocal crossing of the boundary by the forces of each nation, to pursue bandits who, after committing depredations in the territory of one should flee to that of the other. Unfortunately the Washington Cabinet erroneously interpreted this note to mean that it granted permission to cross the border, and consequently organized and carried out the so-called Punitive Expedition.

When the Constitutionalist Government, on hearing of these events, instantly complained and protested against them, the Washington Government explained its action as stated above and supported the explanation moreover by pointing out the necessity for moving quickly. The two Governments exchanged various notes, the final result of which was an agreement to discuss the terms of a compact for the reciprocal crossing of the frontier by the armed forces of the respective countries. Two projects drawn up by the Mexican Government and two counter-projects presented by the Government of the United States were studied and discussed; in these deliberations the Mexican Government constantly insisted on placing restrictions on the crossing of troops with respect to their zone of operations, the time they should remain in foreign territory, the number of soldiers and the arms of the service to which they belonged. The American Government rejected these suggestions but in the end partially accepted them in the last counter-project, but specified that the project should not apply to the Columbus expedition. This gave rise to the note of the Mexican Government of April 12, 1916, which terminated the discussions of the convention and requested the withdrawal of the troops on the ground that their occupancy of the territory was not founded on any agreement and had no further object since Villa's band of outlaws had been dispersed and rendered powerless.

Since the American Government did not reply to this note nor withdraw its troops, it was deemed advisable to have the military commanders take up the military aspects of the situation and work out a solution which, so far as the Mexican Government was concerned, could be none other than the withdrawal of the so-called Punitive Expedition. With this object in view, General Alvaro Obregón, Secretary of War and Navy, representing the Mexican Government, and Generals Hugh Scott and Frederick Funston, representing the American Government, held a conference at El Paso, Texas. This conference succeeded in formulating a memorandum project in which General Scott declared that the dispersion of Villa's band had been accomplished and consequently the American Government had decided to begin the withdrawal of its troops under the promise of the Mexican Government to furnish an adequate frontier guard against raids such as that at Columbus; but since it was also stated, as a condition for the withdrawal of the American forces, that the American Government might suspend the withdrawal if for any reason it was convinced it had misjudged the ability of the Mexicans to guard the frontier, the Mexican Government refused to agree to the memorandum referred to, because the power to decide on the evacuation of the national territory—a matter which pertained to the sovereignty of the country—could not be left to the judgment of the American Government.

During the conference a party of bandits attacked an American garrison at Glenn Springs and crossed immediately afterwards to the Mexican side at Boquillas; fearing that additional troops would cross the border because of this incident, my Government instructed General Obregón to notify the United States that the crossing of that nation's soldiers would not be permitted and ordered the military commanders on the frontier not to consent to further crossings.

These conferences ended May 11 of the same year without any practical result having been gained. Despite the statements to the contrary made by General Scott, the promises of friendship made by the American Government, and the good will shown by my Government to do everything possible to make the vigilance along the frontier effective regardless of the many preferential demands for the protection of the interior of the country, new American detachments crossed the boundary line and advanced as far as El Pino, some sixty miles south of the border; the strength of the so-called Punitive Expedition was considerable, and included a large amount of artillery; the American Government not only reestablished the embargo on war material and held up shipments of arms and ammunition on several occasions, but it also held up several pieces of machinery bought by the Mexican Government in the United States, for the manufacture of war materials. Since these acts, unless the situation was soon improved, could not be considered in any other light than a hostile manifestation and a veritable invasion of our territory, my Government in its note of May 1, 1916, placed before the United States of the North a complete statement of all these facts and circumstances. This note enumerated with great clearness the reasons and principles which worked to Mexico's disadvantage, it stated that these facts were opposed to the repeated and definite declarations of the Washington Cabinet, and concluded by insisting on that Government ordering the early withdrawal of its troops, stating that if this could not be done their further advance would have to be opposed with force.

Nevertheless, desiring to make use of all honorable means for reaching a settlement, special commissions were appointed by my Government and that of the United States of the North thoroughly to discuss the matter and reach a solution if possible. Thus were begun the conferences at Atlantic City.

The conflict finally reached a crisis when my Government in defense of the National sovereignty and integrity, was compelled to give orders to use force in repelling the invasion of our territory. The immediate result of this was the encounter at Carrizal in which our soldiers showed their usual bravery, as well as another near Matamoros, Tamaulipas, where the inhabitants, men, women and children alike spontaneously following a patriotic impulse, joined the garrison of the town.

War with the neighboring Republic of the North was considered imminent; but war was avoided through the efforts of the commission just spoken of, and because of the cordiality and serenity of both Governments which, through diplomatic channels succeeded in bringing the facts to light and in handling this delicate situation with moderation and equity. In these diplomatic relations the Mexican Government established the fundamental principle that it would not accept any discussion in advance of a complete evacuation of national territory by American forces, and our commissioners strictly followed this principle. The American Government in justice to that of Mexico finally completely withdrew the so-called Punitive Expedition from our soil, and has accredited its Ambassador who, after being given the prescribed formal reception, has taken up his residence and assumed his duties in this Capital. My Government has also named the personnel of our Embassy which is now established in Washington.

To enumerate completely all matters referring to our relations with the American Government I should mention another incident although it has not the serious and annoying character of those matters already discussed.

In February 1915 the rebel uprising in Yucatán occurred under the leadership of Abel Ortiz Argumedo, who finally occupied the entire State, Quintana Roo, and a part of the State of Campeche. It is well known that all of the Yucatán traffic passes through the port of Progreso, and, partly to prevent the rebels from receiving reinforcements and war materials, partly because the Mexican transport Progreso was blown up in this port, the Constitutionalist Government closed the port.

On account of this the American Government made representations before my Government for the purpose of obtaining a suspension of the action alleging that it injured the interests of American business men who had extensive business in henequen, the principal product of Yucatán, and giving as an additional reason that the steamer Wisebrooc carrying cargo for Progreso was held at the port of Campeche.

The Constitutionalist Government immediately sent forces and material to Yucatán to oppose the rebels; the campaign undertaken against them was conducted with great rapidity and met with complete success; the port of Progreso was quickly opened to the traffic of the world and this diplomatic incident was closed.

At the present no question of this character is pending with the United States of the North, and consequently, I am greatly pleased to be able to tell you on this solemn occasion that our affairs with the great Republic of the North are being conducted in a spirit of manifest cordiality nourished by a sincere and earnest desire on the part of both Governments, to establish closer relations between the two neighboring people on a basis of mutual and absolute respect for national honor and integrity and of the most ample liberty in the exercise of sovereignty.

Notwithstanding this, I should at the same time inform you that the Government of the United States, although all reason for friction has completely disappeared, has not up to date removed the embargo against arms and ammunition which was imposed at the time of the assault on Columbus by Villa and his lieutenants, and because of which a number of shipments of ammunition and supplies from the United States have been held up by the Government of that country.

The same principles that have guided the conduct of my Government in its relations with the United States have been observed in the concentrated effort made to develop closer relations with a more fraternal feeling for Latin-American nations with which Mexico has the strongest bonds of union by reason of origin, ideals and common interests. These people and their respective Governments have cooperated heartily and even with enthusiasm in this altruistic labor from which we may mutually hope for the most abundant return to the advantage of all, especially in the development we may eventually attain in our mutual commercial relations, which as everyone knows, contribute greatly to strengthening the bonds of friendship and mutual regard.

With this in view the Republic has increased the personnel of its diplomatic service and has added to its legations. I am glad to state here that mutual expressions of consideration and sympathy which have been noted in our relations with these countries have been most eloquent and significant and demonstrated a strong tendency towards continually making these important relations still more cordial. * * *

DECREE DATED SEPTEMBER 15, 1916, RELATIVE TO THE LAW OF PAYMENTS

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Union, in view of the extraordinary faculties of which I am vested, I have seen fit to decree as follows:

LAW OF PAYMENTS

CHAPTER I

GENERAL DISPOSITION

Article 1. The present law shall be applied to all cases involving a loan of money, regardless of the date of the obligation, or of the express money stipulations celebrated between contracting parties, unless there be a determined exception in the same law.

Article 2. The paper peso of the infalsificable issue has unlimited liberatory power for its nominal value and it is not only legal tender but obligatory. Therefore, all money loans are complied with the delivery of the fiduciary currency of the infalsificable issue, in the terms prescribed by this law; all money loans referred to in Articles 1453, 2690 and 2968 of the Civil Code of the Federal District, of the Civil Codes of the States and of the Commercial Code, shall be ruled by the present law, for the period during which the decree of June 21, 1915, shall remain in force, which decree authorizes the emission of the notes designed for the purpose of unifying the fiduciary currency of legal tender. During the period during which this law may remain in force the legal dispositions above mentioned are hereby derogated, except for the special cases, expressly determined in this same law.

Article 3. For the effects of the present law, the infalsificable bill shall in no case be considered in relation to the silver peso with a value less than twenty cents national gold for the peso, which is the decreed guaranty in favor of said paper money at the present time; if in the future this guaranty should be increased, the relation which in that case shall be fixed will be proportionate to the increase.

Article 4. For the application of this law four different periods are hereby established:

I. The normal period, that is to say, the period during which there was no sensible alteration in the value of the fiduciary money. The conclusion of this period is fixed on the 15th day of April, 1913.

II. The period between April 15, 1913, inclusive, and September 10, 1914.

III. The period between September 10, 1914, inclusive, and April 30, 1916.

IV. The period which commenced with the emission of the infalsificable fiduciary money, on the 1st of May of this year.

³ Continued from For. Rel. 1916, pp. 626-649

Article 5. All money loans contracted during the first period will be considered as if they had been made in silver, regardless of the tenor of the respective documents, or of the verbal contract in such case, and shall be paid in infalsificable fiduciary money, delivering five times the amount of the silver loan. Such loans as have been contracted in foreign currencies shall first be reduced to national gold for the effects of the present article in conformity with the official equivalents established for the application of Stamp Taxes.

Article 6. All obligations contracted during the second period shall be considered as having been made in bank-notes and shall be paid delivering four times the amount of such loans in infalsificable fiduciary money.

With respect to contracts in foreign currency the previous article holds good.

Article 7. All obligations contracted during the third period shall be considered as having been made in paper money and shall be paid delivering the same amount as that received in infalsificable fiduciary money at par value.

Article 8. All the obligations contracted during the fourth period shall be considered as having been made in infalsificable paper and shall be paid in same fiduciary money, at par, except when a special contract has been made on certain specie, but in no case currency retired from circulation shall be delivered.

Article 9. Confidential deposits shall be returned delivering the same specie deposited. In the case that deposits of illegal currency may have been deposited they shall be delivered to the respective office by the depositary and the latter is obliged only to prove delivery to the depositor.

Article 10. When it appears clearly expressed that in loans made during the third and fourth periods it was intended to make the contract in a fixed specie the contract will hold as stipulated, as regards both the capital and the interests; but if it be in a foreign currency the debt will be paid delivering national gold at the rate prevailing on the date of the expiration.

Article 11. For the effects of the previous articles, if the document contracting a loan be a letter of exchange or draft, in order to determine the date of the transaction, the day when the provision of funds was made, will be considered.

Article 12. If during periods 3 and 4 referred to in Article 4 of this law, there has been a renewal of contract in regard to certain specie for the compliance of the obligation, the stipulation in this renewal will be followed, as if a new contract had been made.

Article 13. For the effects of the previous article a renewal of debt in regard to certain specie will be understood when conformity has been expressed for the receipt of the specie which is or may have been in circulation on determined date.

Article 14. The earned interest before the enforcement of this law shall be paid in infalsificable paper at par. The interest or any other periodical loans which may become due from the enforcement of this law, shall be paid in infalsificable paper at par value.

Article 15. If in the contracts celebrated during periods 3 and 4 there shall be express stipulation respecting the manner in which the periodical loans should be paid, the stipulation will hold, but in the debts of foreign currency they must be reduced to national gold at the rate prevailing on the day of the expiration.

Article 16. It is declared that no delay has been incurred by those who may have made deposits or consignations in paper money according to their contracts. All the interested parties are under obligation, in order to enjoy the benefits of this article, to make new deposits in infalsificable paper, when it is thus stipulated, in proportion to their debts according to the bases established by the previous articles and they must make such deposits within a month from the date this law goes into force.

Article 17. In cases when consignations have been made in paper money of legal emissions, different from that of the infalsificable for loans contracted during the first and second periods, the debtor is obliged to increase such consignations, making a new deposit four and a half times as much for the first period and three times and a half as much for the second, because the amount of money consigned in the first deposit is considered as having a value of ten cents national gold, therefore equivalent to half as much in infalsificable money.

Article 18. The party in whose favor such deposits in money of legal emissions is left, different from that of the infalsificable, may collect the corresponding certificates which the respective office shall issue in accordance with the Decree of May 31, 1916.

Article 19. In the case that a deposit has been made in paper money different than that of the infalsificable during the months of May and June of the present year of 1916 and for debts previous to these months, the consignee is obliged to make a new deposit in infalsificable paper.

Article 20. Such deposits made in public offices or institutions authorized for that purpose shall be considered as having been made in the respective office to the effect of being exchanged for gold certificates in conformity with the Decree of May 31, 1916.

The offices where such deposits have been made shall send immediately to the exchange office a statement of them and the species deposited.

The exchange office shall remit to the authority recipient of such deposits the corresponding certificates.

Article 21. The payment to be made as a consequence of contracts celebrated at the time when certain currency, which has been declared null by the Constitutionalist Government, had liberatory power, must be paid in infalsificable paper at par value, except in the cases when contracting parties had foreseen something relative to the nullification of the paper in which the contract was made, or a change of one paper into another, in which cases the stipulation will hold.

Article 22. The following cases are comprised in this law:

I. The consignment cases notwithstanding the state of the judgments and even in the case in which resolute sentence has been passed but not executed.

II. The payments attempted before administrative, political and military authorities when the debtor has not received the loan.

III. The payments which may have been refused by the debtor notwithstanding the fact that the extinguishment of the obligation may have been juridically decreed.

In these cases the cancellations in the public registers are not considered as having been made.

Article 23. In cases of auction adjudications will not alter the juridical situation acquired by creditors of greater rights; in such a way that the property referred to shall pass to the grantee with all the burden, unless they involve debts already due, in which case they must be liquidated.

Article 24. All the payments proceeding from civil responsibility for noncompliance of a contract, shall be made as the rest of the loans, the date of the celebration of the contract determining the obligation of the payment.

Article 25. In cases of controversy between the general dispositions contained in this law and some precepts of the legislation in force, it is for the judge to resolve, giving preference to the former, in view of the fact that this law is of general observance in all the Republic.

Article 26. In cases when the application of the present law does not appear quite clearly and in cases omitted by it, the authority to whose knowledge it has been brought shall make up a statement with copies of all the evidence of the case together with a report sending it to the Department of Hacienda in order that it may dictate the decision.

Article 27. Credits of fiscal order and in favor of the Federation are subject to the special dispositions of the Department of Hacienda; therefore, this law does not apply to controversies arising thereof. In doubtful cases the Department of Hacienda will determine what may be deemed appropriate.

Article 28. Insurance companies and institutions having the guaranty of the General Government, shall be ruled by special law in all their operations. Credit institutions shall also be ruled by that special law; with reference to the banks of issue to bills and deposits to a date of payment not to exceed three days; for mortgage banks to payment of mortgage bonds; and for the banks of agricultural loans to payment of cash bonds.

Article 29. All the dispositions contained in the present chapter shall always be applied to cases, except when it is otherwise expressly determined in the following chapters, in which case it must be resolved accordingly.

Article 30. In the case that the interested parties prefer administrative proceedings to judicial proceedings for the resolution of a doubtful point for the application of the present law, they shall apply to the Department of Hacienda that it may resolve the controversy.

Article 31. Any person interested in the application of this Law shall consult the Department of Hacienda for the solution of any point which may appear doubtful on the dispositions of same.

CHAPTER II

TITLES SUBJECT TO MORATORIUM

Article 32. The following persons shall have a right to reject payments, be it total or partial, on capitals, during a year's time from the enforcement of this law, notwithstanding the facts that payments become due:

I. Purely beneficiary institutions, with respect to their invested capitals.

II. Municipal governments.

III. The persons classified by the Civil Code of the Federal District and of the States as being incapable naturally and legally, provided always that their capital is less than 20,000 pesos national gold.

IV. Those ailing of incurable sickness or having physical defects as to be incapable of working in the judgment of the judge and who may possess a capital less than 20,000 pesos national gold.

V. Women and elderly people which having no one to look after them or are living alone and possessing a capital less than 20,000 pesos national gold.

Article 33. Only such creditors whose credits may not have been renewed and which may have been constituted in their favor during the first and second periods have a right to use of the moratorium.

Article 34. A creditor having a right to the moratorium may demand the payment of his credit in accordance with the dispositions of this law, renouncing in this case the moratorium.

CHAPTER III

SWINDLING AND USURIOUS CONTRACTS

Article 35. In the cases when credits cause interests of more than 20 per cent per annum, and in those in which there may have been notable injury or loss, the debtor shall free himself paying in infalsificable paper the corresponding amount in conformity with the articles pertinent thereto of this law, in the understanding that he shall never be obliged to pay in paper money at par value, a sum larger than the one to which his debt amounts.

CHAPTER IV

* SOCIETIES, ASSOCIATIONS AND PARTNERSHIPS

Article 36. In the cases of societies, of associations, or partnerships, there being a written contract or not, the payments for utilities or dividends shall be made in infalsificable paper, in the equivalent amount to that of the specie in which the payment should have been made on the date the utilities were obtained, except by stipulation otherwise in regard to the date in which the debt be demanded.

CHAPTER V

RENTS

Article 37. The proprietors of city and rural properties receiving rents by virtue of rent contracts, celebrated during the first and second periods, shall have a right to charge three times as much the amount of the rent agreed upon for the first period, and two and a half for the second. Those who may have celebrated contracts during the third period shall charge the stipulated rent at par value in infalsificable paper. Contracts celebrated during the fourth period remain the same.

Article 38. Unpaid due rents shall be paid as established by this law by periodical payments.

Article 39. Deposits constituted as a guaranty for the payment of rent shall be considered as common debts and shall be paid according to the general rules, the date of the obligation being determined by the date on which such deposits were constituted.

CHAPTER VI

Article 40. Promissory notes with collateral security and pawnshop tickets which may have been extended to accredit debts during the first and second periods are subjected to the following rules.

a. If the amount is less than $50 they are payable in paper money at par value.

b. If more than $50 but less than $500 the debtor shall free himself upon payment of twice the amount in paper money.

c. If exceeding $500 charges will be collected in the proportion fixed by this law.

Article 41. With regard to the promissory notes with collateral security and pawnshop tickets which may have been extended in order to accredit a debt after the date of the second period they must be paid according to the general dispositions of this law.

Article 42. The provisions of the preceding article are also applied to renewed pawnshop tickets.

TRANSITORY

The proportions fixed for the payments in this law, with relation to the money of the infalsificable issue, shall last in force for six months beginning with the date of this law. After that mentioned period the Department of Hacienda will determine whether the mentioned proportions are to be altered or whether they must remain as provided in this law.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY,
Rye, N. Y., September 22, 1916.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: In connection with the new banking laws enacted by General Carranza, President of Mexico, and relating chiefly to Mexican note banks, a further decree has also been issued according to which the repayment of obligations entered into in previous years is to be regulated, this being done in such a manner that all debts incurred before April 15, 1913, are to be repaid by an amount 5 times that of the original, that is, $5,000 are to be paid for $1,000, and debts incurred up to September 10, 1914, are to be paid by 4 times the amount, that is, $4,000 for $1,000, in the present government money, called infalsificables (uncounterfeitable).

While almost all credits extended have meantime been paid back to the banks in practically worthless paper money, without their being able under the existing Government decrees to refuse to accept payments, it was impossible for them to pay off deposits in the same way.

Now the banks must settle their still existing obligations in the above manner. In case these decrees are carried into effect, it will mean the bankruptcy of the existing banks, foremost among which are the foreign ones—English, French, American and German.

As the United States Government is interested in the matter the same as the Imperial Government, I deemed it urgent to call your excellency's attention to the decrees of General Carranza. I should be much obliged to your excellency if you could inform me whether the American Government thinks of taking any, and if so what, steps before the Mexican Government in this behalf.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your excellency's note of the 22d ultimo, in which you call the Department's attention to the decree promulgated on September 15, 1916, by General Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the de facto Government of Mexico, whereby the repayment of obligations entered into in previous years is to be regulated.

You point out the hardships which the enforcement of this decree and others will put upon the banks in Mexico, foremost among which are the foreign banks—English, French, American and German—and you ask whether the Government of the United States is thinking of taking any steps before the Mexican Government in the matter, and, if so, what steps.

In reply, I have the honor to inform your excellency that on the 6th instant I sent to the American members of the American and Mexican Joint Commission copies of the translation of your excellency's note, for their consideration.

496. Reference decree entitled Law of Payments, copied with your 522, September 20, 1916.

In applying terms of decree to contracts executed prior to orders General Carranza creating paper money, which decree aims to compel creditors to accept such money in discharge of obligations, decree is given retroactive effect apparently contrary to Mexican Constitution. In providing that without regard to the express stipulations of the contracting parties as to the money in which contract payments shall be made, creditors must accept paper currency at a fixed ratio to coin, which is far in excess of the commercial value of the currency, the decree clearly appears to impair the obligation of contracts. In directing the courts to give preference to the provisions of this decree which may be in conflict with existing law, the executive power appears to assume judicial functions contrary to the Mexican Constitution thus laying the foundation for denials of justice. In excepting several classes of persons from the operation of decree, the de facto Government has obviously attempted to exercise discrimination, in disregard of the generally accepted principle of jurisprudence that all men shall be equal before the law.

As a practical matter, the decree will operate as a measure of confiscation of the vastly greater portion of indebtedness contracted prior to the coming into power of the de facto Government of Mexico and still unpaid.

You will inform the appropriate authorities that because of the foregoing considerations, the Government of the United States cannot be expected to recognize the right of the Mexican Government to apply the terms of this decree to American citizens, and that it will so advise those of its citizens who may seek its advice.

[Inclosure—Translation]

DECREE DATED DECEMBER 11, 1916 RELATIVE TO LAW OF PAYMENTS

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, in use of the faculties with which I am vested and, Considering:

First—That the economic situation and the relation of paper money to metallic currency has so changed since September that the forms of payments established in the Law of September 15, 1916, are now impracticable, notwithstanding the fact that the period then established has not yet expired;

Second—That in view of the reappearance of metallic currency in the market and the difficulties impeding the circulation of paper money together with it, public interest demands that the monetary basis for the fulfilment of obligations be made uniform, and on this base is established the definite reformation of the Law of Payments, equitably dividing the profit or loss attendant upon a payment of money incurred by the changing of currency;

Third—That it being necessary to reestablish the Constitutional Government of the Republic as promptly as possible, it is convenient to maintain for a short time the definite regulation of relations between creditors and debtors, which was dealt with in the Law of Payments already referred to, till such time as the Constitutional powers are in normal operation, which will also permit the awaiting of a favorable change in the conditions of the circulation of metallic currency;

Fourth—That, in so far as the payment of rents is concerned it is necessary to establish provisional rules, to the end that special remedies may be discovered lacking which, as per the preceding consideration, due disposition will be made;

²Not printed.

I have, therefore, seen fit to decree as follows:

Article 1. From the date of this decree the dispositions of the Law of Payments of September 15, 1916, and subsequent circulars, are suspended. This suspension shall last until once reestablished the Constitutional Régime in the Republic, the legally constituted public authorities shall issue laws or general dispositions applicable to contracts, obligations and deliveries of money as dealt with in said law.

Article 2. During this suspension all creditors and debtors are accorded a general moratorium so as not to be obliged to make or receive payments of money against their will.

Article 3. With reference to obligations contracted after the 9th of September 1914, in which it is expressly stated that the payment will be in metallic currency, the payment will be made as stated.

Article 4. The interested parties are granted the right to mutually arrange the payment or cancellation of an obligation.

Article 5. All suits relating to money payments which may be before any tribunal remain in suspension during the time specified in Article 1 in that status which they have at the time this decree is issued.

Article 6. There are also included in the preceding dispositions all monetary obligations in which, as creditors or debtors, those institutions holding the guaranty of the Federal Government and mentioned in Article 28 of the Law of Payments, are concerned as are likewise those persons and corporations dealt with in Article 32 of said law. Insurance companies and banks are subject to a special law.

Article 7. Rental contracts are excepted from the moratorium, and the following rules will govern them:

(1) Those unpaid rents due before the date of this decree shall be paid in metallic currency in a proportion of twenty cents for each peso paper money, having in mind, in fixing this rate, the corresponding increases, according to Article 37 of Law of Payments.

If it should be for rents after the 9th day of September, 1914, the amount will be fixed in metallic currency in accordance with the rates fixed by the Secretaria de Hacienda, through circulars.

(2) Rents after the time fixed by the above article shall also be paid in metallic currency in the following terms and proportions:

(a) When the rents are for industrial business, agricultural houses and all types of mercantile or industry houses, rents of fifty pesos or less, shall be reduced to fifty per cent, and those of more than fifty pesos but not exceeding one hundred shall be reduced to seventy-five per cent. Rents of over one hundred pesos shall be paid in full.

(b) When the rents are for residences of thirty pesos or less, they shall be reduced to forty per cent, those exceeding thirty pesos but not fifty shall be reduced one-half and those exceeding fifty pesos shall be reduced to seventy-five per cent.

Article 8. All rent contracts actually in force, and made out in paper money and dated after the 9th day of September 1914, may be waived if this is asked by any one of the contracting parties, giving a notice to the other party sixty days in advance.

Article 9. All dispositions contrary to the terms of this decree, are hereby voided.

V. CARRANZA -

QUERÉTARO, December 11, 1916

[Inclosure 2—Translation]

AMENDMENT TO THE DECREE OF DECEMBER 11, 1916

An amendment to this decree was published next day, as follows:

It being disposed by Section 1 of Article 7 of the Law of Payments of December 14, 1916, that unpaid rents expiring before that date and incorporated in rental contracts subsequent to the 9th of September 1914, should be paid in accord with rates established by this Department, and it having been noted that the text of the law already mentioned as published by the press today contains an important error in Section 2 of Article 7, this Department, to effect the true and legal precept of this last section, declares:

First: That the rates to which the last part of Section 1, Article 7 of the Law of December 14, 1916, refers are those contained in the following table:

	1914	1915	1916
January		28c	9c
February		26c	8c
March		22c	5c
April		18c	7c
May		17c	20c
June		17c	12c
July		10c	10c
August		13c	7c
September	40c	13c	5c
October	40c	14c	3c
November	39c	14c	1½c
December	37c	12c

Second: That said Section 1 refers to rents due previous to the 14th instant, the date of the decree, and Section 2 of Article 7 to those due after that date. With regard to the first, if relating to rentals of the first or second periods fixed in Article 4 of the Law of Payments of September 15, 1916, they shall be paid at the rate of 20 cents on every paper peso with the increases of three and two and a half times respectively specified in Article 37 of that law; and if it relates to rentals after September 9, 1914, that is, the third and fourth periods fixed in Article 4, the payment shall be made for the whole amount according to the table of rates contained in this circular.

Third: With relation to the rentals due after the date of the last law, i. e., the 14th of this month, the amount, whatever may be the date of the renting, will be paid reduced to the amounts expressed in incipits "a" and "b" of Section 2 of Article 7.

Both banks are still in charge of the Government liquidation committees but reliable information indicates that not only has no progress whatever been made toward liquidation but there was never any serious intention of carrying out the proposed liquidation. The action of the Government now appears as an attempt under legal guise to obtain possession of the metallic reserves. This attempt seems to have been successful inasmuch as the National Bank has loaned to the Government some six million pesos, the loan to be guaranteed by fifty per cent of the export tax on petroleum and paid before the end of this year. The Bank of London and Mexico was asked to loan three millions to be guaranteed by thirty per cent of the export tax on petroleum but declined. The Government officials then managed by a ruse to have the vaults opened and have kept them open. No one outside of the Government officials knows how much has been taken from the London Bank but it is estimated at about four millions. This course of action has the appearance of legality because both banks are theoretically at least in the hands of the liquidating committees which as receivers can dispose of the funds as they see fit. I was told this morning that Carranza had given orders to use force if necessary to obtain possession of the bullion.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 6, 1917, 1 p. m.

654. Your 657. You are instructed to say to the appropriate Mexican authorities that the Government of the United States, as the sincere friend of Mexico, and after careful consideration of the de facto Government's procedure against the National Bank of Mexico and the Bank of London and Mexico, views with grave apprehension the apparent purpose to force into liquidation these institutions, in which so many French, British and other nationals are deeply interested as stockholders, and in which many Americans are depositors; and that this Government feels that it would be negligent morally if it did not solemnly advise the de facto Government against a course which appears to leave out of consideration the principle recognized and firmly established by modern nations, that foreigners owning property within the jurisdiction of a friendly power are entitled to the protection of the Government of such power.

It is believed that if the most conservative and ably managed financial institutions anywhere were required to comply with such banking decrees as were recently issued in Mexico, during abnormal times, or even at a time of only temporary disturbance of the financial market, it would be practically impossible for them to do so. In the case of the banking institutions of Mexico, where the country has been suffering from abnormal conditions for the past four years, which have most seriously affected all lines of business, with the resultant unbalancing of economic conditions, it would seem to be a measure of confiscation to exact of these institutions the fulfilment of requirements which would be exceedingly difficult to comply with, even if the country were far more nearly in a normal state.

It appears to be established that the concessions of these banks were granted in accordance with Mexican laws, by a regularly constituted Mexican Government. It appears, further, that a Mexican commission, acting under a decree dated September 29 last, investigated the affairs of the National Bank of Mexico and found that it had fulfilled the requirements of its concession, and that the concession could not be forfeited. Notwithstanding, it has been stated to this Government that the de facto Government is proceeding to force into liquidation these institutions, without affording them any recourse whatsoever to vindicate their rights.

The situation of the banks has been brought to the attention of the President, and he states that the manner in which these institutions are being treated by the de facto Government leaves little doubt in his mind that the powers whose nationals are affected have real ground for grave complaint. The President, therefore, directs me to lodge a friendly but serious protest against the continuance of such treatment.

The Government of the United States sincerely hopes that the de facto Government will not fail to give heed to this Government's solemn advice and protestation in this matter, and it trusts that the apparent decision to abolish the institutions mentioned will be promptly reconsidered, and that as a result, a course of action will be adopted strictly in accord with the dictates of right and justice, as it is only by such a course, this Government is convinced, that the de facto Government can avoid unpleasant developments in its foreign relations. Wholly aside from the considerations mentioned, it would seem that the de facto government, as a matter of self-interest, would refrain from action looking to the wrecking of the strongest financial institutions functioning in Mexico, which, if properly safeguarded, would doubtless exert a powerful influence in the greatly needed financial rehabilitation of the country.

DECREE DATED APRIL 6, 1917, MODIFYING ARTICLE 5 OF DECREE OF DECEMBER 14, 1916

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, in the exercise of the faculties with which I am invested, and whereas

I. The banking institutions which according to the decree of December 14, 1916, should be put in liquidation are at the present time in an undefined situation because, for the reason that it is difficult to arrive at an appreciation of values due to the recentness of the reestablishment of metallic circulation, it is impossible in a short period to determine upon judicial liquidation;

II. The operations of the Boards of Receivers offer continual difficulties in the way of an exact determination of the condition of the institutions of credit which is essential to the definite decision of the manner of liquidation.

III. The continuation of such a state of affairs is prejudicial to the interested parties and makes difficult the realization of the banking precepts contained in the Constitution of the Republic which shall take effect on May 1, 1917, therefore I have seen fit to decree the following:

Article 5 of the Decree of December 14, 1916 is modified as follows:

All banks which in accordance with Article 7 of the Decree of December 14, 1916 are declared in a state of liquidation shall be administratively liquidated. The Executive will prescribe the regulations necessary to avoid, in making such liquidations, disturbances of a general nature, private damage and loss of time. If during the liquidation it should appear that any bank cannot cover its liabilities with its assets, the Ministry of Hacienda may bring the matter before the ordinary judicial authorities to the end that the procedure may take its course in the courts in accordance with the legislation relative to bankruptcy.

The Ministry of Hacienda, in case that criminal acts are proven, will consign the responsible parties to the appropriate criminal authorities.

Therefore, I order that it be printed, published, circulated and given due compliance.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: My Government informs me that from information it has received it appears that Carranza's need of money has grown so that his Government cannot live without resorting to still worse measures of spoliation against foreign capital and banks in particular.

Should the pressing applications for financial assistance which he cannot fail to make in Washington be favorably received, at least to the extent strictly necessary to avert his Government's downfall, it may be supposed that there would be a decrease or an end of the spoliations practiced on foreigners. But if this should come to pass, as my Government wishes it may, the Government of the United States will undoubtedly look upon it as an eminently favorable opportunity to stipulate express guaranties in behalf of the interests that have suffered. The assurances which I have had the honor repeatedly to receive from your excellency as to the necessity of fully safeguarding those interests and obtaining, when the time comes, compensation for losses sustained, encourage me to hope that you will concur in those views.

In my Government's opinion, it would be highly desirable, in the event of financial assistance being extended to President Carranza, to stipulate guaranties as to:

1. The provisions inconsistent with international law that are found in the new Constitution, and also all legislation conflicting with public or private law.

2. The spoliations from which the banks have suffered, and the arbitrary measures taken in disregard of the contracts entered into by previous Governments or in violation of the rights of third parties.

3. The injuries of all kinds suffered by foreigners. If insuperable difficulties should be met in presenting a detailed enumeration of these various points, your excellency will doubtless deem it expedient at least to use a formula broad enough to cover all the interests that are to be safeguarded.

I take the liberty of commending these suggestions to your excellency and should be glad to know that, taking into account the magnitude of the damages done or to be apprehended, you will kindly entertain them.

DECREE DATED JULY 7, 1917, DIRECTING THE LIQUIDATION OF BANKS OF ISSUE
IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE DECREE OF DECEMBER 14, 1916

I, Venustiano Carranza, Constitutional President of the United Mexican States, to the inhabitants thereof make known:

That, in use of the powers in the treasury with which I have been vested by the Congress of the Union, and considering

That the liquidation of the banks of issue having been decreed on the 14th of December last year, and it having been decided on April 6 last that such liquidation should be of an administrative nature, it is necessary, in order that due compliance may be given thereto, that a special institution, supervised by the Government, be authorized to make such liquidations from time to time as required; have, therefore, seen fit to decree as follows:

Article 1. The monetary commission is appointed to make the liquidation of banks of issue, which should be liquidated in accordance with the provisions of Decree of December 14, 1916, auxiliary banks (bancos refaccionarios) being included in the law referred to.

Article 2. The monetary commission, as a liquidating institution shall represent the bank in liquidation in the courts and out.

Article 3. The board of directors of each bank shall appoint a supervisor (interventor) possessing the same authority as that granted in bankruptcy legislation to similar officials; the appointment of the person selected for this purpose shall be officially communicated to the Ministry of Hacienda.

Article 4. In case the boards of directors fail to make the appointments of supervisors within thirty days from the date of this decree, the Ministry of Hacienda is empowered to make such appointments.

In my interview with the President this morning he informed me that he had received offers from two bankers to lend him the money recently authorized by the Congress to be borrowed, and that he believed satisfactory terms could be made if the United States Government did not veto such a loan. I explained to him the interest which our Government has at present in the matter of foreign loans placed in our markets, but stated that I did not believe there was any disposition on the part of the United States Government to place any obstacles in the way of Mexico securing financial assistance. I suggest that I be authorized to say to President Carranza that the United States Government will not oppose his borrowing, if he can, in our market, up to the amount authorized by his Congress. I think it is important for me to be able to say this now, as there is some danger that the bankers, not finding the business attractive, may seek to place the responsibility for failure of the negotiations upon our Government. Personally, I do not believe he can secure loan from private sources but he intends to try and it is important that he should know that our Government does not oppose his effort so that if he fails he will know the real reason.

It would be well, however, in discussing the matter with him to suggest as your opinion that the chances of the Mexican Government obtaining such a loan from any bankers are slight unless they are prepared to give some guaranty in regard to general financial reforms and recognition of valid vested interests, and also that there should be some distinct understanding that the money would be paid to Mexico in instalments.

DECREE DATED SEPTEMBER 21, 1917, PRESCRIBING THE MANNER IN WHICH PRIVATE CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE CAPITAL NECESSARY FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SOLE BANK OF ISSUE SHALL BE COLLECTED, ETC.

No. 532

I, Venustiano Carranza, Constitutional President of the United Mexican States to the inhabitants thereof make known:

That in virtue of the extraordinary powers in the Treasury in me vested by the Congress of the Union by the act of May 8 of the current year, and considering

That there is a large number of persons who have indicated to the Executive of the Union their desire to contribute to the capitalization of the Sole Bank of Issue to be established in accordance with Article 38 of the Constitution,

That, without prejudice to the negotiations of the Government to secure a foreign loan for the establishment of the said bank, the patriotic offers of the persons who desire to aid in the prompt national reconstruction should be taken into consideration, and that the character with which such offers should be accepted and the form in which the funds shall be collected and utilized should be established,

Have, therefore, seen fit to decree the following:

Article 1. Persons who desire to contribute to the capitalization of the Sole Bank of Issue shall make their deposits with commercial houses which the Department of Hacienda shall designate in each State Capital and the large cities, or with the banking institution in the City of Mexico which the said Department shall select for the collection of funds in the Federal District; and the said commercial houses and banking institution shall deliver to the depositor a provisional certificate for the amount delivered.

Article 2. Federal or State employees who desire to contribute shall make their payments direct to the houses designated without the intervention of their respective paymasters, nor shall the payments take the form of discounts from salaries.

Article 3. The funds collected in the various States by the commercial houses selected for that purpose shall be sent to the banking institution which, according to Article 1, shall be designated to collect funds for the Federal District; and the said institution shall retain on deposit at the disposal of the Department of Hacienda all such funds as well as those it may itself collect.

Article 4. The said banking institution shall issue final nontransferable certificates at par for amounts of twenty, one hundred, five hundred and one thousand pesos respectively, which shall be exchanged for the provisional certificates issued, a final certificate being given in exchange for any number of provisional ones the sum total of which is equivalent to any one of the values mentioned, it being understood that if the amounts deposited by any one person should not reach the total of twenty pesos and thus not enable the holder to exchange the same for a final certificate, such amounts shall be considered as a donation to the Nation.

The funds received from performances or bazaars held for the collection of money for the capitalization of the Sole Bank shall also be considered as donations.

Article 5. Both the provisional and final certificates mentioned in Articles 1 and 4 shall be exempt from stamp taxation.

Article 6. The persons mentioned in Articles 1 and 2 shall be considered as creditors of the Sole Bank for the amounts which they may voluntarily have contributed for the capitalization of the same. Their credits shall draw interest at the rate of five per cent per annum beginning two years from the 1st of April, 1918, within which period the Sole Bank of Issue shall begin operations, unless it is found preferable, in decreeing the organization of the bank, to issue shares for the amounts so collected.

In any case, the Federal Government is responsible for the amounts received for the capitalization of the bank.

Article 7. If it is found, when the Sole Bank of Issue is to begin operations, that the amount collected is less than 5,000,000 pesos, the Federal Government shall furnish the bonds necessary to complete the amount, with which minimum capital the bank shall begin operations. Furthermore, the Government of the Federation shall furnish other assets, to be made known in due time, for increasing the capitalization of the institution stated.

Article 8. The Department of Hacienda shall issue regulations governing the compliance of this decree and shall decide any doubts that may arise in its interpretation.

I, therefore, order that this be printed [etc.]

MEMORANDUM

On making enquiries of the Foreign Office concerning the transaction between Messrs. Pearson and the Mexican Government it appears that the former entered into an arrangement with the latter on the 14th instant for putting an end to their common partnership in the Tehuantepec Railway, dividing between them the assets of the company which include thirty per cent of the Hawaiian Steamship Company. The remaining assets are £436,000 which represents interest owing to bondholders in Europe, £475,000 the capital of the company together with interest due and £489,000 which represents profit not yet shared and funds raised by bonds for the upkeep of the line and repairs for damage caused during the insurrectionary movement in Mexico. The share due to the Mexican Government amounts to about £400,000 whilst their share of the shipping line amounts to about one million and a quarter to one million and a half pounds.

This arrangement was made solely through stress of circumstances, the Mexican Government having violently taken possession of the railway in April and refusing to return it.

It will thus be seen that there is no question of giving aid to Carranza but merely a dissolution of partnership with its attendant results. His Majesty's Government have understood that the United States Government had no objection to private firms furnishing Carranza with money though they would do nothing to facilitate a loan to him. Furthermore, it is to be remembered that Carranza has on several occasions sought to justify his violent treatment of British interests by the allegation that His Majesty's Government had prevented supplies being granted from the United States. The State Department are aware that His Majesty's Government have never sought to impose such a veto and should the statement be again made in regard to the present negotiations there will be no course left to His Majesty's Government but to inform the Mexican Government of the reason for its failure.

Strike spread to American Pierce Oil Corporation. Manager, staff and employes driven from plant and threatened. Manager demanded protection and the few policemen sent immediately supported strikers. Tank ship prevented from loading. At the manager's request I demanded protection and chief of arms categorically refused, openly sided with and insisted upon their right to take measures they consider necessary. Strikers therefore in control supported by I. W. W., Military Governor of the State and local officials, all probably backed by German intrigue.

Only course remaining for me is to ask naval commander to afford necessary protection of American lives in the enjoyment of their rights, which I have done.

Furthermore, I am deeply impressed with the great necessity for some decisive action, alleviating the protection refused by the authorities, in order to curb decidedly antagonistic and in all probability pro-German tendencies of the authorities and save self and citizens worse trouble in immediate future.

No. 141

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Tampico, May, 2, 1917.

STR: I have the honor to summarize the strike situation in this city as it has involved this office and the United States naval forces stationed here.

The strike began April 23 with a notice from the I. W. W. organization to the Cia. Mexicana de Petroleo El Aguila S. A. that unless its demands were met within twenty-four hours, which were to expire at 9 a. m. the following morning, they would take radical measures to enforce them. I have before me a copy of this notice and attach same hereto as an enclosure.² The I.W.W. demands were 50% increase in wages, the eight hour law (which is now guaranteed under the new Constitution which went into effect May 1), and payment of wages in Mexican gold or American money at the rate of exchange fixed by the Government.

The Aguila Company immediately advised the receipt of this notice to the presidente municipal of Tampico, and requested that steps be taken to protect its property. The British Consul in Tampico informed me also that he had made representations to the authorities. Notwithstanding said precautions, at the expiration of the twenty-four hours the strikers asserted control of the situation, and on the morning of the 25th of April when the English manager of the Aguila refinery, Mr. Coxen, and an American chief of department, a Mr. Emery, endeavored to enter the plant they were brutally assaulted from behind with a club. The manager escaped with a blow on the head through a cork helmet, and was simply knocked down. The American was more seriously injured being struck down with a club after receiving a severe cut with a knife on his right arm. He was unconscious for awhile, and I believe is still in the company's hospital.

With the understanding that this was first of all a matter for the British Consul to handle, I took no part in the representations made. The following day, however, April 26, the laborers of the Pierce Oil Corporation (an American concern) struck, and after warning away all Mexican employees of the plant, about fifty of the active strikers went through the plant with clubs, and compelled all American employees to leave the premises. Then they picketed the plant and refused to permit any and all persons, managers or employees, to enter. They also prevented the master of the American steamship Mexicana and some of his crew from boarding that vessel.

Mr. M. H. Warren, general superintendent, demanded protection from the authorities and the presidente municipal sent policemen to preserve order. What occurred when these officers appeared is best shown by a written memorandum to me from the general superintendent as follows:

On the morning of April 26, 1917, about 11.30 a. m. the chief of police of Arbol Grande presented himself at this office with a number of policemen and presented an order to him signed by the chief of police of Tampico, or comandante, ordering him, with the two men who would deliver the order to him, to take four of his policemen and go to the Pierce Oil Corporation Refinery and show the order to the manager of said corporation, and for them to take charge of the policing of the property and to see that no work whatever was performed in the plant, and further that the Pierce Oil Corporation should dispense with the services of their chief watchman, Arturo Garcia, in order that there would be no conflict in authority as the municipal government would take charge of the policing of the property. The comandante of Tampico stated that his orders came from the Presidente Municipal.

By this act alone the authorities took possession of the plant on behalf and carrying out the wishes of the strikers. Mr. Warren thereupon protested to the military authorities of Tampico, seeing that he could get no satisfaction from the civil branch of the Government. The chief of the local garrison, who I believe is also the chief of arms (although I am without official knowledge of this fact), was persuaded to write a letter which Mr. Warren understood to be an order to the proper authority for placing him again in possession of his property, but which was really an order addressed to the strike leaders ("A los CC. representantes de la huelga de los obreros de la Cia. Pierce Oil Corporation"), to permit six American chiefs of departments of the said company to enter the plant.

Having but a slight knowledge of the language, Mr. Warren left the office of the chief of arms satisfied that his right to protection was recognized; but on having the letter translated and finding that the chief of arms had by virtue thereof really recognized the authority of the strikers, and was merely conceding a restricted permit to Mr. Warren to use his own property by sufferance of the strikers, protested and sought my assistance in regaining the full possession of his property, as guaranteed by the Mexican Constitution.

I at once called on the chief of arms, and although it was about 11.30 in the morning, had to hunt all over the town for him. He was found eventually carousing in the Casino Tampiqueño. I politely laid the matter before him and for my pains was told in a half-leering manner, that Americans had no rights in the matter, which the Government or the strikers were bound to respect, and that the latter had perfect liberty to do as they pleased; furthermore that he would not afford the guaranties requested. It is unnecessary to consider the possibility of a misinterpretation of his attitude for the reason that his words and manner were categorical and constituted an emphatic denial.

I then consulted the senior United States naval officer present in these waters, Commander Symington of the U. S. S. Tacoma, as to what should be done. He counseled another effort under more favorable conditions the following morning. Consequently the following morning, April 27 at 11 a. m. I called on him at his hotel. The result of this interview was that he offered to give a written answer by three o'clock the same day.

After waiting in vain throughout the afternoon and night, and being informed that he had again been bulldozed by the I. W. W. into a second change of front in their favor, on the 28th instant I placed the whole matter in the hands of Commander Symington by formal communication (copy attached),² and at the same time despatched a note (translation attached)² to that effect to the chief of arms, in which I also requested an interview for Commander Symington at 11 a. m. the same morning.

It is my understanding that Commander Symington transmitted to the Navy Department a full report of this incident and his part therein, hence I will not go into details more than to say that his interview was marked by that degree of candor and sincerity combined with blunt finality so necessary in dealing with Mexicans and especially with the semi-savage element in control here, an element which is not amenable to reason, logic or the dictates of decency and law; and as a result the chief of arms promised to send, and did send within a few hours, his written offer of guaranties, which I was informed was made effective at the plant of the Pierce Oil Corporation. He did it, however, only because he feared the consequences of a further refusal to do so.

[Extract]

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Guaymas, June 20, 1917.

SIR: For an exposition of the general Yaqui problem, as it has stood for some years, the Department's attention is respectfully invited to my despatch No. 473, of February 5, 1916.² That despatch gives a brief history of Yaqui uprisings since 1911, an outline of matters in dispute between the Mexican Government and the Yaqui tribe, and also shows to what extent American interests had suffered from Indian depredations in Sonora up to that time; also, the report cited sets forth that, while the Yaquis' pretended cause for grievance is that they have been wrongfully deprived of certain lands, they have not confined their activities to attempts to recover such lands by ousting present occupants, but have raided, robbed and killed many Mexicans and some foreigners throughout practically the whole State of Sonora.

When the despatch above cited was written, i. e., in February, 1916, General Estrada with about 12,000 de facto troops, had formed a half circle about the western border of the territory held by the Yaquis, and it was publicly announced—and it was promised officially to the Government of the United States—that an effective campaign to conquer the Yaquis would be immediately begun and carried to success. Unfortunately, the campaign failed. The Mexican troops did not keep up the pursuit after the Yaquis had separated into small bands and retired to the hills. After a few slight skirmishes and half-hearted punitive efforts, the campaign was abandoned, and the larger part of the de facto troops withdrawn. Small garrisons were maintained at Lencho, Esperanza and Guaymas.

This was the situation in the Autumn of 1916, and it was then that a few Yaquis, under Chiefs Mori and Matus, came down out of the hills to Lencho (a small town on the S. P. de M. Ry. about 45 miles southeast of Empalme) and asked for a conference with agents of the Mexican Government. These Indians were promptly received, at a conference, by Generals Serrano and Calles. After an exchange of views, the Yaquis promised that they, as representatives of the tribe, would agree that raiding and fighting should cease if in return the ²Not printed.

Mexican Government gave them the use of certain land and also furnished them with certain supplies of food and forage. To this General Serrano assented; and certain land, in the vicinity of Potam on the lower Yaqui River, was given to the Yaquis. To do this, however, it was first necessary to eject various Mexicans and others, some of whom had been long on the land, and had made substantial improvements.

In further pursuit of this agreement, about 1,200 to 1,500 armed Yaquis came from the hills, and camped in huts built for them at the hamlet of Lencho. Food, some clothing and forage for their animals was provided. Expensive baled hay was actually imported from the United States, to be issued to these Indians, for the use of their inferior mules and horses. It is estimated that $15,000 U. S. currency, or more, was expended monthly, supposedly for the supply of these Indians. The issue of provisions was in the hands of one Colonel Topete, a Mexican army officer. It appears that Colonel Topete actually turned over to the Yaquis only a portion of the supplies received by him. This continued shortening of their food allowance caused dissatisfaction among the Yaquis. From time to time they made complaints. Chief Mori, a young and influential squaw named La Juana and other emissaries went to Hermosillo, to intercede on behalf of the tribe. Also, differences arose among tribal factions. Trouble began brewing between the wild or Broncho Yaquis still in the hills, who had refused to come to the concentration camp, and those at Lencho. In this connection there was issued in January, 1917, a proclamation or manifesto, a translation of which follows, and which was signed by the Yaqui Chief, Luis Espinosa. It reads:

TO THE MEXICAN PEOPLE!

It is hereby made known that we, the primeval inhabitants, who composed the Yaqui tribe and who for 37 years have suffered the pressure of invaders, who by brute force have occupied the lands of this tribe, and calling themselves makers of civilization have forced upon us orphanage and devastation, now therefore we manifest the following to the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army in reply to his various peace conferences and invitations to us to come down from the mountains to our towns to cultivate our lands and on which peace (he says) depends the tranquility and surety of lives for all the State of Sonora as well as for us, the sons of the tribe.

Therefore, we now make it unanimously known, to-day the 13th of January, 1917, in the camp of Lencho, that we are in accord with his brotherly (fraternal) declarations and advances; but, we desire that he withdraw all garrisons in the Yaqui River (region) which are maintained about the boundaries of this tribe. I, as a good and honorable man, in order to fulfill my part, gave orders to the Yaqui Generals Matus and Mori that they should come down into the pueblos of Vicam and Potam, and I will remain in my present position, hoping that the other pueblos shall be evacuated in order that the others of the tribe may gradually locate themselves and that it may come to pass that peace may make itself firm in Sonora; and in so doing we have given evidence that we desire peace and happiness for our race, because experience has taught us that we can never remain in peace if we live with bayonets around us, or with bayonets in our own hands.

For the Yaqui Tribe,

LUIS ESPINOSA

El General Mayor

The Yaqui Chiefs Subilama, Matus, Montero and Espinosa have apparently had little to do with the concentration camp, but have remained in the hills. It is possible that these hill Yaquis induced the already discontented colony at Lencho to rise in revolt. At all events, on the morning of May 25 last, a fight started at Lencho. Yaquis, estimated at from 30 to 50, were killed, and about 150 were made prisoners and taken to Cocorit. Just what the Mexican losses were is not known. A few wounded were brought back to Guaymas. One Mexican trackwalker, employed by the S. P. de M. Ry. Co., was murdered, his mutilated body being found near the station.

One story about the fight at Lencho is that the Mexican officials had planned to begin the attack, in order to remove certain troublesome Yaquis. It is established that on the night of May 24, Colonel Topete took troops from Esperanza, including those in the command of one Colonel Felix, and moved them north to Lencho; this would indicate that trouble was anticipated.

After the battle, a considerable number of Yaquis were missing from Lencho, with their arms; it is reported they went to the hills.

Some days after the fight, the 150 Yaqui prisoners were released; it is commonly asserted this action was taken at the request of General Obregon, who is in the neighborhood on private business.

Following the fight at Lencho, General Serrano arrived from Hermosillo with troops. Guards were placed on trains running through the danger zone, and also assigned to protect railway construction gangs. No expedition was sent against the Yaquis who escaped.

On May 24, according to Mr. Sydney Smith, Superintendent of Irrigation at Esperanza for the Richardson Construction Company, a small band of Indians, perhaps 20 of them, came to Block 34 in the Yaqui Valley and robbed a native family. This band went on to Block 90, and robbed a man named Leifer, said to be a naturalized American, of 18 mules. These Yaquis were from Chief Mori's group. Yaquis have also killed cattle in the valley, some of which belonged to the said Richardson Construction Company. On the whole, however, the Yaquis have not molested Americans. With the exception of the cases cited, no American property has been destroyed or stolen. No Americans have been killed. The houses burned during the fighting at Lencho were not owned by foreigners.

About June 20 a small band of Yaquis raided Camp Verde, near La Colorada. As I passed through Torres Junction a train was being loaded with troops, to be sent to Camp Verde.

It is estimated that from 500 to 600 Yaquis are still living peaceably on the lands assigned to them near Potam, on the lower Yaqui River.

The hill Yaquis are reported hard pressed for food, and much dissatisfied with their treatment by the Mexican authorities. The fight of May 25, however, appears to have been a mere local episode, without serious political significance. Viewed as a whole, and all conditions considered, it does not appear that the Yaqui menace is any less or any more serious than it has been for the past three or four years.

In the said report it is stated that the Internal Navigation Sailors' Union requested an increase in wages and a decrease in working hours, as also an improvement in the quarters and food furnished on board ship; that in view of their not having obtained what they desired, they declared a general strike of all laborers in Tampico, supporting, with this attitude, the petition of the sailors; that such being the status of the matter, the local executive intervened and succeeded in having the laborers return to work and in the employers' receiving them in accordance with the law until such time as the committee on conciliation and arbitration should reach a decision with

The first is said to have been a naturalized and the others native Americans; their nationality not yet definitely established as they were transients in country. These men were first captured by Indians, then later killed. Three Chinese were also killed and it has been reported to the German authorities that four Germans were killed. This last report may refer to the parties mentioned above who have German names. American colony Yaqui Valley is telegraphing for protection for lives and property; some Indians are reported near Ontagota in Richardson Company's land; only 150 troops left here instead of 400 as telegraphed December 6. Garrison at Esperanza is probably 700. My inquiry as to number unanswered. Yesterday I telegraphed Governor pointing out that Richardson Company for greater safety some months ago removed its general offices to Los Angeles but that lately under penalty of fine it was compelled to return its headquarters to Esperanza where this attack has just occurred and asking Governor as to protection measures. When his reply is received it will be telegraphed. It appears Governor Sobriano is doing all possible with force at his disposal but that Indian situation is occasionally beyond control.

Indian situation is serious. Lack of troops, lack of agreement among generals, and fact that Generals Manzo Gomez and Calles are all much occupied with private business prevents vigorous prosecution of campaign. Undoubtedly Americans at Empalme might easily be massacred should Yaquis decide to attack there as garrison there is often less than fifty or hundred men. In the last few days Yaquis have murdered probably two dozen people on outskirts of Empalme and just outside Guaymas. Presence of American naval vessel in Guaymas Bay for week or two would do much to aid Sonora Government and would have restraining effect on Indians. Last week Indians frightened pumpmen from Guaymas water works station and town is now without water except in daytime, pumpmen fearing to work at night. No. 41

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Guaymas, December 11, 1917.

SIR: In further compliance with the Department's telegraphic instructions of December 8 at 4 p. m., I have the honor to report as follows upon the Yaqui situation in Sonora:

A comprehensive sketch of the origin of all Yaqui and Yaqui land troubles in Sonora, and an exhaustive analysis of the causes leading up to the repeated Indian raids upon the colonists in the Yaqui Valley, is contained in my despatch No. 473, of February 5, 1916,² dated at Nogales, Mexico, to which reference is respectfully made. The general situation has not been changed since the detailed report just cited was written, except that the Indians are now operating in larger bodies than heretofore, and are believed to be led by Villistas or other renegade Mexicans. And for the past three weeks the Yaquis have waged war against the Mexican troops instead of the Mexican troops hunting the Yaquis. In the three most important fights of this last annual campaign, to wit: at Suaqui Grande, Bacojori and Esperanza the Yaquis inflicted greater punishment upon the Mexicans than they themselves suffered at the hands of the State troops.

The situation has become quite serious and the State Government is much alarmed. The actual number of armed Yaquis in the field is difficult accurately to estimate; Mexicans familiar with the Yaqui problem through long residence here, place the number of armed men at 1,200 to 1,500; others say it is much higher. There are probably more than 4,000 men in the hills but it seems fairly well established that they have not arms in the tribe to equip all these men.

The Mexicans now have in the field approximately 4,000 men of all arms, opposing the Yaquis. But, because of the wide distribution of the Yaquis throughout the sparsely settled region of southern Sonora, and because of the amazing mobility of the Indians, it is humanly impossible for the Mexicans (with their limited means of transportation) to make long, quick movements of troops and to check every Indian raid, especially since the Indians may strike to-day at one place and a few days later strike unexpectedly at another remote and unprotected point. The Sonora troops have at least 40 machine guns and plenty of rifles; they are short of horses, and much money which is supposed to go for forage and soldiers' pay is dissipated.

Lately a system of registration of tame or noncombatant Yaquis was instituted. Those now found unregistered are punished. More than 1,200 including women and children and aged Indians have been deported to the south. A few, suspected of communicating with the wild Indians in the hills, have been shot. These executions and deportations are said to have roused the fury of the hill Indians and led them to adopt a policy of murder without quarter. Mexican army officers say that the present Yaqui war probably will last all winter.

On December 6 a band of Yaquis estimated at from 600 to 800 attacked the town of Esperanza, where an American corporation called the Richardson Construction Company has its headquarters and near which some thirty or forty American colonists are settled. A detailed description of this fight is made in the report to the said company by its auditor, Mr. W. Ian Hamilton, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.²

To-day a few scattered bands of Yaquis are still camped in the bosque or jungle between Esperanza and the coast although the main body which delivered the attack on Esperanza withdrew to the north. A garrison of about 1,000 mixed Mexican and Indian troops now holds the town of Esperanza but the Americans who are scattered through the valley are constantly exposed to the risk of being killed or at least of having their farms raided. My candid opinion is that there are not enough troops in Sonora adequately to protect these American settlers; and that, bearing in mind the impoverished and unstable condition of the Mexican Government, it is impracticable to expect that the Government of Sonora can do much more than it is already doing to quell the Indians. Hundreds of Mexicans have been killed in the past few years by Yaquis and it is only fair to say that the foreign settlers receive as much military protection as do the native farmers, slight though it is. As was the case with our own Apaches, extermination or segregation seems the only solution of the Yaqui menace; and the immediate attainment of either of these ends is entirely unlikely under the State Government, as at present conducted.

In the fight at Esperanza on December 6 five foreigners were captured by the Yaquis and killed. They were: Lee Rasmussen, Lucas Vogelmüt, Fred Hahn, Jacob Eppler and Henry Tamm. Rasmussen is said by American settlers to have been an American; his nationality is under investigation, not having been definitely established. In baggage supposed to have belonged to him was found the following addresses: Edward Rasmussen, Richfield, Utah; and Joe Hemen, Danville, Nevada. I am communicating with these addresses in an effort to establish the nationality of Rasmussen. Persons for whom Eppler had worked say that he was a German who had once lived on a farm near San Francisco, California, and that he had taken out his first American naturalization papers. It has been established by the German Consular Agent here that Vogelmut and Hahn were Austrians and that Tamm was a Swede. Because of the continued presence of Indians in that part of the Valley where these men were cut and beaten to death it has been impracticable to bury the bodies. In due time, when the evidence is all in, form 192 will be prepared in the case of Rasmussen.

I respectfully repeat the recommendation contained in my telegram of December 8 to the effect that an American naval vessel be allowed to remain in Guaymas harbor for a reasonable time. More than two hundred Americans live in the exposed hamlet of Empalme where the Mexican garrison is often as low as fifty or a hundred men; within the past two weeks Indians have killed Mexican woodchoppers, vegetable peddlers and others in the outskirts of Empalme and Guaymas and I believe the presence of an American vessel here would have a certain moral effect.

The American colony in the Yaqui Valley has twice in the last three days telegraphed to me its appeal for aid and protection; obviously, there is nothing I can do to save them from the Indians except to insist as emphatically as I may in communications to the Governor, that he send more troops to the valley. Yet I well know that other threatened points in the Indian country are also calling for troops and that still more troops are needed in the Sahuaripa district to repel possible invasion by Villistas from Chihuahua.

Simpich reports Yaquis killed at least one American, Lee Rasmussen, besides several other foreigners in raid on Esperanza December 6; that American colony, Yaqui Valley, is urgently telegraphing for protection for lives and property; that Government troops are inadequate to handle situation, particularly at Empalme where Americans might easily be massacred should Yaquis decide to attack and that Indians are reported near Ontagota on land Richardson Construction Company.

Urgently insist on prompt dispatch of sufficient additional forces to afford adequate protection American lives and property, pointing out, as reported by Simpich, that Richardson Company for greater safety some months ago removed its general offices to Los Angeles, California, but lately, under penalty of fine, was compelled to return headquarters to Esperanza.

Yaqui situation unchanged in past three days except that Esperanza garrison diminished to about three hundred. Some four hundred additional distributed at strategic points along railroad with few in Yaqui Valley at Ontagota. Military authorities advised me last night reinforcements coming from Chihuahua and Sinaloa. Doubted that Chihuahua can spare any troops and no trains ordered yet for moving troops from Sinaloa. Further raids to be expected, in which case American settlers are almost unprotected.

About forty-five Americans in Yaqui Valley. Indians are camped few miles outside settlements. No attempt by Mexican troops to attack them. Opinion is general that further Indian activity likely, notwithstanding the under-mentioned assurances. No troops from Tepic or Sinaloa are known to be en route here. Also for political reasons it is believed Calles does not wish to bring troops from other states to Sonora since local troops are inadequate to suppress Indians. It is probable that depredations will be committed in southern part of State from time to time during the winter. Serious danger and news of further killing may be expected. Americans are remaining in [omission] to protect property and I have permission from Governor to provide ammunition for them, but I consider they are in constant danger. ¹⁰ For. Rel. 1916, p. 738.¹¹ For. Rel. 1916, pp. 734 and 737.

Present conditions in Mexico are substantially the same as in September last, and, therefore, attitude United States Government towards return its citizens to Mexico remains unchanged. It follows that reasons heretofore advanced by Department in behalf American mining companies against requirement for general resumption of work apply with equal force at this time.

The fact that a few companies near American border have resumed operations should not be used as an argument why others at interior points, or in dangerous localities, should do likewise. However, the Department is informed that this argument is being used by local authorities in the State of Sonora against the American-owned Mina Mexico Company, located in the Sahuaripa District, and it is stated that authorities threaten to confiscate that company's property if work is not resumed by January 15.

As stated in previous representations, American mining companies need no urging to resume operations, upon return of normal conditions, and in view of that fact, it is most urgently requested that the decree complained of be withdrawn, and that appropriate State officials, including those in Sonora, be immediately notified of such withdrawal by telegraph.

Request to be promptly informed of action taken and advise Department.

630. Reference Department's No. 2051, January 12, mining decree. Say to appropriate authorities that the Government of United States emphatically dissents from General Carranza's declaration that subject matter of representations made by you December 12 is exclusively within province of Mexican authorities and that, under principles of international law, there is no ground for diplomatic discussion this matter. On the contrary, this Government holds that it is amply justified in diplomatic intervention respecting per tenencia taxes imposed in mining decree of May 1 last, since such taxes are confiscatory in effect, as has been abundantly proven in practice, and are detrimental to many American citizens.

Confiscatory operation of these taxes has been heretofore called to attention of de facto Government with relation to cases of a number of American mining companies which have already been forced temporarily to surrender thousands of per tenencias on which large amounts of taxes had been paid and which were needed for future operations but could not be held because of exorbitant tax mentioned.

During the past two years the mining industry has protested continuously, both directly and through Department, to General Carranza and Mr. Cabrera against confiscatory character of tax in question but neither the industry nor this Government has ever questioned Mexico's right to impose taxes in accordance with laws properly emanating from Mexican Constitution. However, the Government of the United States is protesting, and will continue to protest, most vigorously, against a system of taxation having for its avowed object, as stated by Señor Cabrera and the late Señor Amador, the absolute confiscation of the larger holdings of mining claims in Mexico, in which so many American citizens are interested.

In view of foregoing, Government of the United States must insist that the de facto Government give said representations of December 12 prompt and adequate consideration and sincerely hopes that the friendly spirit in which those representations were made will be reciprocated by the de facto Government, and that attempted confiscation of properties will be avoided by prompt action along lines suggested in such representations.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the political and economic conditions in the Durango Consular District are such that it is impossible for the owners of mines to comply with the provisions of the decree dated September 14, 1916, making the operation of mines in Mexico obligatory, with penalty of forfeiture for non-compliance.

In corroboration of the above statement I beg to refer to my despatch No. 136,² dated February 16, 1917, upon political conditions in Durango State, in which despatch the distribution of the de facto garrisons are given. It shows that there are no garrisons outside the capital and along the principal railroad, and that all mining districts and the trails leading to them are in the hands of rebels or at least unprotected.

In addition, there are no railroad facilities to bring in supplies or take out ores, even if it were safe for miners and owners to reach their properties or stay there. I understand that not one of the three big smelters is in operation; the one in Torreon has tried several times during the past year to operate but each time has had to close. The Velardena plant has also been closed for more than a year and has no intention of opening at this time. The Monterey smelter, which is the last resort of miners in my district, was closed some months ago.

All these plants would operate, I believe, if it were possible to get fuel and other supplies, but several years' experience and repeated attempts have shown the futility of their efforts.

8. Your 2. Department desires you to make immediate representations to the de facto Government, pointing out the serious situation confronting American mine owners in Mexico, as set forth in Department's 441, 541 and 613, to Parker. You will add that, in view of the great demand for metals and the high prices prevailing, it should not be necessary for this Government to point out that American mining companies need no urging to resume operations, immediately upon return of normal conditions; that this Government is anxious to lend its assistance, to the end that the mining industry may be rehabilitated at an early date; that, with this purpose in view, this Government invites the de facto Government to submit a list of mining districts which, in its opinion, enjoy the necessary facilities, including military protection and adequate transportation, to make resumption of work possible, in order that this Government may be enabled to advise American mining men intelligently; that, in view of the foregoing, the decree of September 14 should be annulled, upon the understanding that both Governments shall agree to exert their best efforts to have the mines reopened wherever facilities permit and work can be resumed without endangering American lives.

You will express the hope that the plan herein proposed may be given prompt and serious consideration and that the action suggested may meet with favor, to the end that foreign owners of mines in Mexico may be assured that the drastic decrees of September 14 and February 16 will be withdrawn.

Finally, Department suggests that you discuss this matter, as soon as possible, with Minister for Foreign Affairs or General Carranza, for the purpose of ascertaining what the future Mexican policy will be with reference to resuming work in mines and for the further purpose of impressing upon him the advisability of complying with this Government's suggestions as outlined in these and previous representations in the premises.

He assured me again that it was not the intention of the de facto Government to confiscate American property under the decrees mentioned and seems disposed to accept the change. He asked me to embody it in a memorandum which I have done and which he will consider with his colleagues and submit to General Carranza, who is now in Guadalajara, by telegraph. In view of the previous unsuccessful representations with reference to the withdrawal of mining decrees and the assurances given me by the Minister, I feel that it would be not only useless but possibly prejudicial to the success of the plan proposed to renew at this time our request for their withdrawal and I limited my efforts for the present to securing their acceptance of your suggestion. I feel that the representations heretofore made by Parker under the Department's instruction fully cover us in case an attempt is made to enforce the decree in a manner prejudicial to our interests. I will report progress by telegraph. General Carranza will be absent until the first week in March and I will present my letter of credence as soon as he returns.

SIR: Referring to despatch No. 137, of February 17, from the Consulate at Durango, a copy of which is stated by the Vice Consul in charge to have been sent to your Embassy, you are instructed to bring to the attention of the appropriate authorities the conditions disclosed in that despatch, respecting the lack of protection to American property in the Durango Consular District and the operations of bandits therein, and urgently to request that a sufficient force be sent to this section to afford adequate protection to American property from losses by bandits.

You will add that, in accordance with the desires of both Governments that American owned mining property in Mexico shall be worked so soon as conditions shall seem to be safe and convenient for so doing, it is hoped that the de facto Government of Mexico will take early steps to remedy the further difficulties in the way of such working in the Durango district, disclosed in the Vice Consul's despatch, such as lack of railway facilities, forced loans to military chiefs, excessive taxation unjustly assessed by State officials, and confiscations by military authorities of explosives essential for use in mining operations.

14. My telegram February 26, 5 p. m. Discussed with First Chief and Minister for Foreign Affairs plan suggested in your 8, February 24, 1 p. m. First Chief stated that he thought it would be better for the mine owners who were unable to operate, to apply for an extension of time and assured me that in all cases where conditions were such that it was impossible to resume operations an extension would be granted. He also said that it was not the intention of the de facto Government to compromise these properties and that his Government would proceed in accordance with the rules of justice and equity. I would suggest that all American mine owners who are unable to resume operations and who have not applied for an extension of time be notified to do so immediately. These applications should be made directly to the Minister of Fomento in Spanish stating name, title, number of, location and size of the mining property; also the reasons for failure to operate the property. The petition must bear a fifty cent Mexican documentary stamp and be accompanied by the last tax receipt.

SIR: Referring to my telegram No. 14 of March 10, 2 p. m., I have the honor to report in more complete detail the procedure prescribed by the Department of Fomento, Colonization and Industry to be followed by owners of mines in Mexico who, being unable to resume or begin operations, have not applied for an extension of time in which to resume operations, or, having applied for such extension, have not put their petitions in proper form.

These petitions must be in the Spanish language, addressed and sent directly to the Secretary of Fomento, Colonization and Industry, signed by the owner of the property in question, or his legal representative, and stamped with a fifty centavo Mexican documentary stamp.

The petition should enumerate the name, title number, exact location and number of pertenencias in the property, the reasons which the owner alleges for his failure to operate the property, and a request that extension of time be granted in which to begin or resume operations. The last mining tax receipt (boleta) should accompany the petition to show that taxes are paid up to date.

I enclose a copy of the memorandum of information I am sending mine owners who write this Embassy inquiring for information in this matter. I also enclose a translation of a circular issued by the Department of Fomento, Colonization and Industry February 21, 1917, which contains the most recently published regulations and instructions on the subject of ownership and operation of mines in Mexico.

As I have elsewhere reported, both the First Chief and the Minister of Foreign Affairs have assured me that extensions will be granted mine owners in all proper cases, and that they prefer to deal with each case individually, upon its merits, rather than adopt the plan suggested in your telegram No. 8, February 24, 1 p. m.

The action taken by the Department of Fomento, and the declarations of the Minister of Fomento, when certain cases of non-operation of mines have been presented to him personally are in conformity with this reasonable attitude of the de facto Government of Mexico.

CIRCULAR ISSUED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF FOMENTO, COLONIZATION AND INDUSTRY, FEBRUARY 21, 1917

The decree of September 14, 1916, issued by the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army charged with the Executive Power of the Nation, established the penalty of forfeiture for those mining concessions whose owners should not develop their properties in accordance with the requirements of the decree, specifying to this effect a period of two months for resuming work in the mines, which period was extended until the 14th of the present month by circular No. 22 of this Department, issued by the Bureau of Mines and Petroleum.

Various concessionaires have complied with this decree, and have begun work in their mines; others have requested an extension of time in order to comply with it, and another group has incurred the penalty of forfeiture referred to; the properties of this last-mentioned group, with the approval of the First Chief, are therefore subject to intervention by the Department of Hacienda and Public Credit after the Department of Fomento declares the forfeiture of the respective concessions.

In order to comply with the resolutions of the Executive of the 16th of the present month, and in order to proceed with entire justice, this Department has resolved as follows with respect to each of the before-mentioned groups:

First Group.—Concessionaires whose properties are being worked:

1. Concessionaires of mining properties now being worked are required to verify before the first day of next April, in this Department, with the respective receipts or certificates, if they have not already done so, that they are up to date in the payment of the mining tax.

2. They are required to render before the first day of next April, either directly to this Department, or to the agency in their district, a detailed report for each one of their properties, which shall contain the description of operations, both above and below ground, giving the following general data:

A. Name of the property, name of the original concessionaire, name of the present owner, situation of the mine, boundaries, area, number of the title, number of the registry, principal ore which is exploited, and metals or metalloids that it is desired to exploit.

These data will be accompanied by a true copy of the original plan of the property.

B. A clear and detailed explanation of each of the explorations or developments that is being made at the present time. In case of a group of mines, where work of exploration is being done, the development of which extends over two or more properties, the written report of this work will be accompanied by a plan which gives a complete idea of the project, in order that this Department may determine which properties are included in the work referred to.

C. The number of employees and operators, hours of labor, salaries and day wages, centers of population which furnish laborers for this work.

D. Motors employed: man power, steam, hydraulic, gas, electric, etc.

E. The machinery used in the work of development, ventilation and drainage, and in the preparation and treatment of the minerals.

F. System of development and treatment.

G. Production of ore, stating the amount of ore exported and the amount treated; approximate percentage of the ore exported and of the ore treated.

H. The supply of the principal materials employed in the development and treatment of the ores, such as steel, explosives, lubricants, carbides, wood cyanide, zinc, acetate of lead, fusing substances, combustibles, etc.

3. They will also state their nationality. If companies, they will declare whether or not they are organized in accordance with the laws of the land.

Second Group.—Concessionaires who request an extension of time in order to comply with the decree of the 14th of September.

1. Concessionaires of mining properties who request an extension of time in order to comply with the decree of the 14th of September are required to verify before the first day of next April, in this Department, with the respective receipts or certificates, if they have not already done so, that they are up to date in the payment of the mining tax.

2. If, in the request presented by the concessionaires of this group, the properties referred to have not been specified, this should be done, accompanied by a report which contains for each one of them the following data:

A. Name of the property, name of the original concessionaire, name of the present owner, situation of the mine, boundaries, area, number of the title, number of the registry, principal ore which is being developed, and the metal or metalloids produced by the development.

These data will be accompanied by a true copy of the original plan of the property.

B. A report of the work which was done before the suspension of operations, stating the number of employees and operators, hours of work, salaries and day wages, and the centers of population which furnish the labor.

3. They will state their nationality; if companies, they will state whether or not they are organized in accordance with the laws of the land.

4. After these requirements have been complied with, and after considering the reasons stated in the petition, and the general conditions of the zone in which the properties referred to are situated, this Department will fix the maximum extension of time for resuming or initiating work.

Third Group.—Concessionaires who did not comply with the decree referred to:

1. Since all of the concessionaires of mining properties belonging to this group have incurred the penalty of forfeiture, this Department will proceed immediately to forward to the Treasury, (Hacienda) a detailed list of said mining properties, in order that they may be intervened.

2. During the period of intervention, before this Department declares corresponding confiscation, the interested parties may make representations to retain possession of their concessions, stating to this Department the reasons for their noncompliance with the decree; their decision to resume work on the mining property in question; the means at their disposal for this purpose, and the time fixed for doing so. In order to determine whether the reasons stated merit attention, and whether the securities they give for compliance with their proposals are sufficient, these will be presented by this Department to the consideration of the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, when the declaration of confiscation which should be issued for the properties referred to are presented for his approval.

3. In order that this petition may be acted upon it must be accompanied by vouchers showing that the concessionaire has paid the mining tax to date.

4. The respective petition referring to properties should contain the following data:

A. Name of the property and name of the first concessionaire, name of the present owner, location of the mine, boundaries, area, number of title, number of registry, principal ore being developed, and the metals or metalloids being produced.

These data will be accompanied by a true copy of the original plan of the property.

B. A report of the work done before the suspension of operations, stating the number of employees and operators, hours of work, salaries and day wages and centers of population which furnished laborers.

5. They will state their nationality. If companies, they will declare whether or not they are organized in accordance with the laws of the country.

Another group of mines exists which, in accordance with circular number 25, of April 29, 1914, given by the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, and which has obtained permission from this Department to develop its properties before issuing the corresponding title.

The petitioners for these properties are required:

1. To submit, before the first day of April next, a report of the work undertaken by them, stating the number of employees and operators now engaged, the plan of work which they expect to follow, what force or energy they are using, what class of machinery they have installed, what ores they are developing, what is the present production of ore, what is the approximate percentage of ore obtained.

2. To prove within the same period of time, to this Department, with the receipts or certificates, that they have paid the mining tax to date.

3. The report shall contain the following general data:

A. Name of the property, name of the petitioner, location of the mine, boundaries, area, number of corresponding document, (expediente) number of the registry, ores and metals or metalloids that are being developed.

B. Nationality of the petitioner. If companies, they will state whether or not they are organized in accordance with the laws of the land.

The above is published for the information and guidance of the public and those interested.

No. 140

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Durango, March 22, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith in quadruplicate, a copy of circular Number 31,¹² from the office of the Secretary of Fomento, dated February 21, 1917, making new and additional regulations regarding the operations of mines in Mexico as prescribed by the Decree of September 14, 1916. A copy of Article 5 of the Mining Law of Mexico, passed June 4, 1892, under which the great majority of the titles to mining property was taken, and which formed the basis and reason for the immense activity and development of the mining resources of that country between the date mentioned and 1910. It was the faith in the titles, which on their face appear to be in fee simple with a condition subsequent relating to the payment of taxes and referring to the above-quoted law, that led to the immense investment of American capital in the mining industry in Mexico. A translation of Circular No. 30, issued from the Office of the Secretary of Fomento, dated February 16, 1917,¹³ and referred to in the later Circular of February 21, 1917.

In further regard to these circulars Numbers 30 and 31, I wish to state that the circulars reached Durango on March 12, 1917, and first came to the knowledge of the British Vice Consul on the night of March 15; that they had not yet been published in the Diario Oficial or at least no copies of the official paper had yet reached the City of Durango on March 16; that knowledge of the existence of such regulations reached the City of San Antonio in copies from unofficial newspapers a few days ago and came to my attention only yesterday, yet these provisions are to be complied with in regard to the owners of some mining properties by the 18th of March.

I want to state further that the information requested under Circular Number 31, in cases of some of the larger companies having several hundred claims or properties (fundos), will require a large clerical force working regularly for several weeks, since copies of all the original maps are demanded, and itemized data which must come from a thorough examination of all the titles and transfers of the properties from the time of their origin under title, must be compiled. I should add that the title papers, the original maps of the claims, and the drawings of the works, both underground and aboveground, are in most cases in the United States for safety and security against destruction; and that those papers are in San Francisco, Chicago and New York, or wherever the home offices of the mining companies are located.

¹³ See No. 3, February 21, 1917, from Ambassador Fletcher.

I believe, from my knowledge of the situation in the Durango Consular district and from what I can learn from those owning mines in that district, that the great majority have not made the petition requested in the Decree of September 14, 1916; that they did not believe the decree would ever be carried out on account of its absurdity, in so far as it might be of real benefit to the country.

It will follow that a good many million dollars worth of good mining property, some of it companies with investments from ten thousand up to several hundred thousand dollars, will be confiscated almost overnight, because the final determination of confiscation shown by the circular under discussion has not yet reached their notice, and it is required that its provisions be complied with in this class of cases by March 20. Yet notice of the circular did not reach this part of the United States until about that date.

DECREE COVERING THE ACQUISITION OF MINING PROPERTIES WHOSE CONCESSIONS
MAY HAVE BEEN CANCELED

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, in use of the faculties with which I am invested, and considering

That the right to exploit minerals is primarily acquired from the Nation, by means of a concession to be issued by the Executive Power through the Ministry of Fomento;

That Article 13 of the Mining Law of the 16th of December 1909 provides that pertenencias on which the titles may have been annulled, shall not be considered as open to denouncement until after the expiration of a period of thirty days from the date the advice of such cancellation is placed upon the bulletin board of the agency, after which the same may be acquired by the first applicant;

That, in accordance with present laws, such acquisition calls for the expenditure by the party or parties securing the concession of only the expenses required by the Stamp Law together with the charges of the agencies of the Ministry of Fomento, even in the case of pertenencias which may have acquired a high value due to their exploitation and development; and

That, inasmuch as it would not be equitable nor just that concessions should be granted for the exploitation of the subsoil in such case, on the same conditions as in the first, and, as to the State corresponds the efficient administration of properties which come under the direct dominion of the Nation, I have considered proper the issuance of the following decree:

Article 1. The right to exploit minerals in virgin soil, or in pertenencias which may not have been developed, shall be granted on the conditions set forth by the present mining law and regulations.

Article 2. The pertenencias whose concessions may have been canceled owing to the nonpayment of the mining tax, or by reason of abandonment, in accordance with the decree of September 14, 1916, and which, in the judgment of the Ministry of Fomento, Colonization and Industry, represent a high value, due to the present state of development of the same, shall be granted for exploitation subject to a special contract, the conditions of which shall be established by the Ministry stated, and without being subject to substantiation as required by the present mining law and regulations.

Article 3. In case two or more petitions are submitted simultaneously, the right to the concession shall be granted at public auction, and shall be given to the highest bidder, after a study by the Ministry of Fomento of the conditions submitted by the petitioners.

TRANSITORY ARTICLES

Article 1. This law shall become effective on the date of its publication.

Article 2. All existing laws which are in contravention to the terms of this decree shall be without effect.

I, therefore, order this to be printed, published, circulated and duly complied with.

Since this circular was issued, matters relating to mining properties have been transferred from the Department of Fomento to the new Department of Commerce and Industry.

The meaning not being plain for that portion of paragraph 1 wherein reference is made to documents "of a date prior to June 3, 1915 or after that date", I requested the Secretary of Commerce and Industry to clear up this point, and I have received his answer as follows:

By documents executed "prior to June 3, 1915" are meant those put in process of execution before the date stated by Constitutionalist authorities, but continued at a later date by authorities acting without legal right.

By documents executed "after that date" (June 3, 1915) are meant those started in process of execution after June 3, 1915 and before March 3, 1916 by authorities acting without legal right, whose acts are considered null and void.

To continue the proceedings for the first class of documents, the interested parties should ask "confirmation" (revalidación) and for the second class they should ask "reposition" (reposición).

CIRCULAR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF FOMENTO RELATIVE TO MINING PROPERTIES IN OAXACA

On September 29, 1915, by instructions of the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, all acts and decisions which were or may have been made effective with regard to matters under the jurisdiction of this Department, by the so-called Departments of Agriculture and Fomento, of Industry and Commerce, or by any other office not forming a part of the Constitutionalist Government, were declared null and void. 1. Those interested in denouncements of mining properties, who during the period mentioned may have had transactions with any of the mining agencies established in the State of Oaxaca not forming a part of the legal Government of the Republic, and who desire a continuance of proceedings in the said transactions in connection with which documents appear of a date prior to June 3, 1915 or after that date, are obliged to undertake confirmation or reposition of such transactions, and in doing so they will observe the requirements of Circulars 2, 3 and 7 issued by this Department on September 15 and October 20, 1914 and March 31, 1915 respectively.

2. In order that the preceding paragraph may be complied with, a period of time is granted, beginning to-day and expiring on the 15th of June next, at the expiration of which the rights of the concessionaires will cease in the case of those who do not comply with the requirements of this circular, and in such cases the cancellation of these rights will be ordered, the property in such cases being open to a new denouncement without the necessity of its previous publication on the bulletin board of the respective agency.

[Telegram—Extract]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
 Washington, June 14, 1917, 5 p. m.

252. You are instructed to bring at once to the attention of General Carranza the following:

The treatment to which the American owned mining and smelting properties in the State of Sonora are being subjected by the local authorities, as observed by this Government in regard to the relation between employers and employees, appears to be deliberately designed to compel the complete suspension of all operations on these properties.

The sincere sympathy of the Government of the United States with every effort to improve labor conditions and safeguard the rights and interests of labor has been demonstrated too often to be open to question. Its motives cannot be misunderstood, therefore, when it points out that a distinction must be drawn between the just regulation of the relation between employer and employee and the entire elimination of the employer by the employee in the management and control of the employers' property, which is the situation bound to be produced by the treatment above mentioned.

Obviously this situation is prejudicial to the interests of the employees as well as to the State and also is destructive of the rights of the property owners. The inevitable result therefore, will be to stop the operation of these properties, throw the employees out of employment and shut off the governmental revenues derived from internal and export taxes upon the properties and their products.

In these circumstances it is difficult to escape the conclusion that there is an ulterior and unfriendly purpose behind the adoption by the local authorities of this destructive policy toward American owned properties, which is clearly so detrimental to American interests as well. The Government of the United States therefore feels justified in calling this situation to the attention of the de facto Government in the belief that it will recognize the obligation and the advantage of insisting upon the adoption by local authorities of a more enlightened and equitable policy toward these properties in the interests of all concerned.

CIRCULAR

On the 15th of August of this year, this office, by direction of the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, issued a circular setting forth the obligatory dispositions relating to the requisitions which must be met by foreigners who attempt to acquire, within national territory, uncultivated or national land, waters of federal jurisdiction, mining claims or permission for the exploration or exploitation of natural riches, such as forest products, petroleum, fisheries, etc.; warning them that they must previously present, through written document and before the Department for Foreign Affairs, a formal, express and final declaration that, in their capacity of proprietors or concessionaires, and for all effects and purposes relating to the properties they desire to obtain, they consider themselves as Mexicans, renouncing their rights as foreigners, and that of applying for protection or presenting complaints to their respective Governments.

In the third clause of that circular it was declared that all denouncements then filed before this office, or its administrative agencies upon any of the classes of properties above referred to should be suspended until the interested person should present the certificate mentioned, with the understanding that these denouncements should be placed in the files and considered forfeited unless the certificate were presented before the expiration of four months.

The Citizen First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, taking into consideration the fact that many foreigners, due to causes beyond their control have not been able to present said certificate, and he being desirous of preventing harm to those who have acquired in good faith legitimate rights, has seen fit to dispose that the period referred to in said third clause shall be extended four months longer, and will expire April 15, 1917.

661. Department's 638, January 27, 5 p. m. Section 10 of Article 27 of Fomento's initiative reads as follows:

The nation reserves the dominion of all minerals that in veins, stratum, masses or beds of whatever form constitute a deposit of such nature distinct from the components of the soil, minerals or substances shall always be inalienable and imprescriptible and can only be exploited by individuals, civil or commercial societies constituted in conformity with the Mexican laws by means of concessions under federal jurisdiction and under the conditions fixed by the corresponding laws. The minerals and substances that require concession for the purpose of extracting the metals and metalloids utilized in the industries are platinum, gold, silver, copper, iron, cobalt, nickel, magnesium, lead, quicksilver, tin, chromium, antimony, zinc, bismuth, magnesia, sulphur, arsenic, tellurium, strontium, barium and all rare metals, the beds of precious stones, of rock-salt and the salts formed by sea water, the products derived from the decomposition of rocks such as asbestos, amianto, talcum when they take form of vein stratum or pockets and their exploitation necessitates subterranean works, the phosphates susceptible to use as fertilizers either in their natural state or by means of chemical processes, the coal or any other solid combustible which appears in veins, stratum or masses of any form whatsoever, the petroleum or any other hydrogenous carbide, solid or gaseous, which flows from the surface or is found in the subsoil and the waters taken from the mines.

This morning press contains text of the committee report in Congress on this section. So far as I can see the committee report does not materially change Fomento's initiative.

SIR. I have the honor to enclose a copy and a translation of a decree issued April 24, 1917 by the Secretary of Fomento, outlining the procedure to be followed by foreigners who are endeavoring to secure property in Mexico and who have not renounced certain of their rights as foreigners in so far as such property is concerned, as prescribed in the decrees of August 15, 1916 and December 15, 1916.

This decree has not yet appeared in the Diario Oficial and the copy submitted has been taken from a local newspaper.

I have [etc.]

HENRY P. FLETCHER

[Inclosure—Translation]

In view of the very important consideration that, if our fundamental laws concede to foreigners the same rights as to nationals, in no way should it be possible for foreigners by the exercise of such rights to obtain greater advantages than nationals, it was determined by a decree of August 15 last that the following regulations should be observed:

First: Foreigners who may endeavor to acquire in the Mexican Republic free or national lands, mining properties, waters under the federal jurisdiction, or permits for the exploitation or exploration of natural resources such as products of the forests, petroleum, fisheries, et cetera, should in writing before the Ministry of Foreign Relations, make formal, express and definite declaration that in their capacity as owners or concessionaires and in so far as concerns the properties which they are endeavoring to acquire, they will be considered as Mexicans, renouncing their rights as foreigners and the right to complain or seek the protection of their respective Governments.

Foreign corporations are incapacitated from acquiring rights over any of the effects mentioned in this circular until they have become naturalized and submit themselves to the Mexican laws by making the above-mentioned declaration.

Second: An indispensable requisite to the acceptance by the Ministry of Fomento, Colonization and Industry of any denouncement or petition which a foreigner may make with regard to the matters above referred to, even though it be a simple question of an exploration permit, is the presentation with the first petition of a certificate issued by the Ministry of Foreign Relations in which shall appear the declaration above referred to.

If this requisite is lacking, the petition must be flatly rejected, and any action taken or any procedure or decision arrived at shall be null and without legal value before this certificate is presented.

The prescribed certificate must be inserted literally in the titles to property, as well as in the above-mentioned permits concerning property, issued by the Ministry of Fomento to foreigners, and also in the contracts or public documents relative thereto authenticated by notaries public; and its content must, moreover, be inserted as a special clause.

Failure to insert this certificate or the said clause will be sufficient reason for the nullification of the respective title, permit, contract or document.

Third: In all cases already initiated by foreigners which may be under consideration by the Ministry of Fomento or its administrative offices, relative to any of the effects above mentioned, proceedings shall be suspended immediately and shall not be renewed until the interested parties present the certificate referred to. If within a period of four months from the date of this decree the interested party does not present this certificate, his petition shall be considered null and void and shall be filed without recourse.

In view of the equally important consideration that many foreigners might not have been able to present these certificates opportunely, it was determined in a later decree of December 15 last, that the period of four months prescribed in the third section for the presentation of these certificates should be extended for an additional four months, which would expire on April 15, 1917. The aforesaid extension of four months having expired, and sufficient reason not existing for conceding to foreigners a further general extension, and the day being near when the strict dispositions of Article 27 of the Constitution reformed in Querétaro with regard to these matters will take effect, it should be decreed, and it is decreed:

I. The period of four months allowed by the decree of December 15 last, which extended the period, also of four months, fixed by the decree of August 15 last, expired on the 15th instant.

II. All the cases already under consideration which have been suspended by virtue of the dispositions of the third section of the decree of August 15 awaiting the certificate referred to therein, will continue suspended until the organic or reglamentary laws based on Article 27 of the Constitution have been passed, which laws shall determine the action to be taken.

III. Whenever, after the promulgation of this present decree and before the passing of the organic or reglamentary laws referred to in the preceding section, the interested parties may present the certificate provided for in the third section of the decree of August 15, the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army or the Chief of the Federal Executive shall determine whether or not the certificate referred to shall be received, and in case the decision is negative this decision is sufficient definitely to close the case, which shall be filed as soon as the respective decision takes effect.

IV. Bring this decree to the knowledge of interested parties and cause it to be published in the Diario Oficial.

C. AGUILAR

[Subinclosure—Translation]

DECREE OF AUGUST 31, 1916, RELATIVE TO THE EXPLORATION, EXPLOITATION AND COMMERCE OF MINERALS, PETROLEUM [ETC.]

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the United Mexican States, in exercise of the extraordinary faculties with which I find myself invested; and considering;

1. That it is the exclusive faculty of the General Government to make obligatory laws for the whole Republic on mining, commerce and banking institutions, national lands and forest, public lands, waters of federal jurisdiction, fishing in territorial waters, and on the organization of work in the various industries.

2. That the fundamental reason on which is based the said faculty is that the branches indicated constitute the principal sources of national wealth, whose legislation and vigilance must be entrusted to one management and administration only, to the effect that, with uniformity of judgment and action, they will direct them to such channels as will protect them for the prosperity and enlargement of the country.

¹⁷ For. Rel. 1916, p. 776.

3. That among these sources of wealth they must consider as included the coal mines, the bituminous compositions, the petroleum and all other carbides and hydrocarbons, liquid or gaseous, which are found in the subsoil of the National Territory, and which for their immense quantity and incalculable value, make of these products a most important element in the commerce, as well in the interior as in the exterior of the Republic.

4. That whatever the laws or dispositions of the Governors of the States in these branches of production, they not only invaded the proper and exclusive sphere of the Federal Government, but also, complicating and even making contradictory the measures tending to their development and expansion, prevented the legislative and administrative unity necessary for their best investment and profit in favor of the general interests and even of the private enterprises.

5. That in the present circumstances it is the imperious duty of the presiding General Government to care for zealously, not only the conservation of the national wealth, avoiding as much as possible the deterioration or diminishing of them, but also to give facilities and measures efficacious for their greatest production and development, which would have much influence in the real pacification and in the financial budget of the Republic, I have seen fit to decree the following:

Article 1. The Governors of the States cannot issue laws or decrees, nor dictate dispositions, nor administrative measures on commerce, mining, banking institutions, forests and uncultivated and national lands, public lands, waters in the Federal jurisdiction, fishing in territorial waters, organization of the work in the various industries, and on the exploration, exploitation and commerce of minerals, coal mines, bitumens, petroleum and all other carbides and hydrocarbides, liquid or gaseous, which are to be found in the subsoil of the National Territory. This prohibition is extended to all branches which are of the exclusive jurisdiction and competition of the Federal authority.

Article 2. All of the laws, decrees and dispositions which have been dictated or are dictated hereafter, by the Governors of the States, on the branches to which the preceding article refers are null and void and of no legal value or effect.

TRANSITORY.

The present law will begin to rule from the date of its expedition.
For this reason I order that same be printed, published [etc.].

[Inclosure—Translation]

DECREE DATED APRIL 13, 1917, ESTABLISHING THE RATES OF TAXATION FOR PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS

Venustiano Carranza, First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, in charge of the Executive Power of the Nation, in the exercise of the faculties with which I am invested; and whereas the production of petroleum in the country should, because of the great development reached in recent years, constitute a source of income for the Federal Treasury which may bear a just relation to the great profits which companies or enterprises dealing in petroleum obtain from this industry; and whereas it is expedient to exempt from the special stamp tax the petroleum which is consumed in the country for the purpose of aiding industry by furnishing an abundant and economical source of combustible; and whereas the quality of petroleum produced in the country varies greatly and should therefore, in order that it may be taxed reasonably and equitably, bear a tax based on the different commercial values fixed in conformity with the variation in quality; and whereas a considerable quantity of this liquid is wasted because due precautions are not taken in exploration work and in its daily handling, this circumstance causing frequent losses not only to the interested companies but also to the Treasury for taxes not received; therefore

I have seen fit to issue the following decree:

Article I. All crude petroleum of domestic production, its derivatives and the gas from the wells, from the moment that they may leave the fields or tanks, will be subject to a special stamp tax, as follows:

A. All crude petroleum of domestic production as well as fuel not intended for domestic consumption will be taxed according to the following tariff:

Fuel oil will be taxed ten per cent ad valorem per net ton. The valuation of this oil will be considered as pesos 9.50 when its specific gravity is 0.910, this valuation decreasing by twenty centavos per ton for each one-hundredth increase in specific gravity and oil whose specific gravity is 0.970 being included in this variation.

¹Not printed.

The valuation of fuel oil, the specific gravity of which may be less than 0.910, will increase by forty centavos for each one-hundredth decrease in specific gravity.

The valuation of all petroleum of which the density is greater than 0.970 is fixed at pesos 7.50.

Crude petroleum will be taxed ten per cent per net ton on its valuation; which shall be considered as pesos 14.00 when its specific gravity is 0.910, this valuation decreasing in the same manner as fuel oil as the specific gravity increases to 0.970.

Fuel oil intended for the use of tug-boats and tank steamers in the export service will be subject to the foregoing tariff.

The products derived from refining crude petroleum and from the use of the gas of the wells not used for domestic consumption will be taxed according to the following tariff:

- Refined gasoline, one-half centavo per liter;
- Crude gasoline, one centavo per liter;
- Crude kerosene, one-half centavo per liter;
- Refined kerosene, one-fourth centavo per liter;
- Lubricants, one-fourth centavo per liter;
- Asphalt, pesos 1.50 per ton;
- Gas, five per cent ad valorem.

B. Crude petroleum and its derivatives, when wasted in any quantity, either through carelessness or noncompliance with Government regulations, will be taxed double the amount of similar products.

Products derived from natural gas when wasted for the same reasons will be taxed ten per cent of their commercial value.

Article II. The special stamp tax will not apply, except the tax on sales in accordance with the law of June 1, 1906, to the following:

A. All crude petroleum of domestic consumption, whether sold in the country or used in exploration or development work of the companies in the fields or terminals; that which is delivered to the refineries of the country for refining or for use as fuel oil; that used by steamers or tugs in the coastwise trade; and, in general all crude petroleum of domestic production used in any form within the country.

B. All the products derived from crude petroleum of domestic production, whatever may be their denomination or physical state, which are sold or used within the country, provided they have been refined in the refineries of the country, in the fields or terminals of the companies, whatever may be the process employed.

Article III. For the purposes of the present decree crude petroleum is understood to be the natural product as it comes from the wells or springs, provided that it does not contain more than one per cent of water or sediment. Should it contain more, the excess over one per cent will be deducted when the tax payments are made.

Refined petroleum is understood to be all the solid or liquid products of crude petroleum, whatever may be the treatment employed, either mechanical, physical or chemical, which results in the separation of one or more of the substances which comprise the original product. The operation of separating the water from petroleum is excepted, provided that this is done without the application of heat and without the separation of the component parts of the crude petroleum.

Crude gasoline is the distillate corresponding to this product which has not received any treatment of redistillation or purification by acid or alkali. Crude kerosene is the distillate which corresponds to this product which has not undergone any treatment of redistillation and purification with acid or alkali. Refined gasoline and kerosene are those which have received the treatment of redistillation and purification with acid and alkali.

Fuel oils are understood to be the liquid products of a crude petroleum or mixtures of petroleum from which certain oils have been separated to reduce the ignition point. Fuel oils are comprehended in the denomination of refined petroleum, a special classification being made, however, for the purposes of the tax.

Article IV. In order to be able to fix the tax which according to Section A of Article I corresponds to each one of the derivatives of petroleum, the Ministry of Hacienda will issue a bimonthly statement of the above-mentioned articles fixing the prices in the ports of lading, taking the average valuation of these articles for the previous month. The manifests or invoices presented by the companies covering domestic sales of these articles will be made the basis for the statement referred to. In case that no domestic sales have taken place the average valuation taken will be that of these articles in New York or in other ports of the United States during the previous month, deducting the cost of transporting the products referred to from the Mexican ports to the foreign ports. In case that sufficient data for making the foregoing calculation are not available, a price will be fixed equal to that which similar products may have in the United States, this price being the basis of the tax.

Article V. All moneys which come to the Treasury as the result of compliance with this decree must be paid only in national (Mexican) gold coin.

TRANSITORY

Article I. All laws, regulations and dispositions which contravene the present decree are declared null and void.

Article II. This decree will take effect from May 1, 1917.

Therefore, I order that it be printed [etc.]

File No. 812.011/48a

[Telegram]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 6, 1917, 5 p. m.

234. Your No. 4,¹⁸ February 20, 1 p. m. and No. 8,¹⁸ February 26, 5 p. m.

You are instructed to bring the following to the immediate attention of General Carranza:

This Government is reluctant to believe that it is the intention of the Mexican Government to depart from the assurances given by the Minister for Foreign Affairs who stated to the American Ambassador at an interview on February 20 last, in substance, that the effect of the new Constitution would be in no way prejudicial to existing property rights, calling attention at the same time to an article of the new Constitution which provides that no laws may be made retroactive and again at an interview on February 26, that it was not the intention of the Mexican Government to confiscate American property. In consequence of these assurances, and in view of the international responsibilities assumed by the Mexican Government toward other Governments in seeking their recognition on the basis of equality of rights, the Government of the United States has noted with grave concern evidences of an intention on the part of the Mexican Government to give certain provisions of the Constitution adopted by the Constituent Assembly in January last, retroactive application to the rights of foreign owners of property in Mexico, to the extent of destroying or impairing those rights. This amounts to confiscation, and to this the Government of the United States cannot consent because, as the Mexican Government has already been informed by the Government of the United States, it cannot acquiesce in the direct or indirect confiscation of American owned properties or discrimination against American citizens with reference to their legally acquired rights and interests in Mexico.

¹⁸ See Mining Interests, p. 1038.

In this connection attention is directed to the petroleum export tax decree of April 13 and supplemental regulations which appear to contemplate the confiscation of American rights by retroactive legislation, impairing contractual obligations and, inasmuch as action thereunder is required prior to the 10th instant, they call for immediate consideration.

The Government of the United States invites an expression of the views of the Mexican Government on the principles underlying this subject involving national interests of grave importance which cannot be adequately represented by the private property owners concerned but require direct discussion between the two Governments. Pending the consideration of this matter, the Government of the United States earnestly desires that the enforcement against American interests of any confiscatory or discriminatory enactments be suspended.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,

229. Inasmuch as the President is sick in bed and your telegraphic instruction No. 234 of June 6, 4 p. m. cannot be complied with immediately I respectfully request reconsideration of that portion of it relating to petroleum taxes. I fear that representations along these lines now will prove fruitless and possibly harmful and may result in a refusal to discuss these questions on the usual Mexican ground that it is an interference in a purely domestic matter, thus precipitating a situation which I think we should avoid at this time. The House of Deputies has just passed a resolution calling on the President to propose a petroleum law based on Article 27 of the new Constitution and it was charged in the debate that the foreign petroleum companies are endeavoring by bribe to delay this legislation.

This Government is in a difficult position and is [omission] its deficit of about seventy million pesos, not counting prerevolutionary debts, at the rate of 5 million pesos monthly without present prospect of securing a loan. Money must be raised and petroleum and mining taxation bearing largely upon foreigners seems popular perhaps because of Mexico's inability to secure foreign financial assistance. From the conversation reported in my telegram 211, June 3, 5 p. m.² I am not [now?] convinced that this Government is disposed to antagonize American interests [perfunctorily?] and as was intimated in that conversation if financial assistance could be secured from us a full and friendly adjustment of these questions now causing difficulty would be arrived at.

This instruction would seem to involve a change in our present policy with regard to Mexico. I hope that further efforts may be made to work out a satisfactory settlement along lines of friendly cooperation in which American interests will receive proper consideration.

²Not printed.

However, I realize that the Department is in a better position to judge and I shall not fail to carry out in letter and spirit your instructions in the premises, but it seems to be my duty especially as no time will be lost to bring these considerations to your notice.

Would this in your opinion be an opportune time to call to General Carranza's attention the announced purpose of the legislative branch of his Government to adopt legislation declaring petroleum to be the property of the nation as reported in El Universal of June 4 and to ask him whether it is the purpose of his Government to adopt such legislation pointing out in this connection that if this proposed legislation is given retroactive application to existing American rights in petroleum property in Mexico, the views of the Government of the United States expressed in the above-mentioned communication of June 6 as to confiscatory and discriminatory enactments against American owned properties in Mexico will demand immediate consideration. This subject is of course of great interest to many American companies. The Department however believes you should use your discretion in determining whether this matter should be agitated at this time.

By translation Article 6 [transitory Article 6] of the new constitution general legislative action at this extraordinary session is limited to laws submitted by the Executive. The petroleum bill, which the House of Deputies by resolution invited the Executive to submit, was to have been prepared by the Department of Commerce and Industry and was to have been presented to the President for his consideration last week. It was stated that after the President should have examined the bill he would refer it to the Department of Hacienda. As to the revenue features, I am unable to locate just where the project is at present but do not believe it has reached the Department of Hacienda. If not presented to Congress at this session it cannot be discussed until regular session beginning September 1. I am following the matter with the closest attention and will not fail to make opportune representation. I do not anticipate that bill will contain retroactive provisions. You will understand however that values on which export taxes on petroleum are based are revised every two months by the Department of Hacienda.

The Ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to his excellency the Secretary of Industry and Commerce, and has the honor to state that he has received a telegram from the Department of State of the United States in which he is informed that according to information which has been received, the officials of the Mexican Government decline to grant permission to petroleum companies to sink wells acquired under leases entered into since the 5th of February of the present year, on which date the new Constitution was promulgated. It is said that various American companies acquired rights for the sinking of wells during the period between the 5th of February and the 1st of May, based on statements of the Mexican Government that the new Constitution would not go into effect prior to the 1st of May.

In view of the above, the Ambassador, under instructions from his Government, requests His Excellency, the Secretary of Industry and Commerce, to kindly inform him in the premises, for which he anticipates his thanks.

MEXICO CITY, June 28, 1917.

MR. AMBASSADOR: I have the honor to reply to your excellency's esteemed letter of the 22d instant, in which you are pleased to inform me that the Department of State of the United States of America, which has been informed that the officials of our Government decline to grant permission to companies to sink wells acquired under leases entered into since the 5th of February of this year, wishes to know the legal status of the said petroleum companies.

It is true that on the 24th instant the Department of Petroleum of this Ministry issued to petroleum agencies, a telegraphic order prohibiting, until further notice, the issuance of permits for the sinking of petroleum wells, on lands leased on dates subsequent to the 5th of February, on which date the new Federal Constitution was promulgated. According to the text of Article 27 in relation to the first of the transitory articles of our Fundamental Law, the direct control of petroleum and of all hydrocarbons corresponds to the Nation as from the 1st of May. Leases, or contracts of whatever nature relating to the exploitation of these mineral products, entered into on dates prior to the promulgation of the Constitution are presumed to have been made in good faith; but not those which were made subsequent to that date, because the subsoil from which the products are to be secured, and which is the basis of such contracts, does not belong, according to said Law, to the owner of the surface lands, by virtue of the nationalization imposed by the text referred to.

The prohibition declared is, therefore, but a part of the measures taken covering the constitutional text for the purpose of making the same effective.

MY DEAR MR. ARREDONDO: As soon as you left my office this morning I called to see the Secretary of War in regard to the raising of the embargo on arms and ammunition into Mexico, and presented to him in as favorable a light as I could the situation as you stated it to me.

The Secretary of War told me that the advices received by the military authorities of the United States were that the line of communication between Juarez and Chihuahua had been cut by the bandits operating in that region and that to ship arms south from Juarez would be to let them fall into the hands of the common enemy of Mexico and the United States.

In view of these facts he stated it to be, from a military standpoint, most inexpedient to permit any shipments at the present time; and that while he realized the Mexican point of view and sympathized with your Government in the difficulties which it was called upon to face he could not bring himself to authorize a raising of the embargo.

In view of the opinion and decision thus expressed by the Secretary of War I regret extremely to say that for the present nothing can be done to relieve the shortage of ammunition from which, you tell me, General Trevino is suffering.

No. 200

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Mexico, June 5, 1917.

SIR: Confirming my confidential telegram No. 211 of June 3, 5 p. m.,² I have the honor to report that I met General Pablo Gonzalez at dinner at the Belgian Legation last Friday evening, and after dinner had a long private conversation with him on the relations between the United States and Mexico.

The General began the conversation by stating that he had wanted for a long time to have an informal talk with me, and was very glad of this opportunity. He asked me what I thought of the Mexican situation. I replied that, as far as I could see, everything seemed to be going very well. He said the situation was as good as could be expected under the circumstances, but that it was of the utmost importance for the pacification of the country, that the Mexican Government secure as quickly as possible a considerable quantity of ammunition. He intimated—which I know to be a fact—that the national production is of decidedly inferior quality, insufficient, and extremely costly. He said that the Mexican Government was in urgent need of the ammunition which they had bought and paid for in the United States, and which is now, and has been for some time, detained by orders of the United States at the frontier. He said that he personally was very anxious that Mexico should define her position in the great world war, and that he believed she should range herself alongside of the United States. He stated that during the trying times of the revolution, his family had lived in Texas and had received every consideration, and that he had very kindly feelings towards our country, to which he felt Mexico must look for moral, military and financial assistance.

I replied that I was very glad indeed to hear him express such sentiments, but felt that the active German propaganda, the speeches of Ugarte under the patronage of the National University, and the general tone of the Mexican press, indicated a very different state of public opinion. He said our enemies had taken advantage of the recent difficulties between the United States and Mexico, and that Mexican public opinion believed, and would continue to believe as long as the rigid embargo on arms and ammunition should be enforced by our Government, that the United States regards Mexico and the Mexicans with suspicion and distrust and as potential enemies. He said that now that Constitutional Government had been established and friendly diplomatic relations resumed between the two countries, the maintenance of the embargo necessarily made a bad impression, not only upon the Government, but on the Mexican public generally, and that if our Government would consent to allow the Mexican Government to receive the ammunition consigned to it and now detained at the frontier, the first and principal obstacle toward better relations between the two Governments and peoples would be removed, and that he could assure me that public sentiment would change almost instantly. I told him that one of the President's principal reasons for maintaining the embargo was the fear that the ammunition would fall into the hands of the Villistas and other enemies of the Mexican Government. The General replied that there should be no uneasiness on this score, and that he could guarantee that all proper and adequate precautions would be taken. He said that President Carranza and his leading friends and counselors realized the absolute and pressing necessity of pacifying the country by stamping out the numerous small bands operating in the various parts of the Republic, and that while these bands do not constitute a real political menace, their suppression is a prerequisite of normal economic, agricultural and industrial conditions in the Republic. He added that without assistance and cooperation in this respect from the United States, the pacification of the country might be delayed for a long time. He said it seemed to him that the interest of the United States, both individually and as one of the Allies in the great war, was on the side of the early pacification and prompt restoration of prosperous agricultural and industrial conditions in Mexico, whose products, so necessary at this time, could only find a market in the United States and allied countries.

General Gonzalez also referred at some length to the financial condition of the Government. He said that the revolution had been won against tremendous odds, and that the Government would need financial assistance if it hoped to make any but the slowest progress towards the country's rehabilitation. In his opinion, this financial assistance could and should come only from the United States. I pointed out to him that certain acts and decrees of the Revolutionary Government in the pre-Constitutional period, and a number of the provisions of the new Constitution itself, had caused an unfortunate impression in business, financial and religious circles in the United States, and that the Department itself was at a loss to understand the import of some of these official acts and the intentions of the Mexican Government toward American citizens and legitimate and honestly acquired American interests in Mexico. The General said that he realized that some of the things which had been done and some of the provisions of the Constitution might well raise doubts on this score, but that the Mexican Government and Congress would set these doubts at rest in case the plan of closer relations between the two Governments should meet with approval. He intimated that there would be no difficulty in this respect. He repeated that he was expressing merely his personal views, but as one of the leaders of the revolution he had certain responsibilities for its successful consolidation, and could exert considerable influence on the course of events. He said that he had discussed these matters with the President and would again confer with him the following day on the subject of his conversation with me.

As I have heretofore reported to the Department, the question of raising, to some extent at least, the embargo on arms, bought, paid for and consigned to the Mexican Government, was one of the first subjects mentioned by Mr. Carranza to me. He has frequently mentioned it to me, and referred in his public address to Congress, on the 15th of April last, to the continuance of the embargo as hard to understand in view of the resumption of friendly diplomatic relations. General Obregón has also, in informal conversation, referred to their pressing necessity for this ammunition, and hoped that our Government would soon modify its policy in this respect. Cabrera, Hay,

President of the Chamber of Deputies, and, in fact, almost all the prominent men identified with the present Government of this country, have spoken to me on the subject and urged my assistance and cooperation. The press, as might be expected, has been unanimous on this subject.

I have refrained hitherto from making any recommendation on the subject, as I wished to satisfy myself thoroughly in regard to it, and I realize the responsibility involved. I recommend that five million rounds of the Mexican ammunition now detained at the border, be released as requested. Even if difficulties should subsequently arise in our relations with Mexico—which I do not anticipate—this quantity would be a comparatively negligible factor. It is to our interest that this Government be given all proper support to enable it to pacify the country and restore normal economic conditions. It is quite possible that without this support on our part, conditions may arise in Mexico which would distract our attention and seriously interfere with the concentration of all our efforts on the great enterprise in which we are now engaged. As long as the embargo is maintained as at present, internal conditions will improve but slowly, if at all, and our relations with Mexico will be clouded by suspicion and unfriendliness. The embargo, unless we contemplate war with Mexico, must be raised sooner or later, and I think the time has now come for it to be modified to the extent above indicated. This will give me an opportunity to determine whether the effect will be what President Carranza, General Gonzalez and other leading Mexicans believe it will be. If the effect on the Mexican Government and Mexican public opinion should prove beneficial, the way is open for a solution of our Mexican difficulties, along lines of friendly assistance, mutual confidence and self-respect.

While, as stated in my telegram, this to me appears to be a diplomatic rather than a military question, I would suggest that, if the War Department desires expert opinion, Major Frank R. McCoy, until recently Military Attaché of this Embassy, who should have arrived in Washington this week, be consulted.

MEXICAN EMBASSY,
Washington, July 7, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to inform your excellency that my Government has instructed me to deliver to your excellency the following note:

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to apprise your excellency that there are now detained at the frontier, by order of the American authorities the following munitions: 2,000,000 seven-millimeter cartridges and 133,000 30 x 30 cartridges at Laredo; 450,000 30 x 30 cartridges at Eagle Pass, and 150,000 30 x 30 cartridges at El Paso.

As this ammunition was bought by the Government of Mexico prior to the prohibition to export arms and ammunition from the United States of America ordered by the Government of that Republic, the Citizen President of the United Mexican States asks, through your excellency's worthy medium, the President of the United States of America, to be pleased to direct whom it may concern to let the above-described ammunition be forwarded to the Mexican Government on the ground that they were detained on the strength of an order which was not in effect at the time of the purchase.

Hoping that the Government of the United States guided by the highest principles of justice and the wish not to injure the rights of Mexico, will be pleased to accede to the desires of the Mexican Government, I take pleasure in renewing to your excellency the assurances of my highest and most distinguished consideration.

E. GARZA PÉREZ,

Undersecretary of State for Foreign Relations

I have the honor to bring the contents of the foregoing note to your excellency's knowledge with the hope that in the desire to affirm the good friendship that exists between the two countries, my Government's wishes will be attended to, and thanking your excellency in advance therefor, I renew [etc.]

Proclamation by the President

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas Congress has enacted, and the President has on the fifteenth day of June, 1917, approved a law which contains the following provisions:

"Whenever during the present war the President shall find that the public safety shall so require, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export from or ship from or take out of the United States to any country named in such proclamation any article or articles mentioned in such proclamation, except at such time or times, and under such regulations and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress: Provided, however, that no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another.

"Any person who shall export, ship, or take out, or deliver or attempt to deliver for export, shipment, or taking out, any article in violation of this title, or of any regulation or order made hereunder, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than two years, or both; and any article so delivered or exported, shipped, or taken out, or so attempted to be delivered or exported, shipped, or taken out, shall be seized and forfeited to the United States; and any officer, director, or agent of a corporation who participates in any such violation shall be liable to like fine or imprisonment, or both.

"Whenever there is reasonable cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, is about to carry out of the United States any article or articles in violation of the provisions of this title, the collector of customs for the district in which such vessel is located is hereby authorized and empowered, subject to review by the Secretary of Commerce, to refuse clearance to any such vessel, domestic or foreign, for which clearance is required by law, and by formal notice served upon the owners, master, or person or persons in command or charge of any domestic vessel for which clearance is not required by law, to forbid the departure of such vessel from the port, and it shall thereupon be unlawful for such vessel to depart. Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this section shall take, or attempt to take, or authorize the taking of any such vessel out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and her forbidden cargo shall be forfeited to the United States."

And whereas, the public safety requires that succor shall be prevented from reaching the enemy;

Now, therefore I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim to all whom it may concern that, except at such time or times and under such regulations and orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress, the following articles, namely: Coal, coke, fuel oils, kerosene and gasoline, including bunkers; food grains, flour and meal therefrom, fodder and feeds, meat and fats; pig iron, steel billets, ship plates and structural shapes, scrap iron and scrap steel; ferro-manganese; fertilizers; arms, ammunition and explosives, shall not, on and after the fifteenth day of July, 1917, be carried out of or exported from the United States or its territorial possessions to Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Albania, Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, France, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Germany, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Great Britain, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Japan, Liberia, Leichtenstein, Luxemburg, Mexico, Monaco, Montenegro, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, The Netherlands, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates, Norway, Oman, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Peru, Portugal, her colonies, possessions, or protectorates, Roumania, Russia, Salvador, San Marino, Serbia, Siam, Spain, her colonies, possessions or protectorates, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela, or Turkey.

The orders and regulations from time to time prescribed will be administered by and under the authority of the Secretary of Commerce, from whom licenses, in conformity with the said orders and regulations, will issue.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this ninth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-second.

For your information. Following statement given to press by Department:

In response to a request from the Mexican Government, the Department of State has informed the Mexican Government that it will release for shipment into Mexico 2,700,000 rounds of ammunition belonging to the Mexican Government. This ammunition was ordered and paid for by the Mexican Government prior to the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions into Mexico, and has been held in storage on the border for more than a year and a half. The Mexican Government represented to the Department of State that it was in urgent need of the ammunition, and that it was absolutely necessary for safeguarding important lines of communication and to afford protection in the outlying districts to American and other foreign interests engaged in the production of war material essential to the United States at this time.

Ambassador Fletcher will return immediately to Mexico and arrange with the Mexican Government details of delivery which will insure its reaching the hands of the representatives of the Mexican Government.

The State Department reached a decision in the matter after full consultation with the War Department and Ambassador Fletcher.

In view of the facts reported in your 759 and the well known hostility of the Villistas to all Chinamen I deem that the laws of humanity demand that those amongst them who will be exposed to this hostility as a result of having served or befriended expeditionary force in Mexico should be given the right of temporary asylum in the United States. To that end you are directed to authorize such Chinamen to accompany your force to the border and cross to Columbus, N. M., where they will be given the right of temporary asylum. They must agree to observe such restrictions as may be necessary to place upon them pending settlement of their case by the State Department. Each man will be carefully noted and necessary precaution taken to see that all remain within jurisdiction. No expense to the United States Government will be incurred in granting this privilege. You will report to these headquarters the number that avail themselves of this privilege.

No. 1631

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Referring to your notes of July 31,² August 26,² and October 3² last in regard to the recognition of the French Protectorate in Morocco, I have, as a result of careful consideration, reached the conclusion that, owing to the pressure of business before the Senate of the United States, which would have to approve any treaty entered into between our countries, and in view of your expressed desire that my Government take prompt action relative to the Moroccan situation, possibly the best mode of procedure to be adopted would be to consider separately the question of the recognition of the Protectorate and the question of our capitulatory and other rights in Morocco, as has been done, I understand, by all the European Powers in respect to their relations to Morocco. In order to advance the matter with all possible expedition, I am prepared to recognize in a formal note the French Protectorate in Morocco, and concurrently recommend that the item of salary for our Minister to Morocco in the Appropriation Bill now pending in Congress be changed to an item of salary for a Diplomatic Agent to that country. I am persuaded to make this proposal informally, as I am desirous, as far as possible, to meet the wishes of your Government and your people, to whom we are bound by a traditional and sincere friendship. If this proposal is agreeable to your Government and this step is accomplished, there would remain for further negotiation the question of our capitulatory and other rights in Morocco, which could be taken up in due time.

I shall be pleased, my dear Mr. Ambassador, to hear from you on this matter at your earliest convenience, since if any change such as I have indicated is to be made in the Diplomatic Appropriation Bill, it is essential that it be made as soon as possible.

the sentiment which prompted you to propose that the recognition by the United States of our protectorate in Morocco be now made definitive by a formal note of yours, while you would at the same time recommend that the item of salary for the American representative in that country be changed from one for a Minister to one for a Diplomatic Agent. These suggestions are accepted with a satisfaction enhanced by the motives which inspired them.

As for the abrogation of capitulations, while we have no objection to the matter being separately considered, we earnestly desire, as you know, that it be taken up at once, so that we could sign the convention referred to in previous correspondence, e. g., in my letter of August 26,³ the matter to be dealt with by the Senate as soon as circumstances will allow.

You will kindly remember that almost all countries interested therein have already consented to such an abrogation; among them Russia, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Greece, Portugal, Japan, Italy, Denmark, Belgium, Holland. Austria-Hungary had assented a few weeks before the war declared on us by her ally, Germany, put an end for both to the régime of capitulations in Morocco.

I hope you may find it possible to agree to this desire of my Government, taking into account the fact that the American recognition of our Protectorate will have its effects only when this question is settled and this other fact that the American interests at stake are of very limited importance and are sure to be amply protected under the system introduced by us in the Sheriffian State.

Washington, January 19, 1917.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am instructed by my Government to express to you its sincere appreciation of the decision of the Government of the United States to recognize our Protectorate in Morocco. The terms in which you were so good as to notify it to us enhanced the value of this token of good will, and my Government is confident that the traditional and sincere friendship between our two countries alluded to in your letter of the 15th will be still increased by this recognition.

On one passage of your letter, I am asked to draw your attention, the wording of which being not in exact conformity with facts. It is stated there that the Government of the United States "recognizes the establishment of the French Protectorate over the French Zone of the Sheriffian Empire".

In reality the Protectorate established by France in Morocco, with the assent of its ruler, covers the whole of that country, as evidenced by the terms of the Treaty of March, 1912, a copy of which I had the honor of transmitting to you on January 3, 1913. The Spanish rights are mentioned in it (Art. 1) as being to be defined by an agreement between the Governments, not of Morocco, but of France and of Spain. Every Power, Spain included, has recognized that our Protectorate was coextensive with the total area of Morocco.

My Government would be much obliged to you if you would kindly cause this involuntary error to be amended and the text of your letter of recognition to be so worded as to refer to the French Protectorate, as concerning Morocco itself, and not simply to the French Zone thereof.

SPANISH EMBASSY,
Washington, July 25, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to apprise your excellency that for about three years there have been in operation at Tetuan, Larache and other points in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco, courts of justice consisting of Spanish magistrates and offering the same guaranties as any other court in the peninsula with respect to the trial of Europeans.

The suppression of the capitulation régime must necessarily go with the existence and operation of the said tribunals since the régime finds its excuse for being in those countries only where there are no courts acquainted with the European and American laws and then serves as a safeguard to foreigners who are thus saved from trials under laws enacted by a race different from theirs and living in a much belated intellectual atmosphere.

These reasons sufficed to France, Belgium, Russia, Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden and several other countries to renounce the said capitulation régime and privileges in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco and in compliance with instructions received I have the honor to apply to your excellency and to express to you how highly gratified His Majesty's Government would be if the Government of the United States would likewise renounce the capitulation régime in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco and by such renunciation recognize the said Spanish Zone as has already been done by the nations above cited.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of July 25, 1917, stating that for about three years there have been in operation at Tetuan, Larache and other points in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco, courts of justice consisting of Spanish magistrates and offering the same guaranties as any court in the Spanish peninsula with respect to the trial of Europeans; that the creation of these courts has seemed to France, Belgium, Russia, Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden and other countries a sufficient reason for them to renounce the capitulatory régime and privileges in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco; and that the Spanish Government would be highly gratified if the Government of the United States would renounce the American capitulatory rights in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that under the provisions of the United States Constitution the American capitulatory rights in the Spanish sphere of influence in Morocco can only be renounced by a treaty between Spain and the United States, regularly ratified by the United States Senate.

BENJAMIN L. JEFFERSON

[Inclosure—Translation]

Message of the President of the Republic

MANAGUA, August 1, 1917.

Upon entering the Presidency I met with the grave economic situation which you all know, without more revenues available for the needs of the ordinary budget than the small revenues from whisky and tobacco and other lesser ones, called internal revenues, which, as a result of the election struggle recently passed, were in a sad state of disorganization. The former Administration had made contracts with the bankers, by which the latter forbore to collect from the customs duties the part to which they were entitled by the preceding conventions, awaiting the arrangement to capitalize the respective coupons, which according to the last extension of time would begin to be refunded in whole from the customs receipts the first of January of the present year, exactly on the very day on which the transfer of power was effected. In addition to this lack of resources is added to the burden of the State the back salaries not paid, as well as the value of the tobacco received from the producers, which amount to half a million dollars. Also there was in the hands of private persons a great quantity of stamps, stamped paper, whisky, tobacco and other species which were given them in payment for documents of credit against the State through compromise or exaction, preferences which constituted a powerful obligation for immediate payment from the few and limited receipts which remained for the Government.

Such was the problem which I had to confront from the first of January, 1917, outside of the most complicated problem for the settlement of the foreign debt and the consolidation of the internal debt.

The Minister of Finance and the other members of his department managed through the wise administration of the internal revenues to make them rise from the depression in which they were found, and produced an increase of almost forty per cent over what they formerly yielded. On the other hand, they have continued making the economies compatible with our existence as a nation, without impairing the efficiency of the Government as guarantor of public order, and by endeavoring to eliminate all superfluous expenses without suppressing those necessary and useful at present and for assuring the prosperity of the future. We have asked of the people new taxes, which it has been endeavored to make fall on the businesses which at present yield the greatest profits. But all these measures, although effective, bear their fruit with the slowness which does not correspond with the urgent needs of the moment, and from this it results that from the first day of January were extended the efforts of the Government towards a definite arrangement with the bankers and to cause to be brought to the country the three million dollars of the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty, which according to the clause expressed in said treaty should have been deposited to the order of this Government from the date of its ratification, now more than a year ago. Referring to these arrangements the previous Administration left behind projects with a certain fixed direction which, although they were not satisfactory to the men of the new Government, necessarily had to serve as the base for the renewal of negotiations.

During the first days of January last, instructions were given to our Minister in Washington to request of the American Government the payment of half a million dollars in part payment of the total amount which is due us by the treaty previously cited, for the purpose of paying the back salaries and the tobacco debt to which I have referred and to leave the balance of the three millions for the arrangements which would have to be made, in accordance with the Department of State, by virtue of the former contracts with the bankers which gave to the latter the right to be paid with said money for the amounts loaned to the former Government. The Department of State agreed to give the money requested to be used as was proposed; but it expressed the desire that first a definite arrangement should be made with the Ethelburga and the bankers, in accordance with the plan of which I have heretofore made mention and which proposes the appointment of a Financial Adviser and the creation of a commission charged with the revision of the whole public debt, including the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and with the sole exception of those loans in force and guaranteed by special hypothecation of the customs duties. After the discussions engaged in and the explanations of the case which you well know, I proposed to you to pass the decree which established the said Commission on Public Credit, which is in operation in this capital and which I believe will give beneficial results to the country.

The appointment of the Fiscal or Financial Adviser, although it is not a new idea, since its establishment was approved in the Treasury Bills Agreement, with which the Assembly, convoked because of the dissolution of the first Constituent Assembly, was acquainted, is, in my judgment, an important step, which deserves the consideration and study of the principal men of the country, and from the beginning I have tried to learn the opinions of the leaders of both parties, given in confidence and free of the restrictions which the respect for certain popular prejudices or the political interest might impose; sober judgments; entirely free from the passion with which complex problems generally are treated, which at times are claimed to be settled, having in view opinions hastily given, even when having no insuperable prejudices.

It is the opportunity for stating now that I am firmly convinced of the advantage, which there is for Nicaragua in maintaining the closest political relations with the Great Republic of North America and which is to the interest of our own system of government, to our own security, to stimulate those relations, in order that they may grow into an increasing and perfect friendship between both Governments and peoples; and it is in the light of this judgment that we must examine that question and not by the erroneous method of an exaggerated patriotism which converts itself into vain pride, when it is not inspired with the spirit of sacrifice, which has always filled the spirit of all patriots who in the course of history and in all countries have aspired to the creation of political entities, which the succeeding generations may with pride call fatherland.

About this cardinal idea have been centered the negotiations which I have endeavored to conclude with the entire approval of the Cabinet and in the midst of lack of funds in the Public Treasury, of which you, more than anyone, are well acquainted. The result of these negotiations cannot help but be the exact consequence of the antecedents pointed out, since the Government must, in all cases, be inspired with the strict fulfilment of the obligations contracted. Any observer of the present events in the economic world will arrive at the conclusion that the power of nations is allied with the establishment of its credit and no one can deny that this can be preserved except by the faithful fulfilment of its pledged word and the due respect for the honor of the Nation, but from this it should not be understood that the Government should refrain from taking steps for the betterment of the existing conditions, a thing which can only be obtained by means of the firm establishment of its own credit.

Inspired, then, with the ideas previously expressed, the Executive has come to agree upon the bases which the Minister of Finance will submit to your worthy attention, after being approved by the Cabinet, and in regard to which he will give you the necessary explanations and will present to you all the documents in the case, even those of confidential character. There are two points to which I wish to call your special attention; that the main object be accomplished within my own period of government and that the Republic reserve the right to pay at any time its debts and to remain free of all other obligations, thus leaving the field open for the new economic conditions to which the world will be subjected at the termination of the present universal catastrophe.

In wishing you patriotic prudence in your deliberative task, I am pleased to give you my cordial salutation of welcome.

BENJAMIN L. JEFFERSON

[Inclosure—Translation]

Message of the President of the Republic, General Emiliano Chamorro, to the National Congress in ordinary session December 15, 1917

When I became President I found an insolvent Treasury and a public debt not liquidated, that for years had gone on increasing through improvidence and governmental optimism. During General Zelaya's dictatorship, to the external debt enlarged by the Ethelburga loan obtained in Europe, were added the emission of customs bonds and also that of compulsory and personal loans which were never paid, and which were so numerous and without limit that there exists no exact account of them. To this must be added the later emission of the Bonds of Internal Revenues, whose payment the State unfortunately did not make, thus ruining the credit of the Government. The past wars and revolutions have caused to fall on the State the burden of indemnities legally accepted, and these and other amounts due some years ago have placed us in the hard position of not being able to obtain the necessary credit for the good advancement of the country. This floating and unliquidated debt has meant also a political danger, since Nicaragua has often been exposed to a forcible collection of her debts, it being enough to say that of the so-called internal debt which has been placed under the direction of the Public Credit Commission 43% belongs to foreigners who have continually, through the diplomatic representatives of their respective countries, demanded immediate payment.

This also explains the necessity to give the bonds to be issued for the total extinction of the debt such securities as will make them easily received and accepted with entire confidence, even abroad, giving to them such guaranties that their own funding shall be placed beyond the contingencies or failures which nullified the emission of the former, and such securities are given equally to the Nicaraguan creditors without party distinction and to the subjects of foreign nations.

To the Public Credit Commission have been presented claims for twelve and a half millions in value which, through a rigorous scaling down of some and the voluntary agreements of others, are going to be paid with a million and a half in actual cash out of the remainder of the money from the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty and four millions in Customs Bonds at 5%, whose emission you have just authorized.

The agreements, which have been made to arrive at the unavoidable and transcendent end of the consolidation of our debt, have met with the bitterest censure from the opposition. That censure is explained by the necessity of attacking the Government, not being able to reproach any of the proceedings as contrary to law or its political principles. Some others, imbued with certain ideas of exaggerated nationality, have pretended to see in some of the clauses foreign political intervention or violations of the Constitution. It has been argued that the obligation contracted by the Government to limit the budget for general expenses to a certain fixed sum deprived the Congress of a constitutional function, and that the establishment of a High Commission in whose appointment the American Government has part constituted a danger for the sovereignty of the Republic.

Arguments easily refuted, if it be considered that the respective contracts had to be approved by Congress and that the financial plan is simply a law passed by the same high body. It is Congress, then, which making use of its constitutional functions of fixing the budget, fixes it from this moment to ninety-five thousand dollars a month for expenses exclusively administrative, and it does so until there are no more bonds to pay. It is natural that creditors, and above all anyone to whom payments are being made in the form in which Nicaragua has been doing it should seek the proper guaranty and security with respect to a debtor, who for twenty-five years has been at fault, and that the latter should reduce those expenses that are above its revenue capacity. And precisely those expenses exceeding simply administration, which we might call unproductive and which are the ones that have made the constant deficit in former budgets, are the only ones fixed, since the surplus of the revenues, which will be quite considerable when the present abnormal situation passes, will be spent after the payment of the debt on works of public utility, as it will remain for the free determination of Congress.

No person or nation considers its dignity and sovereignty lessened when for the solution of its problems it agrees that any arising difficulty should be settled by arbiters. On the contrary, in the disputes among various countries there are always sought as arbitrators citizens or sovereigns of nations without any connection with the interested parties. This is precisely what has been done in creating the High Commission. I stated before that 43% of the internal debt, belonged to foreigners, and the history of our small nations teaches what sorrowful complications have arisen in Spanish America from that class of binding obligations, for the best solution of which there is finally recourse to arbitration or mixed international tribunals. In our case all contingencies are once and for all solved, with the maintenance of the High Commission in whose organization the American Government intervenes. The moral force of the Great Republic extends over our contracts its powerful protection which, if it is a guaranty for the exact fulfilment of the assumed obligations, also means that our weak country shall no longer be a victim of any class of demands.

Decision of the Central American Court of Justice

MANAGUA, March 9, 1917.

Central American Court of Justice, San José, Costa Rica, at five on the afternoon of March 2, 1917. The deliberations of the Court being considered as finished, in order to determine the sentence in the case begun by the Government of El Salvador against that of Nicaragua, it proceeded to vote on the twenty-four points which the approved questions contain, with the following result.

QUESTIONS

The first question which reads: "The absolute demurrer of incompetency through lack of jurisdiction having been proposed by the high defendant party, on dismissing the legal action which took the proper course with regard to the complaint, does the Court proceed to grant such demurrer inasmuch as this refers to the original suit, notwithstanding the fact that the complaint had been readmitted by the Court, by its decree of September 6, 1916?" All the Judge replied in the affirmative.

The second question which reads: "Is it to be considered that the Court is ecompetent to try the case, by reason of the matter under discussion?" All the Judges answer affirmatively, Judge Gutiérrez Navas adding, in so far as its refTrs exclusively to the Republics of Nicaragua and Salvador.

he third question which reads: "The suit being in relation to the contract intirests of a third nation which is not a party to it and is not subject to the jursdiction of the Court, has this Court the right to pass judgment thereon, to theextent that it may determine the legal rights between El Salvador and Nica-rag ua?" All the Judges answer affirmatively, Judge Gutiérrez Navas adding th same declaration which he gave to the former question.

The fourth question which reads: "Do the details of the suit dated September 30 and October 2, 1916 contain matter foreign to the origin of the diplomatic controversy which led to the litigation?" Judges Meda, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra replied in the negative, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas in the affirmative.

The fifth question which reads: "According to the replies given to the question which precedes and to the holdings of the Court, was the Government of Salvador obliged first to seek an agreement with Nicaragua through diplomatic channels on the concrete points to which the details of the suit refer?" Judges Meda, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra answered negatively, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas affirmatively.

The sixth question which reads: "Is the Court competent to try and decide upon the petitions contained in the details to which reference has been made?" Judges Meda, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra replied affirmatively, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas in the negative.

The seventh question which reads: "Is the Court competent to try and to determine the right as to the initial petition of the suit?" Judges Meda, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez replied yes, in order to determine legal rights between the high litigating parties; Judge Gutiérrez Navas no, because he considered it legally impossible to pass judgment upon the failure to fulfill a contract, without affecting the rights of one of the contracting parties; and Judge Bocanegra yes, in order to try and to pass judgment upon legal rights, which exist between the Central American States which are contending in the matter, but not to say anything which might affect the third parties which are not parties to the suit.

The eighth question which reads: "Consequently should they accept or reject the demurrers proposed by the defendant party?" Judges Meda, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez replied that they should be rejected; Judge Gutiérrez Navas that they should be accepted; and Judge Bocanegra that the demurrer proposed should be accepted in that which refers to the final part of the reply given by the plaintiff to the seventh question, and all the rest should be rejected.

The ninth question which reads: "With regard to the geographical and historical conditions, as also to the situation, extension and configuration of the Gulf of Fonseca, how should the international legal situation be determined?" They replied unanimously that it is a historical bay and with the character of a closed sea.

The tenth question which reads: "To which of those characteristics do the high litigating parties agree?" They replied unanimously that they agree that it is a closed sea.

The eleventh question which reads: "What is the legal status of the Gulf of Fonseca according to the replies which precede and to the agreement of the high contending parties, expressed in their arguments with regard to their right of possession and other derived rights?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra replied that the legal status of the Gulf of Fonseca according to the terms of the question is that of belonging to the three countries which surround it, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas that the right of possession belongs in respective portions to the three bordering countries.

The twelfth question which reads: "Do the high contending parties agree on the fact that the waters pertaining to the zone of control corresponding to them unite and flow together in the mouth or entrances of the Gulf of Fonseca?" They answered that they agree in that the waters which form the entrance of the Gulf are one.

The thirteenth question which reads: "What direction should the zone of maritime control follow with regard to the shores of the countries which surround the Gulf?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra replied that they should follow the contours of their respective shores, within as well as without the Gulf; and Judge Gutiérrez Navas that the radius of a marine league of the zone of the territorial sea should be measured, with respect to the Gulf of Fonseca, from a line drawn across the bay to the narrowest part of the entrance to the open sea and from the zone of control, it extending three leagues in the same direction.

The fourteenth question which reads: "Does there exist joint ownership between the Republics of El Salvador and Nicaragua in the waters not on the shores of the Gulf and moreover in those which flow together and comprise the respective zones of control in which they exercise the rights of police, national protection and defense?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra replied yes, that there is joint ownership without injury to the right which belongs to Honduras in the waters not littoral, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas replied in the negative.

The fifteenth question which reads: "Consequently should there be excluded from the joint ownership or possession of the maritime league of littoral waters which belongs to each one of the states surrounding the Gulf of Fonseca their respective shores of terra firma and of their islands, in conformity to their internal laws and international law, and that over which they have exercised and are exercising their exclusive sovereignty?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez answered in the affirmative. Judge Gutiérrez Navas answered no, because in the inner part of the closed gulfs or bays there exists no littoral zone; and Judge Bocanegra answered yes, for the high parties in litigation having accepted the character of the Gulf of Fonseca as a closed bay, it imposes the necessity of the existence of the maritime league for exclusive possession, as the Gulf belongs not to one alone but to three nations.

The sixteenth question which reads: "Has the Government of Nicaragua, in agreeing to the concessions which the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty contains for the establishment of a naval base, violated the right of joint ownership which El Salvador holds in the Gulf of Fonseca?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra answered in the affirmative, and Judge Gutiérrez negatively.

The seventeenth question which reads: "Does the establishment of a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca by its nature and transcendancy compromise the safety of El Salvador?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez replied affirmatively. Judge Gutiérrez negatively. Judge Bocanegra answered yes, through the possible danger of aggressions at the naval base on the part of the other power or powers with which the assignee may in the future enter into war.

The eighteenth question which reads: "Are the concessions for a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca and the leasing of the Great and Little Corn Islands, agreed to by Nicaragua with the subjection of the Nicaraguan lands and waters to the laws and sovereignty of a foreign nation, acts in violation of Article 2 of the General Treaty of Peace and Amity signed at Washington by the Central American Republics?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez answered affirmatively. Judge Gutiérrez Navas negatively, and Judge Bocanegra replied yes, as the change contemplated in this case does not affect only the state, in which it has taken place, but also the rest of the signatory countries of the treaty cited in the question.

The nineteenth question which reads: "Does it agree to declare that the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty injures the prime interests of El Salvador?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez answered yes, in so far as they have regard to the sacred aspirations in their respective political constitutions and the rest of the subjects of public law in Central America concerning the reconstruction of the Ancient Country. Judge Gutiérrez Navas replied in the negative, and Judge Bocanegra replied that the Court could not proceed to make such a declaration by referring to the interests in the future of its moral and political character, whose legal estimation is without the jurisdiction of the Court.

The twentieth question which reads: "Does the Government of Nicaragua, in order to validly grant the concession of the naval base, require the consent and agreement of the Republic of El Salvador?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez replied yes, that the Government of Nicaragua requires for the concession of a naval base the consent and agreement of the Republic of El Salvador. Judge Gutiérrez Navas answered in the negative, and Judge Bocanegra replied that as the action of nullity had not been discussed in the present he would eject from the expression the word "validly" which the question contains, and thus ejected, his reply would be in the affirmative.

The twenty-first question which reads: "Has the Government of Nicaragua violated through the celebration of the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty the rights which belong to El Salvador in conformity to Article 9 of the General Treaty of Peace and Amity mentioned above?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra answered affirmatively, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas negatively.

The twenty-second question which reads: "Is the defendant Government obliged to reestablish and maintain the legal status which existed between El Salvador and Nicaragua before the celebration of the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty on the subjects determined in this case in conformity to the principles of international law?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez answered yes that it is obliged in conformity to the possible means sanctioned by that law. Judge Gutiérrez Navas answered no, because there had been no change in the legal status; Judge Bocanegra replied that in his opinion the Government of Nicaragua is obliged as to the reparations which may be possible in conformity to the principles of international law.

The twenty-third question which reads: "Can the Court order the Government of Nicaragua to abstain from complying with the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty, as the high plaintiff party asks?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno and Castro Ramírez answered no, because one of the high signatory parties of the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty is not subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, and Judges Gutiérrez Navas and Bocanegra replied in the negative.

The twenty-fourth question which reads: "May it proceed to make other condemnations in the present case in conformity to the fourth petition of the initial suit?" Judges Medal, Oreamuno, Castro Ramírez and Bocanegra replied in the negative because they had not been expressly requested or discussed, and Judge Gutiérrez Navas replied simply no.

JUDGMENT

Consequently the Court declares:

First: That it is competent to try and judge the present case brought by the Government of the Republic of El Salvador against the Republic of Nicaragua. Second: that the demurrers proposed by the high defendant party must be rejected. Third: that the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty, of August 1914, by the concession which grants a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca, threatens the national safety of El Salvador and violates their rights of joint ownership in the waters of said Gulf in the form and with the limitations assigned in the act of voting. Fourth: that it violates Articles 2 and 9 of the Treaty of Peace and Amity signed at Washington by the United States of Central America, December 20, 1907. Fifth: that the Government of Nicaragua is obliged, availing itself of the possible means recommended in international law, to reestablish and maintain the legal status which existed before the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty between the litigating Republics in this case. Sixth: that the Court abstain from passing judgment with respect to the third petition of the initial suit. Seventh: that with regard to the fourth petition of the initial suit it does not pass any judgment.

MOST EXCELLENT MR. SECRETARY: In the discharge of a high duty of American consideration and brotherhood, I have the honor to apply to your excellency and to take the liberty of forwarding to you herewith a printed copy of the circular note recently sent by this Department to the Central American Governments signatory to the Convention of Washington, December 20, 1907, for the purpose of explaining and justifying the attitude that was forced upon my Government of ignoring and rejecting the two judgments rendered against it by the Central American Court of Justice in the actions that were instituted by the Governments of Costa Rica and Salvador.

Most respectfully and courteously begging your excellency kindly to appreciate with your characteristic upright and justice loving judgment the conduct of Nicaragua in the two cases here mentioned, it affords me great pleasure to renew to you the assurances of my most high and distinguished consideration, with which I subscribe myself [etc.]

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Central American Governments

NATIONAL PALACE,
Managua, November 24, 1917.

MOST EXCELLENT MR. MINISTER: The recent awards are well known to your excellency which the honorable Central American Court pronounced in the suits brought by the Governments of Costa Rica and El Salvador against the Nicaraguan Government on account of the conclusion of the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty of August 5, 1914. In the first of these awards, rendered September 3, 1916, the High Court declared that: "The Nicaraguan Government violated, to the detriment of Costa Rica, the rights granted to the latter by the Cañas-Jerez Boundary Treaty of April 15, 1858; by the Cleveland Award of March 22, 1888; and by the Central American Treaty of Peace and Friendship of December 20, 1907"; and in the second, rendered March 9 of the present year, it decided, in the manner and with the limitations embodied in the vote and in paragraph II of the second part of this award, that: "the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty, of August 5, 1914, owing to the concession which it contains of a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca, threatens the national security of El Salvador and violates her rights of joint dominion in the waters of said Gulf," which decision was rendered in the following terms: "that it violates Articles II and IX of the Treaty of Peace and Friendship signed at Washington by the Central American Nations on December 20, 1907; and that the Nicaraguan Government is obliged to avail itself of all possible means sanctioned by internal law in order to restore and maintain the legal status which existed prior to the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty between the contending Republics as regards the matters considered in this suit."

Your excellency is likewise aware of the stand taken by my Government in regard to these decisions, which was none other than to refuse acquiescence therein, inasmuch as they involve, besides other defects, a manifest overstepping of authority; and, actuated by a natural desire to justify this stand before the Governments signing the Convention which created the Central American Court, under date of December 20, 1907, I deem it proper and necessary, for the sake of the good name and the interests of my Government, to at least roughly outline in the present circular note the arguments of law and justice which strongly supported it in both cases in the exercise of its defense and in the firmness of its resolution.

In order to attain this object let it suffice first of all to recall the fact that the character which distinguishes the honorable Central American Court is that of a Tribunal of Arbitration, and that consequently, whether it be a question of the terms in which the agreement to arbitrate is drawn up or of the awards which this Tribunal may render, it must infallibly be taken as a matter of course that there will be a strict observance of the sanctioned general principles of law which rule, govern and regulate international acts and without which the natural defense of the impaired rights of the High Contending Parties would be impossible.

From this standpoint it would not be out of place to recall, furthermore, that however absolute and general the express conditions may be under which a nation agrees to accept an award, they can not deprive such nation of the right to review the awards, and that the latter, in case of exceeding of authority by the court and of notorious injustice, not only may but should be combated and rejected. Thus the President of the United States, in his message to the American Senate in 1887, referring to an arbitral award against which the Haitian Government was protesting, in his opinion justly, expresses himself as follows:

"The duty of the Executive to refuse to carry out an award which, in spite of the irreproachable character of the arbitrator, proves iniquitous and shocking, has been proclaimed many times by the Department of State and sanctioned by the Supreme Court of the United States." (Moore, International Arbitrations, Vol. II, page 1139.)

More positive still is Calvo, who, in treating of so important a point, speaks in the following conclusive manner:

"From the fact that the award is binding and unappealable it can not be inferred as an absolute consequence that the parties shall not be permitted to combat it; there are, on the contrary, certain cases in which they are fully authorized to refuse to carry it out. These cases may be summed up thus: When the award has been rendered without the arbitrators having been sufficiently authorized, or when they decide outside or beyond the terms of submission." (Dictionary of International Law.)

The right being thus generally established which belongs to one or more of the contending parties in an arbitral suit to refuse their consent to such decisions not in conformity with law, I must demonstrate, to my regret, that the awards rendered by the honorable Central American Court and to which I refer herein are tainted by the aforementioned excesses of authority, amply set forth, which render them entirely unacceptable. The nature of the subject compels me to proceed by parts.

I

AWARD IN THE SUIT OF THE COSTA RICAN AGAINST THE NICARAGUAN GOVERNMENT

In order to show that the Nicaraguan Government did not violate to the detriment of Costa Rica, by concluding the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty, the rights granted to this latter Republic by the Boundary Treaty of 1858, the Cleveland Award of March 22, 1888, and Articles II and IX of the Central American Treaty of Peace and Friendship of December 20, 1907, it becomes necessary to enumerate them in the following order:

a. Through Article VI of the Treaty of 1858 Costa Rica acquired the perpetual right of free navigation through the Nicaraguan waters of the San Juan River up to within three English miles of Castillo Viejo, for purposes of commerce and in order that her ships might come to the Nicaraguan shore without payment of any tax.

b. Under Article VIII the Costa Rican Government acquired the right to be consulted by the Nicaraguan Government before the conclusion of any contract on canal construction or transit, and it was provided that the vote of Costa Rica should be merely advisory (a consulting voice) in case the natural rights of Costa Rica were not injured in the transaction.

c. The Cleveland Award expressly defined what these natural rights of Costa Rica were and determined the circumstances under which they should be considered injured, expressing itself as follows in regard to the first point:

The natural rights of the Republic of Costa Rica, to which said stipulation (Article VIII) alludes, are the rights which, by virtue of the boundaries fixed by said treaty, it possesses over the soil which is recognized as belonging to it exclusively;

those which it possesses in the ports of San Juan del Norte and Salinas Bay; those which it also possesses in all that part of the San Juan River which lies more than three English miles below Castillo Viejo; perhaps other rights not particularly specified here.

Regarding the second point, the award determined as follows when these rights are to be considered injured or violated.

In all cases when the territory belonging to the Republic of Costa Rica is occupied or inundated; or when anything injurious is done to Costa Rica in any of the aforesaid ports; or when such an obstruction or deviation of the San Juan River is brought about as shall destroy or seriously impede the navigation of the same or of any of its arms at any point where Costa Rica has a right to navigate them.

Now, under the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty territory belonging to the Republic of Costa Rica is not occupied or inundated nor has anything injurious to Costa Rica been done in any of the aforesaid ports, nor has any obstruction or deviation of the San Juan River been brought about through the said treaty which destroys or seriously impedes the navigation of the same or of any of its arms at any point where Costa Rica has a right to navigate them.

The best argument that the Nicaraguan Government can present as a proof that it has not injured or violated the natural rights of Costa Rica as specified in Article 10 of the Cleveland Award through the conclusion of the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty is the palpable fact that these rights are on the same footing as they were before the treaty was concluded, notwithstanding the latter has been fully carried out. Not only has the Nicaraguan Government not injured or violated the natural rights of Costa Rica by concluding said agreement, but it has not been possible for it to injure them, inasmuch as the execution of this agreement did not involve the accomplishment of any material work, which is the only way in which those rights could be injured.

The Chamorro-Bryan is not a treaty on canal construction but one of option. It is a deed of transfer to the United States Government of the rights belonging to Nicaragua, as sovereign of the territory, to begin work on the canal at any time. As this treaty is not one on canal construction or transit, the Nicaraguan Government was not under obligation to consult the Costa Rican Government, since the obligation contracted in this respect by the Nicaraguan Government related solely to that species of contracts, as clearly provided in Article VIII of the Boundary Treaty of 1858, to whose terms the interpretation of the Cleveland Award refers, that is, as said before, to agreements on canal construction or transit.

If the award of the honorable Central American Court turns out, by virtue of the foregoing, to be contrary in its substance to the reality of things, and therefore inadmissible, it is not less so in its form, which is ingenious but unfortunately vitiated by lack of logic and legality, which are not found either in the part comprising the concession or in the analysis made of its parts by the honorable Court.

The clause by which the rights to make a canal are transferred to the American Government is embodied in the following alternative:

The Nicaraguan Government forever grants to the United States Government the exclusive ownership rights necessary and suitable for the construction, operation and maintenance of an interoceanic canal via the San Juan River and the Great Lake of Nicaragua, or by any route in the territory of Nicaragua.

Considered by itself, this proposition does not in any wise impair the natural rights of Costa Rica, since it does not involve anything but the transfer of the sovereign rights of Nicaragua to construct a canal through her territory. And just as these rights existed in the Nation without having ever affected the natural rights of Costa Rica as granted her by the treaties and award mentioned, so in being transferred to the United States Government they could likewise not cause any injury to those rights, inasmuch as a transfer is no more than an incident which in no wise modifies the nature of said natural rights.

A decision was nevertheless necessary and therefore the honorable Central American Court proceeded to make an analysis, absolute and categorical, of the features of the aforesaid proposition, embodying the cession of rights to construct a canal, though it ought to have made the analysis in a conditional form, in accordance with the immutable laws of logic.

As a matter of fact the Court propounded the following questions, among others, in the vote of September 22, 1916:

"In the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty was Costa Rica entitled to give a decisive vote regarding the canal concession via the San Juan River and the Great Lake of Nicaragua?" The majority answered in the affirmative.

"In the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty has Costa Rica a right to give a decisive vote in the canal concession via any other point in the Nicaraguan territory provided the rights of Costa Rica are not affected as specified in number ten of the Cleveland Award?" All the Magistrates answered negatively.

The analysis of the proposition having been made in this deliberately categorical but at bottom essentially conditional manner, it was necessary to return to a synthesis of the proposition analysed and show the double and opposed result which was obtained from the analysis, that is, the affirmation and the negation, inasmuch as the rights transferred to make a canal might be exercised alternatively (optionally), either via the San Juan River or by any other route in Nicaraguan territory.

But the honorable Central American Court, disregarding the distinctive (disjunctive?) character of the proposition it had analysed and which per se involved an indeterminateness with respect to the route to be adopted when it should be a question of exercising those rights, assumed as a certainty arising from the concession that the Canal would be constructed via the San Juan River and the Great Lake, as is proven by the following paragraph:

The Chamorro-Bryan concession, in granting the necessary rights for the construction of a canal via the San Juan River, forgot the legitimate rights of the High Plaintiff, inasmuch as the carrying out of the work by that route necessarily implies the occupation of the Costa Rican shore or the consequent inundations of its territory, as well as the use of the Costa Rican affluents, etc. (Considerando 3, par. 7, Analysis of the action.)

The Nicaraguan Government by the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty did not grant rights to construct a canal determinately via the San Juan del Norte River, but to effect it indeterminately: by this route and that of the Great Lake or by any other route in the territory of the Republic. Consequently, said concession not having designated any route determinately, and not having as an immediate and direct object the construction of a canal; moreover, it being impossible to proceed to the construction of a canal by virtue of this treaty, as shown by the final part of Article 1 of the Agreement, the Nicaraguan Government maintains that the honorable Court did not decide according to truth and justice when it declared, contrary to the evidence presented, that the treaty in question violates the rights of Costa Rica.

II

THE AWARD IN THE SUIT OF THE GOVERNMENT OF EL SALVADOR AGAINST NICARAGUA

No less oversteppings or excesses of authority are involved in the award which the same honorable Court rendered against the Nicaraguan Government in the suit instituted against it by the Republic of El Salvador.

My Government opportunely informed the honorable Tribunal that the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty was a matter that did not come under its jurisdiction, inasmuch as it did not constitute a purely Central American question and, in view of the indivisibility of the contract, it was impossible to render in regard to it an award against the Nicaraguan Government without at the same time affecting rights acquired thereunder by a third nation not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.

But the honorable Tribunal, arrogating to itself an authority far from having been conferred upon it by Article 1 of the Convention to which it owes its origin, and placing a broad construction on the words defining its sphere of jurisdiction, decided to embrace therein not only purely Central American questions but also mixed questions involving interests of a third party and even those which affect the honor of nations. In justification of these latter two points, it adduces the untenable argument that if its interpretation did not prevail the labors of the illustrious negotiators of the compacts would have been in vain, as also the moral force inspired in them by the presence of the United States and Mexican Governments, which took part in their preparation.

To this was given the obvious reply that it is not dishonorable or subversive of the ends of the arbitral institution that it should not take cognizance of matters not subject to its jurisdiction, or of those which can not be submitted to it according to international law, such as questions of a political character and concerning national honor.

The opinion of the honorable Tribunal in this regard, which is not in conformity with the reality of things, led it to impose upon my Government, through its award, an obligation which is either unexecutable owing to manifest impossibility, or, if it is capable of execution, it would hurt the interests of a third party not subject to the jurisdiction of the Tribunal.

It is beyond doubt impossible to restore the state of affairs existing prior to the conclusion of the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty without breaking the latter, and the bare inadmissible claim of the Court in this regard deeply wounds national honor, independence and sovereignty, these being attributes which have neither been placed under the jurisdiction of the honorable Tribunal nor could be in any case that might arise, for the reason that this would mean placing in its hands without counterpoise of any kind the vital interests of the Nation.

In treating of this point it behooves me to state that my Government absolutely disagrees with the opinion of the honorable Court to the effect that the wording of Article I of the creating Convention involves "the absolute sanction of compulsory arbitration, of which the tribunal is the sole type in the world," which opinion has been carried to such extremes that it enabled it to frame the following unheard-of declaration, made in a note of the clerk of the Court under date of July 14, 1917, addressed to the Ministry of Foreign Relations of Nicaragua: "National honor, absolute independence, unrestricted sovereignty, vital interests of the Nation, and other 'sacramental formulas' used for the purpose of eluding the action of justice through arbitration, are banished from the halls of the Central American Court": a surprising and significant declaration against which I must, overcoming scruples based on the highest respect for the honorable Tribunal, freely perform an unavoidable duty by entering the protest of my Government.

If the general principles of international law which preserve the rights of the parties injured by an arbitral award were not sufficient to repel such an opinion, besides authorizing the parties to oppose and combat the award under the circumstances designated by international law, I should take the liberty to remind the honorable Court of the absolute impossibility of its passing upon matters of this nature, inasmuch as the body of international law does not afford any established rules for forming a true judgment in this matter, or any authorization for assuming this right of passing ad libitum upon questions of such transcendent importance.

This Government likewise thinks that the use of lawful arguments for refusing to accept an award considered unjust can not rightly be characterized by the strange words "sacramental formulas for eluding the action of justice", this being an unwarranted charge which my Government refutes, especially when such justice does not exist, as is evident in the present case.

Another of the points embraced in the award is that relating to an imaginary joint dominion over the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca among the Republics of Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador.

These three Nations have uniformly recognized that the waters of this Gulf are prolongations of their respective territories and that the three sovereignties consequently concur in their respective parts over the Gulf. The reason of this recognition is the small area of the bay.

When the Honduran Government learned of the claim of the existence of a joint dominion of the three Nations over the Gulf, which claim was embodied in the suit brought against my Government before the honorable Central American Court by the Government of El Salvador, it made a protest to that Government, under date of September 30, 1916, which it conveyed at the same time to the knowledge of the High Tribunal and of which I reproduce the following paragraphs:

"It is not among the purposes of the Honduran Government to discuss the grounds of your excellency's Government in upholding, in the suit brought against the Nicaraguan Government, rights of joint dominion in the Gulf of Fonseca, nor is it presumable that the Central American Court will decide a point which affects the Republic of Honduras in a suit in which this Government has no participation.

"The object of the present note, most excellent Sir, is to protest on behalf and with the express authorization of my Government against the alleged right of joint dominion which your excellency's Government claims in the suit instituted against the Nicaraguan Government, and to declare, as the Honduran Government hereby declares through me, that it has not recognized and does not recognize a state of joint dominion with El Salvador or with any other Republic in the waters which belong to it in the Gulf of Fonseca.

"My Government furthermore declares that the line fixed in 1900 in the waters of the said Gulf by the Mixed Boundary Commission of Honduras and Nicaragua in order to expressly and clearly determine the limits of their maritime frontier will be considered as such from the time its validity and practical effectiveness was fixed, as well as the rest of the line drawn by said commission on the land frontier, and that at no time since the consummation of the act fixing the said line has the Government of El Salvador made any objection against the validity thereof.

"The circumstance that the boundary line between Honduras and El Salvador has not been marked does not constitute commonness and joint dominion in the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca.

"The very text of Article 13 of the Salvadorean law on navigation and marine, which says: 'The territorial sea of the Republic is divided into five maritime departments in the following manner: 1. Maritime department of La Union, comprising the Bay of Conchagua and the part of the Gulf of Fonseca in which are situated the Salvadorean islands and the territorial sea up to the parallel of the eastern mouth of the San Miguel River,' and which was inclosed as an exhibit with the suit mentioned, appears to demonstrate the fact that your excellency's Government did not consider that community of dominion with Honduras to exist or the right of joint dominion which it alleges to be formal.

"The rights which El Salvador believed that it had over part of the Gulf of Fonseca and over some of its islands are not defined or recognized by Honduras. In order to clear up these rights, boundary conventions which have hitherto been unsuccessful were concluded between the two Nations; but the Honduran Government considers that, notwithstanding the indeterminateness of the boundary lines, the Salvadorean Nation, which indicated its own boundaries in the first Constitution it adopted after gaining its independence, could not extend them beyond what belongs to it according to the corroborative documents of both Republics."

The points embraced in the protest of the Honduran Government against the joint dominion claimed by the Government of El Salvador in the Gulf of Fonseca coincide with the answer given by my Government to the Salvadorean suit in regard to this point:

While my Government realizes the dominion and possession of the three countries in the Gulf of Fonseca, which dates back to the beginning of the conquest of the American Continent, it absolutely denies that this dominion and possession have been exercised in common or have constituted a community of possession between the said Republics. No legal technicality warrants considering as a community of possession the coexistence of contiguous sovereign countries between which the boundary line has not yet been marked, nor is the use of such terms warranted by the circumstance of concurrence or adjacency of the territories of Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador to the waters of said Gulf, for what really occurred for a long time on account of this situation was that the territorial part belonging to each of the three Republics had not been separated by a formal demarcation of boundaries.

To the fundamental arguments preceding should be added the following:

The Republic of El Salvador not bordering on Nicaragua, the Republics of Nicaragua and Honduras agreed between themselves in 1894 to fix their boundary line, the demarcation having been begun at the western part of both, in the Bay of Fonseca, as is shown from Act II of the Honduro-Nicaraguan Mixed Boundary Commission, concluded at San Marcos de Colon on July 12, 1900. That the Republic of El Salvador does not border on Nicaragua is plainly demonstrated by the geographical position of both Republics, which have Honduras between them, and furthermore by the frank official declaration of the Government of said Republic (El Salvador), as appears from the note of the Department of Foreign Affairs addressed to the International Central American Bureau in connection with the request made of it by the latter that it enforce the rules adopted by the Third Central American Conference regarding free trade, which note reads as follows in its pertinent part:

"In reply I take pleasure in stating to your Honorable Institution that my Government has for some time been endeavoring to conclude commercial arrangements with the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras on bases which shall not injure the Public Treasury of any of these Republics or of El Salvador. As the subject is rather delicate and its solution very complicated, these arrangements have proceeded slowly, without however failing to occupy the attention of this Government, which hopes to bring them to a beneficent and practical conclusion in a short time. When this object is accomplished it intends to undertake a similar task with the other Republics, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, the fact that it has not common boundaries with which renders the arrangement of free trade less imperatively necessary." (Note of the Salvadorean Foreign Office, No. 587, of July 16, 1917.)

Therefore, as the plaintiff himself admits that he has not a common boundary with Nicaragua (a truth which geography itself has proclaimed), the honorable Court could not, without exceeding its powers, set down in its award that there is a joint dominion between El Salvador and Nicaragua in the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca, since it would follow as a necessary inference from such joint dominion that the boundaries were common.

What is more, the honorable Court, perhaps for the sake of not contradicting the provisions of the Salvadorean law on navigation and marine, and fundamentally opposing the theory that the waters of the Gulf constitute a common possession (community) and joint dominion of the three adjacent Nations, distinguished three classes of waters in the Gulf: 1. littoral waters; 2. waters for inspection zones; and 3, an undivided reserve of waters between the three Nations. With respect to the littoral waters, three nautical miles in extent, it declares that in them each Nation has a right to exercise its absolute and exclusive sovereignty; beyond these three nautical miles it grants to each Nation two nautical leagues for the exercise of revenue police; and it is only beyond these two leagues of inspection zone that it establishes the existence of common waters. Here are the pertinent paragraphs of the clerk of the Court, dated July 14 of this year, in which are summed up the grounds with respect to joint dominion on which the award was based:

"The Court, then, recognizing as a general thesis that joint dominion is incompatible with the exercise of sovereignty in the zone or strip which constitutes the littoral sea in each of the two Nations, and, more than this, that owing to the peculiar geographical configuration and ample extent thereof, each of these Nations has a perfect right to exercise its absolute and perfect sovereignty in the three nautical miles expressly excepted in the award, took special care to classify the waters contained in the Gulf of Fonseca into three distinct categories: That comprising the littoral league; that comprising the two further leagues intended for inspection zones for purposes of revenue policing; and that embracing a reserve of waters not comprised in the preceding categories. It clearly decided and thus states in the 'Considerandos' of the award that joint dominion exists solely in the rest of the waters of the Gulf, after measuring the three miles which form the maritime littoral absolutely and exclusively owned by each nation."

From this declaration of the Honorable Tribunal, admitting for a moment the classification, it is deduced that the waters in which, in its judgment, the alleged joint dominion and community of possession exist, are situated beyond the two leagues of the inspection zone.

It is consequently logical to infer that when the honorable Tribunal declared that the Nicaraguan Government violated the joint dominion of El Salvador and Nicaragua over the Gulf by concluding the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty it notoriously departed from the reality of things, which ought always to serve as the basis of any just decision, for Nicaragua made the concession of the naval base in her own maritime territory, already demarcated with Honduras since 1900.

The naval base can not in any case embrace the three nautical miles in the Gulf which the Court calls littoral sea; so that, even if the territorial division between Nicaragua and Honduras had not been made, the Nicaraguan Government could not justly be accused of having violated the capricious joint dominion by the concession mentioned, inasmuch as the Court established that each Nation of the three which are adjacent to the Gulf may exercise its absolute and exclusive sovereignty within the three nautical miles comprised by the littoral sea of each, it following hence that the honorable Tribunal could not have rendered this part of its award to which I refer without exceeding its powers and deeply affecting the truth of matters.

On the other hand, eliminating the territorial part of the Gulf which belongs to Nicaragua by virtue of the division made in 1900 with Honduras and taking into account the project of a boundary line contemplated for some time between El Salvador and Honduras, the reserve of waters to which the Court refers disappears.

As a matter of fact, the project of a boundary line between these countries is set forth in Article 2 of the Boundary Treaties of April 10, 1884, which reads: "the maritime line between El Salvador and Honduras starts at the Pacific, dividing by half, in the Gulf of Fonseca, the distance existing between the islands of Meanguera, Conchaguita, Martin Perez and Punta Zacate, of El Salvador, and the islands of El Tigre, Zacate Grande, Inglesa and Exposicion, of Honduras, and it ends at the mouth of the Goascoran." There is no doubt that this line, which was not approved by the Congress of Honduras, will be the one which sooner or later, with a change of details, will have to constitute in the Gulf the territorial line between El Salvador and Honduras.

And when this line is established, and taking into account the one already drawn in the same waters between Nicaragua and Honduras, where will the reserve of waters be situated which was mentioned in the award of the honorable Tribunal?

And if this reserve of waters, imagined by the honorable Tribunal and not admitted by Nicaragua, is the part still undivided between the countries in question and constitutes the joint dominion, with what justifiable reason is it declared that the Nicaraguan Government has violated this joint dominion by granting the naval base, when the latter is to be established on a point of the territory of Nicaragua?

The deeper my Government goes into this matter the more firmly does it become convinced that the decision of the Court constitutes without any doubts a flagrant exceeding of authority.

And no less so is the obligation imposed by the same award on the Nicaraguan Government to restore the legal status existing prior to the conclusion of the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty, for this obligation, if capable of being performed, would involve a very grave impairment of the national honor and independence.

Granting that the suit of the El Salvador Government is founded on the points of law which it alleges were violated by the aforesaid convention, it would be impossible, from any standpoint, to restore this legal status without doing away with the convention itself. For how could the effect cease to exist if the cause producing it continued? Consequently, if the aforesaid obligation were capable of being performed, it would be tantamount to admitting that Nicaragua could debase her sovereignty, affect her independence, and impair her honor, by having to undo what is done, in undignified obedience to unacceptable pretensions of a supposedly superior power. But the fact is that Nicaragua has not deposed her sovereignty and independence into the hands of the Central American Tribunal of Arbitration in order to submit to it unconditionally, implicitly relinquishing those high attributes which make her a sovereign unit in the international commonwealth. The award would have had some rational, logical and juridical sense in the part with which I am engaged if, as intimated by the honorable Magistrate for Guatemala, Licenciado don Angel Maria Bocanegra, it had been decreed that the Government of Nicaragua is under obligation to make such reparations as may be possible in conformity with the principles of international law. Such an obligation would have been reasonable in case the violations of right alleged by the plaintiff existed; for by this means, in this supposed case, both the rights of the plaintiff and the national honor and independence would have been saved; but it is inconceivable that judges not authorized for the purpose should have imposed upon the Nicaraguan Government an obligation which, if it had to be carried out, would deeply wound the honor of the Nation.

In the foregoing statement, Mr. Minister, are set forth the powerful and just grounds which have compelled my Government to reach the unbreakable resolution to reject the awards rendered by the honorable Central American Court in the suits brought against it respectively by the Governments of Costa Rica and El Salvador, not without calling to mind that by this attitude it is far from causing detriment to the cause of international arbitration, inasmuch as the rights of no one are injured when legitimate use is made, as in the present case, of the right which international law grants to any of the parties injured in an arbitration suit.

I take pleasure [etc.]

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Department's January 10, 5 p. m. After discussing fully provisions of the same with President Chamorro and the Minister of Finance we have concluded to request the Department to ask that such an arrangement as outlined in the Department's January 10, 5 p. m., be entered into. While I am rather reluctant to approve the extension of time on the Ethelburga debt, I feel that on account of the decrease in the customs receipts and the internal revenue and also in view of the fact President Chamorro reports to me the pressing needs of his Government which amount to approximately 500,000 dollars in back salaries estimated it probably will be one of the best ways to aid his administration since both he and his Minister of Finance have promised me to faithfully cooperate with the Legation in affecting a reorganization of the public service.

Therefore I would suggest that the money held here by the Customs be turned over at once to the Nicaraguan Government.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Managua, January 18, 1917, 4 p. m.

The matter of forming a commission was discussed again yesterday with President Chamorro and his legal advisers, Doctors Pedro Gonzalez and Bargemen Kena Diaz. They strongly advised against including in the plan the reopening of the Mixed Claims Commission awards and cited Article 1 decree creating Mixed Claims Commission and Article 171 of the Nicaraguan Constitution. Besides they thought it might reopen the question of monopolies and concessions.

They agreed to comply with the provisions of Article 3 of the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty subject to the following conditions:

1. That the Government be permitted to use from the three million dollars one hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of constructing colleges, the money to be equally divided between the cities Leon Granda and Managua, Chamorro being very anxious to have this done if possible:

2. That four hundred thousand dollars of the Canal money be placed their disposal for the payment of pressing debts, back salaries, etc., and to pay amount due by the Government for tobacco: and

3. That the balance of the money be exclusively applied to the Nicaraguan debt as may be determined by the commission and in accordance with Article 3 of the Treaty.

Hope to have bill presented to Congress not later than Monday.

Department's January 10, 5 p. m. Your January 12, 4 p. m. For your information the Department quotes telegrams exchanged between the bankers and the Council of Foreign Bondholders with a view to making a satisfactory adjustment of Nicaragua's finances.

Cooper, Secretary of Foreign Bondholders, London: Have been in conference with Department of State of United States who have been in cable correspondence with United States Minister to Nicaragua. Believe following arrangement can be made with Nicaragua in consultation with the Department of State of the United States: All arrears of interest on sterling bonds up to and including January 1, 1917, to be paid in cash out of Treaty money, coupons for the next three years, that is to say, including coupon due January 1, 1920, to be paid as they mature 25 per cent in cash, 75 per cent in funding certificates payable not later than five years from date of issue, certificates to bear interest at 6 per cent payable semiannually in cash, principal of certificates to be payable out of 50 per cent of surplus revenue above say 1,400,000 dollars or such lower limit as may be determined by the American Financial Adviser to be appointed and when funding certificates discharged such 50 per cent surplus to be applied to payment of arrears of sinking fund on bonds. No new loan by Nicaragua now contemplated or possible but no objection to stipulation such as you suggest on this head. Bondholders' preferential rights to be maintained and no other claims to receive more favorable treatment than your bondholders. Matter will be pushed with utmost expedition but it may not be possible to close it before two or three weeks as appointment of Financial Adviser and other details will take time. Brown Brothers and Company and J. & W. Seligman and Company will undoubtedly in order to make possible the contemplated arrangements be compelled to waive part of their claim on Treaty money.

Seligman, New York. Telegram received. Please confirm that funding certificates would be paid in five years from date issue in any event and that customs receipts over 1,400,000 dollars or such lower limit as may be determined by Financial Adviser would be applied to special amortization. Essential we should know exactly how Brown Seligman's claim would be treated during time bondholders are receiving part interest in new paper. Committee of opinion funding certificates would only be saleable at low price and consider funding arrangement should be limited to two years but would agree to three years provided 25 per cent of interest first year, 50 per cent second year and 75 per cent third year paid in cash. Committee think connection United States Government with arrangement should go further than mere consultation and that it should appear on face of agreement that it is made under their auspices or with their sanction. Cooper.

Seligman, New York. Any arrangements such as that proposed will require ratification by general meeting bondholders. Cooper.

Department's January 26, 4 p. m. Have had decree for forming commission drawn in accordance with Article 85, Section 15 of the Constitution which will, I believe, give the President and commission ample power to investigate any claim which has changed hands for the sake of speculation. However, we are of the opinion that great care should be exercised in the matter of awards of Mixed Claims Commission not in conflict with provisions of the Constitution.

Number two contemplates an additional 100,000 dollars from the Canal fund for college purposes.

MOST EXCELLENT MR. AMERICAN LEGATION,

Managua, February 1, 1917, 3 p. m.

The Legation yesterday received the following official communication from the Minister for Foreign Affairs with the urgent request that it should be immediately transmitted to the Department:

In conformity with the cablegrams crossed the 26th of this month between the bankers Brown Brothers and Seligman and the Secretary of the Board of Foreign Bondholders and with instructions from the President, I have the honor to communicate the wishes of my Government that from the Canal funds there be moving at once to the Ethelburga the necessary amount to cover the 25 coupons corresponding for the lapse of time from January 1, 1915, to January 1, 1917, inclusive.

Yesterday, during my conference with President Chamorro, we again discussed the matter of appointing a Financial Adviser. He informed me that at an opportune time he would submit the question to the Congress; that he would have to overcome to a certain extent Department's opposition in Congress to such an appointment and should like first to pass the bill creating a debt commission; that opinion here is entitled to consideration; that as soon as known that he contemplates appointing a Financial Adviser he would meet with many difficulties and he should like to know the general plan of the Department so that he may later present the entire matter to Congress and at the same time include the appointment of the Financial Adviser. He is very desirous that the Department at once authorize to be paid from the Canal money 250,000 dollars for his urgent needs, it being physically impossible to pass at once the bill forming the debt commission though Ham will be authorized to act with the Minister of Finance in the application of this money.

The President is very anxious for the commission to begin its work and therefore wishes the Secretary of State to indicate to me his choices. LEGATION OF NICARAGUA,
Washington, March 24, 1917.

MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I have received from the President of Nicaragua a cable directing me to urge, in my representations to the Department of State, that the reference to a Financial Adviser to be appointed by the Government of Nicaragua be eliminated from the pending contract with the Ethelburga. I had occasion last week to lay before the Department of State a full statement of the reasons which now militate against the expediency and suitability of making that appointment under existing circumstances and for the same reason President Chamorro believes it would be much more advisable to strike out from the Ethelburga contract the reference to the appointment. In return, President Chamorro instructs me to say to your excellency that he agrees to a mention being made in that contract of the Commission on the Revision of the Debts, dealt with in its Article 11, trusting that the said commission would suffice to meet the guaranties sought in the negotiation.

I therefore take the liberty of reiterating to you the Nicaraguan Government's request that the Department once more extend to us its generous assistance toward finding a way of arranging matters so that the Ethelburga contract may be perfected at the earliest possible date, by reason of the urgent need in which Nicaragua stands for funds with which to relieve the economic situation that is now so trying, without making therein any reference to the Financial Adviser.

Thanking your excellency in advance for such action as you may be able to take in the sense above indicated, I take pleasure [etc.]

With reference to your December 31, 3 p. m.,⁴ first sentence, second paragraph, and your January 12, 4 p. m. Republic, in cooperation with the bankers. This plan was finally elaborated after much thought and labor on the part of the Department and bankers. Every step discussed in the conference reported to you December 22, 1916,⁵ was thought out with great care. The basis of this plan clearly necessitates arrangement with Ethelburga Syndicate, and is contingent upon the appointment of a Financial Adviser as is also any emission of bonds to aid in the payment of claims against the Government.

The Department has been informed from various sources that apparent hostility and unfriendly feeling exists in Nicaragua against the bankers, Ham and the State Department, and that this is very prejudicial to American interests.

The bankers have conferred with the State Department in regard to these reports and they have expressed their feelings that unless a radical change is brought about in the sentiments reported they will withdraw their suggestions and cooperation in the plan for the financial rehabilitation of Nicaragua.

They also state that they will withdraw from negotiation with the Corporation of Foreign Bondholders of London as this corporation has been relying upon their representations as to the friendly attitude of the Nicaraguan Government.

The cooperation of bankers must necessarily be on strictly business basis and it was upon strictly business terms that the Department was able to secure their cooperation, and unless the arrangements as contemplated in the plan originally proposed are carried out the Department may be unable to lend its good offices to any further arrangements. It is also evident that no other bankers will be willing to negotiate with the Government of Nicaragua should it be clearly seen that Brown Brothers and Company and Seligman and Company do not desire to proceed on account of not being able to obtain the cooperation of the Government of Nicaragua which they consider necessary.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Managua, April 10, 1917, 5 p. m.

With reference to appointment of Financial Adviser. I again fully discussed the question with President Chamorro. He informed me that he had given the matter mature consideration and that it would not be politic nor possible for him to make the appointment. He stated that all he wished was to be permitted to supervise his own internal expenditures and that he would promise to live within his budget and that he should like to see matters go on as before in the hands of the Collector General of Customs and the bankers secured in their investment; but in case the Department should not care to eliminate the appointment of Financial Adviser he would be willing for the secretary to pay the bankers and Ethelburga and apply the balance of the Canal money as he deemed best.

With reference to the objection raised by President Chamorro, in order that a solution of the difficulty may be reached if it entirely meets with approval of the Department, I would suggest that some such clause as the following be inserted in all the contracts:

If in case a budget deficit is incurred thus seriously threatening the economic life of the Government and impairing its credit with bondholders or other creditors the internal revenues shall be administered by the Fiscal Agent who shall pay from available customs revenues and from the excise revenues amounts not to exceed 125,000 dollars per month and all surplus excise revenues over this amount shall be retained by the Fiscal Agent for the purpose of paying the budget deficit and after that for the purposes of bond redemption in addition to other revenues pledged under these contracts.

Have not discussed above clause with President Chamorro as I am awaiting decision of Department.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 20, 1917, 4 p. m.

Your March 21, 11 a. m., March 30, 4 p. m.^o and April 10, 5 p. m. have been carefully considered by the Department.

You may inform General Chamorro that after giving much thought to the matters taken up in various cablegrams exchanged between the Department and the Legation and between the Nicaraguan Legation in Washington and his Government, the Department decided to bring to the bankers' attention in a further conference the statements made by General Chamorro setting forth his position in regard to the appointment of a Financial Adviser.

As a result of this conference the Department, giving due consideration to General Chamorro's views, the political situation and local conditions confronting him, was able to secure from the bankers a tentative consent to renew their negotiations with the Ethelburga and to continue their cooperation in the plan made at the conference of December 18, 1916, which was outlined to the Legation in Department's December 22, 4 p. m.,⁷ upon the following conditions:

1. All revenues to be collected by the Collector General of Customs.
2. Government to receive from such revenues 75,000 dollars per month to meet its expenses, but present commission to be continued and to have power to approve additional expenditures whenever absolutely necessary, such additional expenditures, however, not to exceed 40,000 dollars per month.
3. Commission of three to have control over the expenditures (as part of budget) of such amount as would have been payable to the 1909 bonds under old arrangement.

The Department considers that this plan, which was the only one it was able to obtain from the bankers, meets all objections to the original plan which contemplated the appointment of a Financial Adviser, and should be immediately accepted by the Government of Nicaragua in view of the conditions at present prevailing due to the conflict with the Government of Germany, and in order that the original plan may be carried out without further delay, with as few changes as possible.

You will again remind General Chamorro that the motive which has actuated this Government in lending its good offices for the purpose of endeavoring to bring about a readjustment of the finances of Nicaragua, was entirely based upon its friendship for that country and a realization of the very serious internal and international difficulties which are confronting her and you will say that it is the confident hope of the Department that this suggestion will be immediately accepted in order that the bankers may proceed with their negotiations with the Council of Bondholders at once, for any further delay would be most detrimental to the best interests of Nicaragua.

The form of such report shall be prescribed by the Minister of Finance.

The manager of the National Bank of Nicaragua will have the control over the expenditures (as part of the budget) of such amount as would have been payable to the 1909 bonds under old agreements.

In order to carry out the provisions of this agreement the President of the Republic, the Minister of Finance and the manager of the National Bank of Nicaragua hereby agree and consent that in case any controversy, question, dispute or difficulty whatsoever arises regarding the interpretation or performance of this agreement such controversy, question, dispute or difficulty arising shall by either or all of these parties hereto be immediately referred to the Secretary of State of the United States for decision and award which when after such reference shall be and is hereby accepted by such parties as final and conclusive and shall with the terms and specifications thereof be at once recognized, adopted and faithfully executed by the Republic and the National Bank.

The customs revenues will continue to be collected by the Collector General of Customs in accordance with existing contracts. From the proceeds thereof the following monthly disposition will be made and in the following order: A. Expenses of administration and customs refunds. B. Arrears of interest on bonds of 1909, seven thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars. C. Amortization of unpaid Treasury bills, eight thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars thirty-three cents. D. For the purpose of funding the internal debt of Nicaragua the Commission on Public Credit will certify to the amounts of bonds to be issued as well as the rates and sinking fund or amortization charges subject to the liens hereinbefore stated under previous and existing contracts.

In order to pay the monthly budget the Minister of Finance will from time to time issue checks which will be accepted by the manager of the National Bank of Nicaragua only when in strict conformity with provisions of the budget for the payment of military garrisons and the police and on the 25th of each month to the last date he will issue the budget for officials and employees and for other public services in accordance with the budget in force to which the bank will adhere strictly in the payment of said checks.

In order that the Government may properly pay the current budget whose minimum amount for salaries and expenses is calculated at one hundred thousand dollars monthly, disbursements or checks will first be drawn against the excise and other revenues referred to previously and any deficiency will be drawn from the surplus in customs revenues on checks signed by the Minister of Finance which will be accepted by the manager of the National Bank of Nicaragua only when in strict conformity with provisions of the budget.

The customs revenues will continue to be administered and collected in the form already established by the Treasury Bills Agreement of September 1, 1911, and the agreement with the Council of Foreign Bankers of May 5, 1912, until the obligations with the bankers, with the holders of the bonds of 1909, and with the holders of the consolidated internal bonds which it is proposed to issue are paid, redeemed or canceled, and in order to better guarantee the obligations for the payment of these credits as well as the punctual payment of interest.

The Republic may at any time pay part or all of the obligations enumerated in the preceding paragraph and redeem in case of such complete cancellation of these credits the customs as well as 49 per cent of the shares of the railroad and the Bank which are now pledged as guaranty for the Treasury Bills Agreement.

Whatever monthly surplus or annual surplus resulting from increases in the national revenues after first paying all the fixed charges for external and internal debt services as well as the administrative expenses under the budget previously referred to shall be applied and paid in the customary manner. Fifty per cent of such excess shall be paid monthly to redeem the certificates to be issued for the arrears on the 1909 bonds representing the 75 per cent which remains each month. Pertaining to this service 30 per cent will be used for the redemption of consolidated internal bonds and 20 per cent for the building of schools and roads.

[Telegram—Extract]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 21, 1917, 5 p. m.

The Department has fully considered and discussed at length with the interested parties, the plan for adjusting the indebtedness of the Government of Nicaragua which plan is set out in your telegram to the Department of May 25, 10 a. m. This plan has finally been accepted, provided it is modified to read as follows:

The depository of all Government funds shall be the National Bank of Nicaragua in accordance with its concession.

The Nicaraguan Government will administer and collect all internal revenues, such as liquors, tobacco, telegraph, telephone, post-office stamps, stamped paper, ammunition, powder, et cetera, and agrees, by the enactment of appropriate laws not later than January 1, 1918, to further improve this service. The proceeds of these internal revenues shall be deposited with the National Bank of Nicaragua each month and shall be credited to it to be disposed of as hereinafter stated, it being understood that the internal revenues above mentioned shall not be less than 65,000 dollars per month and that if during any three months' period they should aggregate less than 195,000 dollars the collection of such revenues will thereafter be made by the Collector General of Customs.

There shall first be paid from the customs revenues such amounts as may be agreed upon with the Council of Foreign Bondholders for the 1909 bonds, with the New York bankers for the unpaid balance of Treasury Bills, with Brown Brothers Company for the unpaid balance of their Emery claim and with any other creditors having a lien upon the customs; also the bankers' outlays for account of Nicaragua for cable charges, legal fees, et cetera, and when the exchange fund shall have been reopened, such amounts as may be required under the October 8, 1913 agreement between the Republic and the Bank for the replenishment of said fund when it shall fall below 100,000 dollars. Out of the balance of the total revenues from all sources, the Government may dispose monthly for extraordinary expenses, of 15,000 dollars, and for ordinary budget expenses, of an additional 75,000 dollars. If the Government should during any month require a sum in excess of said total of 90,000 dollars, it may draw further sums up to $26,666.66, provided, however, all amounts drawn in excess of the first 90,000 dollars shall be approved by a committee of the members of the Nicaraguan Section of the International High Commission, and of the Permanent Nicaraguan Group of the International High Commission established during the Pan American Financial Conference in Washington in 1916. This committee shall consist of two persons, namely a member of the Nicaraguan Section of the International High Commission appointed by the Government of Nicaragua, and a member of the Permanent Nicaraguan Group of the Commission appointed by the United States, the first appointee to be Mr. Lindberg. There shall also be appointed from the same group, by the Secretary of State of the United States, a third person to act as umpire in case of disagreement between the two members above mentioned.

The Minister of Finance shall, before the opening of each regular session of Congress of Nicaragua, prepare a detailed statement of the probable receipts of the Republic for the ensuing fiscal year from every source, and of the amounts required during that fiscal year for the service of any outstanding Government loan and for all other amounts which are payable under the laws now in force or by engagements entered into by the Republic, or otherwise in any manner against her receipts. There shall be available for the budget the amounts already mentioned. Any revenues in excess of 1,400,000 dollars per annum, plus the amounts payable to the Council of Foreign Bondholders, to the New York bankers, to Brown Brothers on account of the Emery claim, and to other creditors having a lien upon the customs as hereinbefore stated, and to the National Bank for the replenishment of the exchange fund if required, as aforesaid, shall be disposed of as follows: 25 per cent of such excess for the redemption of certificates to be issued for arrears of interest in the 1909 bonds; another 25 per cent for the redemption of outstanding Treasury Bills, and after all Treasury Bills have been retired to the liquidation of the amount due Brown Brothers and Company on the Emery claim; and the remaining 50 per cent shall be disposed of for the service of the internal bonds and such public works as may be found necessary after this bond service has been adequately taken care of, or for unforeseen expenses made necessary through acts of God, or disturbance of the public peace.

Upon approval by the Minister of Finance, the budget statement, to be prepared as aforesaid, shall be submitted to the National Congress, through the President of the Republic, at the beginning of that body's session, and it shall constitute the official estimate of receipts and fixed charges of the Republic for such fiscal year. The Congress shall not authorize expenditures beyond those contemplated herein. The Minister of Finance shall, within ten days following the adjournment of the Congress, prepare a statement of all the regular and special appropriations which shall have been authorized and shall file the same with the National Bank of Nicaragua.

Under penalty of law every "Jefe de Depósito" or other receiving officer of the Government of Nicaragua is absolutely prohibited from disbursing the funds in his possession for any purpose whatsoever unless by check signed by the Minister of Finance.

A monthly report by telegraph or mail, or both, shall be made, within five days after the end of each month, of all receipts and expenditures, to the Minister of Finance by the Treasurer General, by each "Jefe de Depósito de Especies Fiscales" or other receiving officers or by the "Dirección General de Rentas." The form of this shall be prescribed by the Minister of Finance.

The Collector General will continue to collect the customs revenues in accordance with existing contracts. The following monthly disposition will be made of the same, in the order given:

- (a) Expenses of administration and collection of customs.
- (b) Amounts payable out of customs to the 1909 bondholders in accordance with such agreement as may be made with the Council of Foreign Bondholders;
- (c) Past and future outlays of the bankers for account of Nicaragua for cable charges, legal fees, et cetera.
- (d) When the exchange fund (now closed under Article 5, Section 6 of the agreement between the Republic and the National Bank, dated December 2, 1914) shall have been reopened, such amounts as may be required for the protection of the exchange fund under the existing provisions of the agreement between the Republic and the National Bank dated October 8, 1913.
- (e) Amounts payable out of customs to the holders of the Treasury Bills in accordance with such contracts as may be made with them;
- (f) Amounts payable out of customs to Brown Brothers and Company on account of the Emery claim in accordance with such agreements as may be made with them.
- (g) The balance shall be disposed of as part of the budget in accordance with the provisions hereinbefore contained.

The administration and collection of the customs revenues will continue in the form already established by the Treasury Bills Agreement of September 1, 1911, and the agreement with the Council of Foreign Bondholders of May 5, 1912, until the payment, redemption or cancellation of the obligations with the bankers, with the holders of the 1909 bonds, with the owners of the Emery claim, and with the holders of the consolidated internal bonds which it is proposed to issue; and also for the better guaranty of the obligations for the payment of these credits and the punctual payment of interest.

At any time the Republic may pay part or all of its obligations such as are set forth in the preceding paragraph and in case of such complete cancellation of these credits may redeem the customs as well as 49 per cent of the shares of the railroad and the bank, now pledged as a guaranty for the Treasury Bills Agreement.

It is agreed that in case of any controversy, question, dispute or difficulty whatsoever arising regarding the interpretation or performance of this agreement any such controversy, question, dispute or difficulty, shall by either or all of the parties hereto be immediately referred to the Secretary of State of the United States for decision and award, and after such reference this shall be and is hereby accepted by such parties as conclusive and final, and shall be recognized at once, with the terms and specifications thereof.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 21, 1917, 6 p. m.

A plan for the adjustment of the financial difficulties of Nicaragua is being cabled you. Contemporaneously with presenting this plan to General Chamorro, you will communicate to him the following message from the Secretary of State:

The Government of the United States after earnest and patient efforts has induced the secured creditors of Nicaragua to accept a plan for the gradual liquidation of their indebtedness which will afford Nicaragua an opportunity to improve its financial and economic status, and which will leave it certain funds immediately available wherewith to effect a settlement with its other creditors.

A statement of this plan will be presented to General Chamorro contemporaneously herewith. General Chamorro will note that this plan is substantially that already discussed between him and Minister Jefferson, and that it is wholly consistent with the sovereignty and dignity of Nicaragua. Among the immediate and substantial concrete benefits which will result to Nicaragua from the adoption of this plan may be noted the following: (figures only approximated).

(1) The 1909 bondholders have a lien upon the custom receipts of Nicaragua. The plan will relieve Nicaragua from the obligation to pay to these bondholders during the next three years the full annual interest amounting to 286,395 dollars, which, with a sinking fund of 60,000 dollars makes a total annual payment of 346,395 dollars. In lieu of such payments Nicaragua will pay during 1917 only 84,487 dollars; during 1918 only 110,835 dollars; and during 1919 only 136,323 dollars. This three years' respite should enable Nicaragua so to revivify her financial and economic life that at the end of this period she will be able to meet in full her obligations to these 1909 bondholders.

(2) The New York Bankers under existing agreements, are entitled to exact out of the Treaty moneys payment of the entire principal and interest owing on their Treasury Bills. Under the proposed plan these bankers will allow one-half of the principal of said bills, namely, 500,000 dollars to remain outstanding at the present rate of interest of 6 per centum per annum such balance to be paid only out of the 25 per cent excess income mentioned in the plan. Thus Nicaragua avoids the necessity of the immediate payment of 500,000 dollars, and is permitted to pay this amount gradually after her other necessities have been met.

(3) Under the existing protocol between the United States and Nicaragua, Brown Brothers as part owners of the Emery claim are entitled to exact the immediate payment of over 600,000 dollars. The owners of this claim are willing to accept on account of the above sum less than 400,000 dollars in cash, the balance to be paid gradually by Nicaragua after the Treasury Bills have been completely retired with the understanding that the amount still due on the Emery claim will be secured by a second lien upon the security fixed by the Treasury Bills Agreement, and that the unpaid balance thereof will ultimately be retired through the application of the 25 per cent surplus of receipts.

(4) After the pressing secured indebtedness of Nicaragua has been adjusted, as indicated above, the balance of the Canal funds as well as amounts now held in Nicaragua by the Collector General of Customs for the account of the 1909 bondholders will be free to be applied to the liquidation of National Bank indebtedness and the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and to other claims as passed upon by the Public Debt Commission now in operation. The disposition, above mentioned, of the pressing claims of Nicaragua and the stabilization of collections and expenditures of revenue should permit of giving a real and market value to such internal bonds as may be issued for the purpose of funding the remaining obligations of the Government.

In general it may be said that the plan should assure the economic stability of Nicaragua, and should enable it hereafter to obtain credits for the development of its resources, and for the carrying out of public works.

The Government of the United States hopes and indeed expects that the plan above referred to will be heartily accepted by the Government of Nicaragua, and takes this occasion to felicitate General Chamorro upon the opportunity which is presented to him to inaugurate and carry out a constructive program, the benefits of which to the people of Nicaragua will unquestionably become increasingly notable with the passage of time.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Managua, July 4, 1917, 9 a. m.

Department's June 21, 5 p. m. The Nicaraguan Government accepts the plan of the Department with the following recommendations:

1. Elimination of clause with reference to the National Congress.
2. With reference to the Emery claim, that Brown Brothers agree not to collect interest and that the Government of Nicaragua will pay on account 300,000 dollars. The balance, or 250,000 dollars, they will commence to pay as per plan, that is, when the Treasury bills have been paid.
3. The secured debt, that is, the 1909 bonds and the Treasury bills, will be paid as per plan. With reference to the other debts, for example, loan from National Bank, interior loans, mixed claims, and all the other credits forming the internal debt will be liquidated or paid according to awards of the Commission Public Credit now in operation.
4. Of the three items which the plan details for the administrative budget to increase the item of 75,000 dollars shall be increased to 80,000 dollars so that the monthly total for expenses of the budget will be $121,666.66.
5. In case the internal revenues fall below 65,000 dollars per month for three consecutive months the Government will make a new contract with the 1909 bondholders and the bankers for the purpose of increasing or bettering these revenues.
6. Beginning with and including the current year the proceeds from the direct [tax?] on capital are to be applied to the debt service for the proposed internal bonds as well as a twelve and a half per cent surcharge on the import duties.

My observations and recommendations concerning amendments offered:

1. "The Congress shall not authorize expenditures beyond those contemplated therein." In lieu of "The Congress shall" insert "The Government of Nicaragua agrees that it will, etc." This will obviate objections raised by the Congress and Cabinet regarding violation of constitutional powers of the Congress.
2. Regarding Emery claim the Credit Commission is endeavoring to disallow interest wherever possible. Many creditors voluntarily have agreed to waive interest. For above reason Chamorro informed me that he had submitted this plan which he believes would be acceptable to the bankers.
3. Regarding the proposal for the equal payment of claims the National Bank debt need not be included in this arrangement if the bankers object.
4. The increase of 5,000 dollars I believe should be allowed. The slaughter tax has been doubled and will therefore increase the results sufficiently to cover that amount.
5. In order to prevent delay and possibly future controversies I would suggest that the amount be made 60,000 dollars instead of 65,000 dollars provided that the Department's plan in this particular is accepted.
6. I do not consider this point objectionable.

If above suggestions meet the Department's approval I believe this matter can be promptly settled.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

President Chamorro called me to his office this morning and asked me to request urgently that the Department so arrange it that he shall receive out of the first payment at least 250,000 dollars to make up balance of 500,000 dollars to pay back salaries in accordance with his request in my January 12, 4 p. m. as the Congress and employees of the Government have patiently waited to be paid and he feels it his bounden duty to see to it that they receive their money.

He also [apparent omission] that the Department please advise him as soon as possible as to this matter and also regarding his counter proposition to plan of the Department as he desires to adjourn Congress as soon as possible since its protracted session is adding very much to the expense of the Government.

[Telegram—Extract]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 12, 1917, 7 p. m.

Your telegram July 4, 9 a. m. The recommendation numbered one is agreed to and the plan may read: "The Government of Nicaragua agrees that it will, et cetera," in lieu of, "The Congress shall."

Recommendation numbered three is agreed to, except that bankers desire National Bank debt to be paid and not dealt with as internal debt mentioned in this recommendation three and that treatment of Emery claim is left for future determination.

Recommendation numbered four is agreed to, and item of 75,000 dollars may be increased to 80,000 dollars.

Recommendation numbered five cannot be accepted in precise form submitted, but that portion of the plan relating to internal revenues may be modified to read as follows:

It being understood that the internal revenues above mentioned shall not be less than 60,000 dollars per month, and that if during any three months period they should aggregate less than 180,000 dollars the collection of such revenues will thereafter be made by the Collector General of Customs, unless the 1909 bondholders and the holders of Treasury bills agree to accept some other method for increasing or bettering these revenues.

Recommendations numbered two and six cannot be acted on immediately, but neither of the matters therein discussed are dealt within, or necessarily form a part of, the plan embodied in the Department's telegram of June 21, 5 p. m., and in the Department's opinion this plan as modified in accordance with the foregoing can now be finally accepted and a formal contract drawn up for execution with the interested parties.

In respect of recommendation numbered six the bankers agree at once that at least fifty per cent of the direct tax on capital may be applied to the service of proposed internal bonds. In regard to the balance of the direct tax and the suggested surcharge on imports no decision can be given until after careful consideration of the economic effects thereof.

[Telegram—Extract]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 18, 1917, 7 p. m.

Your telegram July 16, 11 a. m. The Department is very desirous that the plan embodied in the Department's cable of June 21, 5 p. m. be promptly adopted and a contract actually signed, and in order to prevent delay the Department is urging upon the bankers and urges upon the Government of Nicaragua that controversial matters not absolutely essential to the plan be held open and not permitted to delay the inauguration of the plan. For this reason, Department in its telegram of July 12, 1917, recommends that matter of interest on Emery claim and details of imposition of surtax on imports be eliminated from the formal contract to be executed.

The contract will of course, as indicated by the plan of June 21, 5 p. m. have to refer to the Emery claim in the paragraphs dealing with the application of custom revenues and the budget. Yet such reference may be in general terms as "amounts payable on account of so much of Emery claim as shall not be otherwise provided for".

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 19, 1917, 4 p. m.

Your telegram, July 11, 2 p. m. You may inform President Chamorro that the Department is disposed to consider favorably the payment to the Government of Nicaragua for back salaries of 250,000 dollars, provided the outstanding financial matters are satisfactorily adjusted and provided such payment can be made after making the payments contemplated by the plan now under consideration and after setting aside out of the Treaty money of an adequate sum applicable to payment of awards of Mixed Claims Commission and of Credit Commission.

The Department feels that the sum which should be reserved for application to awards of commissions should not be less than 1,000,000 dollars. Please cable your views in this respect.

The Department understands that in accordance with plan submitted, the following sums will be first payable from accumulated customs and Treaty fund (interest is estimated to August 1 and amounts given are approximate only):

(1) Interest on and one-half principal of Treasury bills, say 752,000 dollars;

(2) Back Ethelburga interest and sinking fund, say 990,000 dollars;

(3) Interest on and one-half principal of Emery claim, say 490,000 dollars (this assumes all owners of Emery claim will accept same treatment as Brown Brothers, namely defer payment of one-half principal).

(4) The National Bank loan, principal and interest, say 107,000 dollars.

This amount totals 2,339,000 dollars.

The Department understands accumulated customs on May 1 last were 637,000 dollars and this, with balance of Treaty money, aggregates 3,387,000 dollars, and after the deduction of the payments above specified and 1,000,000 dollars for Commission awards, there is left a balance of 48,000 dollars, which sum should be substantially increased by additions to the customs fund since May 1.

If the foregoing estimates are in accord with your understanding, you may unofficially and informally use them in pointing out to General Chamorro that there will probably be a substantial fund, approximating 200,000 dollars available after making the payments contemplated by the pending plan.

You will please inform President Chamorro that the Secretary of State will be prepared to approve the payment to the Government of Nicaragua for back salaries of a sum between 200,000 dollars and 250,000 dollars immediately upon the pending financial plan being favorably acted upon by the Nicaraguan Congress, and being adopted in legally binding form.

You will informally state to President Chamorro in connection with the foregoing that it was found impracticable to make any payment out of the Treaty fund to the Government of Nicaragua prior to the final adoption of the financial plan, as certain creditors of Nicaragua are claiming that a statute of the United States makes it unlawful for the Government of the United States to pay money to Nicaragua while their debts are still unsatisfied. These creditors, so Department is informed, will, however, withdraw their contentions under the statute as soon as the plan is finally made effective. The precise amount which the Secretary of State will pay to the Government of Nicaragua for back salaries will depend on the date when the financial plan becomes effective, and to which interest must be computed, and will also depend on whether the National Bank debt is reduced through the sale by Nicaragua of its stock in this bank, or through an application of the Treaty money.

Article one of the decree authorizes the Executive to change such contracts as may be necessary with the bankers and foreign bondholders in conformity with basis of plan.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 9, 1917, 4 p. m.

Your August 1, 11 a. m. Department is convinced that the financial plan will fail totally if the Government of Nicaragua insists that the so-called "Emery claim" be treated as indicated. There is, properly speaking, no longer any such claim. There exists only a protocol to which the Governments of Nicaragua and the United States are the sole parties. This protocol has already been carried out in part but certain definite payments remain to be made by Nicaragua to the United States. The Department does not understand that Nicaragua can now desire to go behind this protocol thereby assuming that this formal and carefully considered instrument was improperly or inadvisedly entered into by the two Governments.

The Department has sought to induce those who would benefit by the payments under the protocol to waive interest. It has, however, been exceedingly difficult to secure any concessions from these parties since they rely on the fact that the protocol provides for payments to the United States itself and there exists the Federal Statute referred to in Department's cable of August 2, 5 p. m., which they construe as prohibiting the Treasurer of the United States from making any payments to one who is a debtor of the United States without first deducting the amount of such indebtedness. This they believe insures the prompt payment of the entire principal and interest of the protocol payments out of the Treaty fund. The utmost concession which the Department has been able to obtain is the waiving of the compounding of interest and deferring the payment of fifty per cent of the principal. These concessions however, the Department regards as very substantial.

The Comptroller of the Treasury Department is inclined to accept the above-mentioned construction of the Federal Statute and unless the sum due under the protocol is paid in a manner satisfactory to the interested parties it is highly improbable that the Treasury Department will permit of any further payments from the Treaty fund for back salaries or other purposes until the sum due under the protocol is paid in full.

You will informally utilize the foregoing information to make clear to President Chamorro the attitude of the Department of State and you will point out to him that insistence on further concession from those interested in the Emery protocol will doubtless result in a complete failure of the financial plan and the consequent deduction of the Emery protocol payments in full with interest from the Treaty funds.

The Department's August 16, 6 p. m.⁶ Financial plan should pass not later than next Wednesday. I have been insisting upon it being passed without modification. However amendments have been offered by Chamorro and Congress most important of which are as follows:

In case that no agreement is reached between the bankers and Nicaraguan Government in conformity with Paragraph F of plan concerning Emery claim then it will be submitted to the Credit Commission for judgment, final decision and award.

In case the internal revenues, etc., should be placed in the hands of the Collector General of Customs this employee of the Government will be compelled to give an additional bond of 20,000 dollars, which shall be satisfactory to the Government making the Collector General responsible for all his acts and subjecting him to the rights and obligations of the fiscal laws of the Republic.

In brief this means that he will have to submit his accounts to the Tribunal of Accounts.

Chamorro is contemplating inserting provision for local school tax to pay expenses of common and agricultural schools. The school boards will collect and pay out these funds.

If above amendments pass I would suggest that Department proceed to have bankers execute a formal contract with the representatives of the Nicaraguan Government and insist upon general principles outlined in Department's plan being complied with. After it is signed it should be immediately cabled here for ratification by the Congress.

AMERICAN LEGATION,

Managua, September 1, 1917, 3 p. m.

Nicaraguan Congress in extraordinary session after over a month of discussion of financial plan approved it with some modifications and enacted it into law. The Executive is authorized with power to execute formal contracts with the interested parties in conformity with the bases of the plan which are sufficiently broad so that no question can arise after the formal contracts are signed on behalf of the Nicaraguan Government by its agent Ramón Enriquez. Therefore it will only be necessary if the bankers so desire to later have the contracts ratified by the Congress.

In the paragraph after word "power" in lieu of "etc., etc." insert "According to the catalogue of fiscal accounts." Not listed in catalogue are property, local school and forestry taxes. National Bank now collects property tax as guaranty of 500,000 dollars loan of which 236,000 dollars have been paid to June 30. School and forestry taxes will be used for school and agricultural purposes and collected and expended local school boards.

⁶Not printed.

Also in the first paragraph is following change in phraseology: "If during a period of three consecutive months the revenues are less than 180,000 dollars it is understood to mean that the three months referred to will begin from the first month which falls short of the 60,000 dollars except in case of unforeseen circumstances and force majeure."

In second paragraph insert after "legal fees, etc." "Approved by the Government".

In Subsection C insert after "legal fees," etc. "Properly vouchered".

With reference to most important addition to plan see my August 18, 11 a. m., second and third paragraphs. Other slight additions to text do not change intent of law.

Copy of the law will be forwarded by first mail.

I wish to report the amount of customs receipts retained will approximate about 1,000,000 dollars by September 16.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Managua, September 5, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that the Nicaraguan National Congress on the 29th of August enacted into law the financial plan, as proposed by the Department of State, with modifications as reported by me in my cablegrams to the Department of August 18, 11 a. m., September 1, 3 p. m. and September 3, 6 p. m. The said law was duly signed by President Chamorro and the Minister of Finance, August 31, 1917, and, as provided by law, was published in La Gaceta, the official publication of the Government, Saturday, September 1, 1917. Copies and translations of the law are herewith appended.

In commenting further upon the question of the tax on capital, taxes for local school purposes and the forestry tax, these items were purposely left out of the law by Chamorro and the Congress. Of the $500,000 now in circulation under agreement and in accordance with the capital tax law enacted in 1915, up to June 30 last the amount collected and retired by the Bank is $236,000. No provision is made in the law for the specific application of this tax after the agreement with the Bank is fulfilled. However, it may be that the Nicaraguan Government will request the Bank to continue to leave part or all of the $500,000 in circulation, since apparently there is a shortage of circulation of the córdoba. The additional emission of that amount did not affect the exchange.

With further reference to the school and forestry taxes which will probably amount to $70,000 per annum, these will be collected by the Nicaraguan Government, but Chamorro informed me that the local school board will expend the school tax. This of course then will not be included in the budget. The Central Government will expend the forestry tax for agricultural school purposes. I notice only $10,000 is provided for in the budget for the Agricultural School. Of course this means that in the future the Government will, in addition to the amount allowed by the budget, expend the taxes to be received from these two sources.

I hope that some agreement may have been reached and a formal contract signed between the interested parties before this despatch reaches the Department. Conditions here have somewhat improved and I believe that they will be better after the financial question is settled.

MANAGUA, September 1, 1917.

The President of the Republic, to his people, Know: That the Congress has enacted the following: Decree No. 3.

The Senate and Chamber of Deputies of the Republic of Nicaragua, Decree:

Article 1. The Executive Power is authorized to celebrate the contracts which may be necessary with the Foreign Bondholders of 1909, with the bankers Brown Brothers & Co. and J. W. Seligman & Co., with regard to the Treasury bills

Agreement, with the same bankers with respect to the amortization of the Emery claim, and with the National Bank of Nicaragua for its credits against the State, all in conformity with the following bases:

The National Bank of Nicaragua shall be the depository of all Government revenues, in accordance with its concession. The Nicaraguan Government will administer and collect all internal revenues, such as of liquors, tobacco, slaughter tax, stamped paper, stamps, powder, lead, cartridges, post offices, telegraphs, telephones and all those in force in accordance with the catalogue of fiscal accounts, and agrees to enact appropriate laws before January 1, 1918, to improve and better this service. The proceeds of these internal revenues shall be deposited with the National Bank of Nicaragua each month, and shall be placed to the credit of the Government to be disposed of as hereinafter stipulated, it being understood that the internal revenues above mentioned shall not be less than 60,000 dollars per month, and that if during a period of three consecutive months they amount to less than 180,000 dollars, except in case of unforeseen circumstances and force majeure, the collection of such revenues will be made by the Collector General of Customs, unless the 1909 bondholders and the holders of Treasury bills agree to accept some other method for increasing or bettering these revenues. It is understood that the three months referred to shall begin to be counted from that one in which the internal revenues do not produce the 60,000 dollars, before stipulated.

There shall first be paid from the customs revenues such amounts as may be agreed upon with the Council of Foreign Bondholders for the 1909 bonds, with the New York bankers for the unpaid balance of Treasury Bills, Brown Brothers & Co. for the unpaid balance of the Emery claim, and with any other creditor having a lien upon the customs, also the bankers' outlays for account of Nicaragua for cable charges, legal fees, etc., etc., duly approved by the Government. When the Exchange fund is reopened and that fund falls below 100,000 dollars, there shall also be taken the amounts which may be necessary for the maintenance of said fund in conformity with the Agreement of October 8, 1913 celebrated between the Republic and the Bank. Out of the balance of the total revenues from all sources the Government may dispose of 15,000 dollars monthly for extraordinary or unforeseen expenses and of 80,000 dollars for ordinary budget expenses. If the Government should require a sum in excess of said total of 95,000 dollars, it may draw monthly up to the sum of 26,666 dollars and 66 cents ($26,666.66), provided that all amounts drawn in excess of the first 95,000 dollars shall be approved by a committee of the members of the Nicaraguan Section of the International High Commission established during the Pan American Financial Conference in Washington in 1916. This committee shall consist of two persons, namely: a Nicaraguan citizen, member of the Nicaraguan Section of the International High Commission, appointed by the Government of Nicaragua, and a member of the Permanent Nicaraguan Group of the Commission, appointed by the Government of the United States of North America. There shall also be appointed from the same Group by the Secretary of State of the United States a third person to act as umpire in case of disagreement between the two members above mentioned.

The Minister of Finance shall before the opening of each regular session of the Congress of Nicaragua prepare a detailed statement of the probable receipts of the Republic for the ensuing fiscal year from every source, and of the amounts required during that fiscal year for the service of any outstanding Government loan and for all other amounts which are payable under the laws now in force, or by obligation of the Republic, or which in any other manner are obligations to be paid out of her receipts. There shall be available for the budget the amounts already mentioned. Any revenues in excess of 1,460,000 dollars per annum, plus the amounts payable to the Council of Foreign Bondholders, to the New York bankers, to Brown Brothers on account of the Emery claim, and to any other creditor having a lien upon the customs, as hereinbefore stated, and to the National Bank for the replenishment of the Exchange fund, as aforesaid, shall be disposed of as follows: 25% (twenty-five per cent) of such excess for the redemption of certificates to be issued for arrears of interest in the 1909 bonds; another 25% (twenty-five per cent) for the redemption of outstanding Treasury bills, and when these have been retired, for the liquidation of the amount which is due Brown Brothers & Co. on the Emery claim; and the remaining 50% (fifty per cent) shall be disposed of for the service of the Internal Bonds, and for such public works as may be found necessary, after this bond service has been adequately taken care of, or for unforeseen expenses made necessary through acts of God or disturbance of the public peace, upon approval by the Minister of Finance. The budget to be prepared, as aforesaid, shall be submitted to the National Congress through the President of the Republic at the beginning of that body's session, and it shall constitute the official estimate of receipts and fixed charges of the Republic for such fiscal year. The Government of Nicaragua agrees that it will not authorize expenditures beyond those contemplated herein. The Minister of Finance shall, within ten days following the adjournment of the Congress, prepare a statement of all the regular and special appropriations which shall have been duly authorized and shall file the same with the National Bank of Nicaragua.

Under penalty of law every "Jefe de Depósito" or other receiving officer of the Government of Nicaragua is absolutely prohibited from disbursing the funds in his possession for any purpose whatsoever, unless by check signed by the Minister of Finance. Within five days after the end of each month the Treasurer General, the Director General de Rentas, all the "Jefes de Depósitos de Especies Fiscales" or other receiving officers must send a monthly report by telegraph or mail, or both, of all receipts and expenditures to the Minister of Finance. The form of this report shall be prescribed by the Minister of Finance.

The Collector General will continue to collect the customs revenues, in accordance with existing contracts. The revenues will be disposed of monthly in the following form and order:

- (a) Expenses of administration and collection of customs.
- (b) Amounts payable out of the customs to the 1909 bondholders, in accordance with the agreement which may be made with the Council of Foreign Bondholders.
- (c) Past and future outlays of the bankers for account of Nicaragua for cable charges, legal fees, etc., etc., duly justified.
- (d) When the Exchange fund, closed under Article 5, Section 6, of the agreement between the Republic and the National Bank, dated December 2, 1914, shall have been reopened, such amounts as may be required for the protection of the Exchange fund under the existing provisions of the agreement between the Republic and the National Bank, dated October 8, 1913.
- (e) Amounts payable out of customs to the holders of the Treasury bills, in accordance with such contracts as may be made with them.
- (f) Amounts payable out of customs to Brown Brothers & Co. on account of the Emery claim, in accordance with such agreements as may be made with them.
- (g) The balance shall be disposed of as part of the budget, in accordance with the provisions hereinbefore contained. With reference to the other debts, for example interior loans, mixed claims, and all the other credits forming the internal debt, they will be liquidated and paid according to awards of the Commission on Public Credit now in operation. The administration and collection of the customs revenues will continue in the form already established by the Treasury Bills Agreement of September, 1911, and the agreement with the Council of Foreign Bondholders of May 5, 1912, until the payment, redemption or cancellation of the obligations with the bankers, with the holders of the 1909 Bonds, with the owners of the Emery claim and with the holders of the consolidated internal bonds, which it is proposed to issue, and also for the better guaranty of the obligations for the payment of the credits and the punctual payment of interest.

At any time the Republic may pay or provide for the payment of part or all of its obligations, such as are set forth in the preceding paragraph; and in case of such complete cancellation of these credits it may redeem the customs, as well as 49% (forty-nine per cent) of the shares of the railroad and the bank now pledged as a guaranty for the Treasury Bills Agreement. It is agreed that in case of any controversy, question, dispute or difficulty whatsoever, arising regarding the interpretation or performance of this agreement, such controversy, question, dispute or difficulty shall be immediately referred to the Secretary of State of the United States for decision and award, and this shall be and is hereby accepted by the parties, as conclusive and final, and shall be recognized at once with the terms of said decision.

In case that an agreement cannot be reached, in conformity with that provided for in clause (f) of the preceding paragraph, between the Government and the bankers with respect to the Emery debt, it is expressly agreed that it will be submitted to the judgment of the Commission on Public Credit, to be paid according to the decision of said Commission. In case that the collection of internal revenues should pass to the hands of the Collector General of Customs, this employee of the Republic must furnish bond, if agreeable to the Government, to the additional amount of 20,000 dollars, in favor of the Republic.

The bond must be subject to the satisfaction of the Republic, said Collector being subject to the fiscal laws of the Republic, in every case, in all his duties, responsibilities, rights and obligations.

Article 2. The present law shall become effective from its publication in La Gaceta.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 6, 1917.

Bankers have now presented final draft of financial plan for approval State Department which is studying matter.

State Department at request of Nicaraguan Chargé d'Affaires used its good offices with owners Emery claim in endeavor to obtain from them waiving or reduction of their interest. This owners of claim state they are unwilling to do. Government of United States in view of statements contained in its August 9, 4 p. m., feels that matter must be considered closed as any further efforts on its part in this direction might jeopardize whole plan. It has been suggested however, that the payment to be made out of the Treaty funds to the Emery claimants, as provided for in financial plan, be called payment on account of principal and that the remainder of the principal and interest be paid through means of deferred Treasury bills referred to in plan. This would obviate criticism that interest on this claim was paid directly from Treaty funds.

British Embassy has presented memorandum protesting against preferential treatment being given to Emery claim and stating that their claim, known as Legation claim, was decided by protocol between the two Governments, and therefore in same class as Emery claim.

Please cable Department what negotiations have taken place between British Minister and Nicaraguan Government and also inform Department what other foreign nations have made protests or have stated that they consider their claims to be in same category as Emery claim.

British Embassy further state that they do not consider internal bonds furnish good security and that further guaranties are necessary.

You are instructed to discuss question of further guaranty with Nicaraguan Government and suggest that a law be passed providing for supervision by High Commission of payment of interest on bonds. Nicaraguan Chargé d'Affaires, in conversation with Department suggests that the proceeds of 12½ per cent surtax on general import and one-half of proceeds of property tax should be deposited with High Commission for payment of interest and the payment be supervised by it.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Managua, October 12, 1917, 9 a. m.

The Department's October 6, 2 p. m. I informed Chamorro regarding status of Emery claim and advised him to cable instructions to his representative to accept financial plan after it is approved by the Department. This I believe he will do. He is extremely anxious to receive draft of plan at the earliest possible date since his Congress is daily adding to his expenses.

British Minister, September 21, 1917, directed a note to the Minister for Foreign Affairs in brief as follows: In acknowledging the receipt of a notice to the effect that the Legation claim had been registered with Public Credit Commission he states that British Legation claim was finally settled by default for nineteen thousand eight hundred pounds with interest to date which would bring claim to twenty-five thousand five hundred pounds and that no modification of the direct responsibility to his Government to pay the claim in full can be accepted pending any appropriate instructions from His Majesty's Secretary of State and that he would make stipulation accordingly. Nicaraguan Minister for Foreign Affairs informed me that he only acknowledged the receipt of this note.

British Minister apparently is still negotiating with the Public Credit Commission.

While the French, Italian and Spanish have not recently directed notes to the Minister for Foreign Affairs they allege their former notes are as formal as those of British Legation. Germans have uniformly submitted under protest against any revision. The Commission is endeavoring to make equitable settlement of this class of claims and has made offer to settle British Legation claim for 9,000 pounds, percentage of cash and bonds later to be agreed upon. Regarding all the above claims see exchange of notes between the Nicaraguan Government and other Foreign Governments reported in Nicaraguan Report on Foreign Relations, Volume One, October 1911 to December 1913.

I discussed question of further guaranty issue of internal bonds with President Chamorro and suggested to him that the same be supervised by High Commission. He apparently is agreeable to this but desired to know if the same persons already designated by the Secretary of State and himself were to supervise the bond service.

In order to make the bonds attractive and provide for payment of interest and amortization at 6% it will be necessary to apply the proceeds of the twelve and one-half per cent surtax on the general import duties, but under new tariff, which will approximate one hundred thousand dollars annually and also all of proceeds of tax on capital one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars and in addition to contingent amortization as per plan. Chamorro suggests that Nicaragua's share of bank and railroad dividends be also applied.

The Department's October 16, 2 p. m. No arrangements have been made for application of customs money collected by Ham on account of Ethelburga loan, as Nicaraguan Government is awaiting terms of contracts with bankers and foreign bondholders.

Regarding awards the Public Credit Commission is waiting to hear amount of money allowed for internal debt purposes. On basis 1,000,000 dollars available the Commission believes that not more than 15% can be paid in cash. Efforts will be made to pay all claims less than one thousand dollars in cash.

The Commission does not expect to revise or reduce Mixed Claims Commission judgments in the hands of original claimants except by mutual agreement. Claims in the hands of speculators or third parties will be heavily scaled from fifty to seventy per cent.

LEGATION OF NICARAGUA,
Washington, October 22, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: It is very painful to me to have once more to bring to the valued attention of your excellency the subject of the financial affairs of my country, and my only excuse for so doing is because the Department of State has repeatedly asserted its desire and willingness to aid us in bettering the distressing economic condition in which the Republic of Nicaragua finds itself at this time. This situation becomes daily more aggravated by the crisis caused, principally, by the lack of Government funds for the payment of a vast accumulation of back salaries. It is, therefore, indispensable, even very urgent, that the Government should pay these salaries as soon as possible in order to preserve public order and the welfare in general of the country.

On a former occasion my Government expressed this belief to the Department of State, which, knowing the circumstances and their pressing nature, made us the alluring promise that just as soon as the pending arrangements with the bankers in New York were concluded the necessary provisions would be made for the Government of Nicaragua to receive, from the Canal fund, the sum of $250,000, destined to pay the back salaries referred to. Unfortunately just as the Government of Nicaragua was prepared to sign the contracts with the above-mentioned bankers in New York, and when the Department and the Nicaraguan Government were preparing the matter of the distribution of the proceeds of the Canal Treaty, certain unavoidable difficulties and discussions arose upon some points which have caused delays as injurious as they are deplorable.

However, these disturbing conditions having now disappeared I believe that I may assert to your excellency that the arrangements have now been definitely concluded, for while it is true that there is yet to be obtained the approval of the Congress of Nicaragua to the contracts, yet in reality such approbation is no more than a mere formality, and not a substantial or intrinsic requisite to the validity of the agreements. This is well known to the Department, which is aware of the amplitude of the authority which the Nicaraguan Congress gave the Executive for formulating and carrying out these negotiations. The Department is also aware of the instructions and the authority conferred upon me by the President to enable me, as the representative of Nicaragua, to sign the respective documents.

In my opinion, therefore, the time has arrived for me to appeal to the generosity of the Government of the United States, to the end that, heeding the reasons already given and animated by the same spirit of justice and equity with which it has proceeded always in its relations with the Government and the people of Nicaragua, it may arrange to effect, as soon as it can possibly do so, the payment of the sum mentioned to cover the residue of salaries of the Administration, in this way fulfilling its promise and aiding in an effective manner the improvement of conditions in this crisis.

I should add here that as my Government already received some days ago an advance of $25,000 for the payment of salaries, the sum now asked for the same purpose is that of 225,000 dollars.

I beg to express in advance to your excellency, the gratitude of my Government and my personal appreciation for all that you may be good enough to do in the matters treated of in this note, and I avail myself [etc.]

With reference to your note October 22, Department feels that its approval of further payments from treaty moneys should be contingent upon ratification by Nicaraguan Congress of financial plan and arrangements which it considers is necessary to make the transaction legal and binding as has been stated on various occasions. Nevertheless, in view of Nicaraguan Government's request it will approve immediately application of sum of $75,000 to back salaries, the remaining one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to be paid immediately after plan and arrangements are made legal and binding according to its views above expressed. If you desire this action to be taken by the Department you may telegraph, confirming it as soon as possible by note in same form as note you have addressed Department in regard to payment of twenty-five thousand dollars.

I now take the liberty, in consequence thereof, to beg that your excellency will approve and order the payment from the Canal Convention funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, of the following amounts:

To the Banco Nacional of Nicaragua, Inc.....	$111, 404. 83
To Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman.....	530, 000. 00
In payment of interest on $1,000,000 to November 1.....	211, 184. 14
In payment of expenses to bankers.....	26, 512. 66
In payment of Corporation of Foreign Bondholders, equivalent of £168,008 4/7 at the rate of 4.75½.....	798, 878. 26
Total.....	$1, 677, 979. 89

The prompt payment of these amounts will prevent the damage which the interest on these sums will cause the economic situation of my country.

LEGATION OF NICARAGUA,
Washington, November 22, 1917.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: Under instruction received by cable from the Honorable Minister of Finance of Nicaragua, I permit myself to beg your excellency to cause one hundred and thirty thousand dollars of the one hundred and fifty-five thousand for the payment of salaries in arrears to be remitted as before and twenty-five thousand to be deposited in a bank here for the same purpose of paying arrears of salary which my Government must have in gold so as to draw thereon as agreed by the two Governments.

I beg your excellency to effect this and payment as desired by the Honorable Minister of Finance and to pardon the trouble it may cause, and to accept [etc.]

LEGATION OF NICARAGUA,
Washington, November 22, 1917.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: The terms of the protocol concluded September 18, 1909, between the Government of the United States and the Republic of Nicaragua, provide that the latter pay to the Government of the United States the sum of $600,000, of which, in due course, only $50,000 was paid.

The balance of $550,000 with interest, as per said protocol amounts to $748,986.12. An agreement has been reached on October 20, 1917, with the representatives of the parties interested in this amount, to the effect that they would be willing to receive the sum of $485,000 as part of the principal, and receiving Treasury notes provided for in the above mentioned agreement for the balance of $273,986.12 being the remainder of the principal still owing, and the full amount of interest due.

My Government has instructed me to inform your excellency that it has determined to apply the sum of $485,000 from the sum of $3,000,000 to be paid to the Government of Nicaragua in accordance with Article Three of the Treaty of August, 1914, between the United States and Nicaragua, for account of its indebtedness to the Government of the United States under protocol above mentioned, of September 18, 1909.

Hoping that this will meet the approval of your excellency, and with assurances [etc.]

LEGATION OF NICARAGUA,

MOST EXCELLENT SIR: I hereby confirm my previous notes of the 20th and 21st [22?] instant by which in compliance with the provision in the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty as to the expenditure of the three millions, agreement was to be reached by the two High Contracting Parties, as has been duly done, payment of that money having already been ordered as follows:

$500,000 to the Government of Nicaragua for the payment of overdue salaries.

$485,000 to Messrs. Brown & Co., as interested parties in the Emery claim and agents of other claimants.

$111,404.83 paid to the National Bank of Nicaragua, amount of principal and interest due to it.

$530,000 paid to Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co., being half of the principal owed them.

$211,184.14 paid to the same bankers, being the interest on all the principal owed them up to the first of this month.

$26,512.66 paid to the aforesaid bankers on account of expenses incurred and $799,720.23, the equivalent of £168,008.4/7 to be paid to the Foreign Bondholders. All these disbursements are in accordance with the contracts signed at New York on October 20 and approved by the Congress of Nicaragua on the 14th instant. The total amounts to $2,663,821.86 which, deducted from the $3,000,000 leave a balance of $336,178.14 which I beg your excellency to deposit in a bank to be disbursed, like that held by the Receiver General of Customs up to November 30, in paying the internal debt as agreed in the contracts.

As the disbursement of the money stipulated in the Chamorro-Bryan Treaty which since its conclusion was lawfully held in deposit by the Treasury of your Government will thus be brought to an early termination, may I be permitted once more to express in behalf of my Government thanks for the valuable part you have taken in winding up this matter in which with spontaneous zeal you have proved yourself the most zealous guardian of Nicaragua's interests.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to make reference to the note from this Legation No. 322 of August 4, 1916, and more particularly to the whole file relating to the unfortunate occurrences happening last year in this city on February 14 and in the City of Colon on April 2, denominated as riots, between American soldiers and Panaman police and civilians, in which one American suffered the loss of his life and many received injuries more or less severe.

I am sure your excellency will accord to this Legation the reasonableness of its conviction that there might be more consideration shown to my Government in the matter of energetic and earnest investigation and prosecution of the guilty ones involved in those deplorable events and in an attempt to satisfy my Government in a settlement, that would remedy as far as possible the wrongs its citizens have suffered at the hands of citizens of your excellency's Republic and that would be an assurance against repetitions of such things in the future.

I respectfully solicit that your excellency may be good enough to let me have for forwarding to Washington a full and definite response herein and with all promptness possible with your excellency's convenience.

No. 1164

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, November 13, 1916.

SIR: A few days since I heard the rumor that the new Superior or Criminal Judge, Señor Don Ladislao Sosa, had decided that the evidence collected in the investigation of the riot of April 2, 1915, justified the beginning of a prosecution against the Panaman policeman, Carlos Nuñez, on the charge of having murdered Corporal Langdon and I have the honor to report that I went immediately to the office of the Secretary of Foreign Affairs to make inquiry. He stated that Nuñez had applied to him for release from prison on the ground that he was being held without the issuance of legal process against him and only upon the verbal request of the former Secretary of Foreign Affairs; that finding this to be the fact, he (Secretary Garay) called upon the criminal judge to assume responsibility for the further detention of Nuñez. A day or two thereafter the morning paper contained an item that Nuñez had been "called to justice", as the term is used here for instituting a prosecution; that Señor Don Carlos Lopez had been appointed to defend him and that the case would be open for a period of ten days for proof.

I called at the Foreign Office again and reminded the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the agreement which I had with his predecessor that a representative from our military headquarters would be permitted to be present at all stages of the proceedings and I requested to be notified of the time of any further taking of proof and of the further steps in the case. This was followed by a Foreign Office note, a copy and translation of which I enclose.

I immediately notified Gen. C. R. Edwards, military commander of the Canal Zone, sending a copy of the translation of this note to him. Lieut. D'Alary Fechet, who acted for the military authorities in the taking of a great deal of the former testimony, was sent to the Legation and I took him at once to the Foreign Office, and next day we visited the criminal judge and the prosecuting attorney. We arranged for a conference between the prosecuting attorney and Major H. A.

White, on the staff of General Edwards, and Lieut. Fechet, and after considerable discussion we arrived at the understanding also with these officials that our representatives might be present throughout further proceedings in the case.

I learned that Judge Sosa had arrived at the conclusion that there was nothing in the large amount of proof heretofore taken to authorize a prosecution to be begun against anyone except Nuñez; that the ten day period for proof mentioned above was the customary period just prior to a trial during which under Panaman law either Sde could present proof in addition to that already taken, and Judge sosa stated that he would receive proof from our authorities of an additional character, if it cared to be presented, against others as well as against Nuñez. Judge Sosa promised to send me a copy of his judgment, which he has done to-day, and a copy of the translation of the same is also enclosed.²

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, February 19, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that at last on Friday afternoon the trial of Carlos Nuñez, referred to in my despatch No. 1164 of November 13, 1916, charged with the murder of Corporal Langdon in the Colon riot of April 2, 1915, took place before the Superior Criminal Court sitting in this capital. The jury after considering the case about ten minutes brought in a verdict of acquittal which, a local newspaper states "was received with great enthusiasm by the waiting crowd".

I advised Brigadier General C. R. Edwards, Commanding General of the Canal Zone troops, duly of the date of the trial and Major Herbert A. White, Judge Advocate on his staff, was present.

The verdict was in no sense a surprise to us; in fact, no other result was expected as set out in my despatch No. 907 of April 24, 1916,³ to which I make special reference.

The satisfaction has been obtained, however, of the prosecution of at least one man involved in one of the several riots that have taken place between our soldiers and the Panaman police.

We feel convinced that this Panaman policeman had a guilty connection with the fateful event of that day and that it is very likely that he is the man that shot Corporal Langdon but identification of him as such was not forthcoming. He was identified by one witness as heretofore reported by me as being seen shooting at the train, which carried our soldiers on their return from the baseball game at Colon on the day of the riot.

Nuñez is the man whom Lieut. R. F. C. Goetz, then an aide on the staff of the commanding general, arrested on the evening of the riot and turned over to the Panaman authorities. It seems, however, that when the witnesses were examined the identification which had been counted upon could not be obtained. This might have been possible if the Panaman authorities had exhibited proper energy and cooperation in the investigation of the riot, but it will be remembered by the Department that in spite of all the persistency and insistence of which we were capable it was not possible to get the Panaman authorities to present a number of their suspected police for identification by our soldiers until more than a year had elapsed after the riot. It is always difficult, of course, to single out the criminally guilty in the midst of the excitement of a riot. It was additionally difficult in this case because of the Panaman police wearing uniforms all alike. Considering these things and the lapse of time between occurrences and the presentation of the police before our soldiers for identification the improbability of successful identification is easily understood.

A short investigation was held by the Panaman authorities immediately succeeding the riot. A much fuller investigation by our military authorities with reference to the soldiers involved in the riot was conducted about the same time. However, the Panaman authorities refused or at least failed to take properly energetic steps in this matter and as far as effective cooperation and assistance with our military authorities, such was not possible to be obtained until after more than a year had passed. This furnishes, perhaps, a very tenable ground, in addition to others, for complaint on our part against the Panaman Government and to serve as a basis for damages against the Panaman Government. The unceasing repetition of demand on my part for action from the Panaman Government appears in the many notes found in the files of this case.

WM. JENNINGS PRICE

File No. 319.1123L25/56

The Secretary of State to Minister Price

No. 378

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 2, 1917.

SIR: Referring to your despatch No. 1288 of March 8, 1917,² and to previous correspondence regarding the murder of Corporal Langdon of the United States Coast Artillery Corps and the wounding of several other American soldiers at Colon on April 2, 1915, I enclose in duplicate three memorials, one filed by Daniel McNamara and James Langdon; and one each by Charlie R. Richeson and William A. Day, covering claims of $15,000.00, $1,000, and $1,000, respectively for damages resulting from the killing by Panaman policemen of Corporal Langdon, a brother of the claimants in the first mentioned memorial, and the wounding of Messrs. Richeson and Day during the Colon riot of April 2, 1915.

It seems unnecessary, in view of the correspondence which has passed between your Legation and the Panaman Foreign Office, with reference to this matter, to give more than the following brief narrative of what appear to be the principal facts of the case.

It appears that on the afternoon of April 2, 1915, a game of baseball was played at Colon between the 5th United States Infantry team and the Cristobal team, the latter being composed of enlisted men in the United States Coast Artillery Corps and of civilians, most, if not all, of whom were in the employ of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad. It is stated that a special train brought to Colon for the occasion about twelve hundred members of the garrison of Camp Otis and of the Camp at Empire; that a large majority of the visiting contingent of enlisted men attended the game and that two or three hundred were about the town, many of whom had viewed a part of the game. It appears that at about 4:30 p. m., near the corner of Cash and 11th Streets, trouble arose between the American enlisted men and Panaman police as a result of which two American soldiers were shot by the police.

As to the circumstances leading up to the incident, it appears that the first controversy, which, however, was quickly settled, arose between an American soldier and a negro (Jamaican), caused by an attempt of the latter to force his way through a group of perhaps a dozen soldiers who were standing on the sidewalk. It is stated that a few minutes later an enlisted man, Private Fritz, while twirling a "swagger stick", or while he and two or three others were perhaps carelessly playing with the stick, accidentally struck a Panaman policeman. That this was an accident was apparently admitted even by the policeman himself. It appears, however, that the policeman expressed resentment; that a controversy arose and as a result two Panaman policemen rushed in and attempted to arrest Private Fritz. In the mêlée which ensued, it appears that Private Fritz was felled with a club and that one or more Panaman policemen began using firearms. Private George Klimp, of the hospital corps of the United States transport Beauford, who at that moment came out of a nearby building and who was entirely disconnected with the affray, was shot in the left arm. The soldiers being unarmed and consequently unable to defend themselves, scattered. The policemen fired several shots in the direction of the fleeing soldiers as a result of which Private Richeson, who was half a block away, was wounded in the arm.

It appears that immediately following this occurrence, Private McMillan, more than a block distant from the scene of the trouble, and who was in no way connected with it, was, without the slightest provocation, severely and brutally clubbed by the police. There is also evidence of other apparently less atrocious acts of violence on the part of the Panaman police towards American soldiers at about that time, of which specific mention need not here be made. On being apprised of the trouble, the American military officers at the ball grounds immediately appeared on the scene. Armed American patrols were sent out over the town and as rapidly as possible the visiting soldiers were sent to the special train which was lying on the track on Broadway in the immediate vicinity of the ball park.

It also appears that at the conclusion of the baseball game, some fifteen or twenty minutes after the first disturbance, near the entrance to the ball ground where the soldiers were entraining, trouble arose between American soldiers and civilians of Colon which resulted in a general riot and in which Panaman police played no small part. Various versions as to the immediate cause of the trouble have been given. However, the preponderance of evidence seems to indicate that as the soldiers came from the ball grounds they were jeered at by a group of small boys, apparently negroes and Panamans; that the soldiers good naturedly chased the boys who receded and began hurling stones at the soldiers; that this misconduct was joined in by other natives and led to a general riot in which the soldiers, Panaman police and the inhabitants of that section participated. It appears that when this disturbance was at its height certain Panaman policemen took refuge in passageways between buildings on the east side of Hudson Lane both to the north and south of Falmouth Street and began shooting indiscriminately into the crowd of soldiers and at the special train which not only contained a large number of unarmed American soldiers but also American women. It seems that at about this time the enlisted men and armed patrols began to arrive from the scene of the first trouble en route to the train; that as the leading patrol, under Lieutenant Sloane of the Coast Artillery Corps, which, under orders of its superior officer, was endeavoring to restore order, reached 11th Street between Hudson Lane and Broadway, three policemen who were in a passageway on the east side of Hudson Lane made a stand at the head of an alley and one of them, who, at the time, was firing in the direction of the train, turned and without the slightest provocation directed his fire at the patrol. It also appears that one member of the patrol, Private Wells, who was in the lead, seeing a Panaman policeman firing into the train rushed out into an open lot and implored him to stop firing, whereupon the policeman turned on Private Wells, and fired one or two shots. While these shots missed the mark, one of them found lodgment in the chest of James Deloughery of Company I, 5th Infantry, who was standing on the rear platform of the last car of the train.

Practically simultaneously with this occurrence, Corporal Langdon, of the Coast Artillery Corps, who with two members of his patrol arrived at the corner of Hudson Lane and 11th Streets and while peaceably and orderly discharging the duty to which he had been assigned, namely, the bringing together of the American soldiers with a view to quelling the disturbance and preventing further trouble, was, without either warning or the slightest provocation, shot through the heart and instantly killed by a Panaman policeman who was secluded behind the corner of a building on the opposite side of the street.

It also appears that at about that time, at a point approximately seventy-five yards distant from the special train which he was approaching, Sergeant Day, a member of one of the patrols, was felled to the ground by a stone or other missile thrown by a Panaman, receiving a severe scalp wound which incapacitated him for active duty for a period of several days.

The salient facts of the whole disturbance appear to be that about thirty shots were fired by the police, which caused the death of one American soldier and the wounding of three others, whereas only five shots were fired by the Americans, all of which were fired by the members of the armed patrol and in self-defense, two of which shots were fired at the policeman who had already killed Corporal Langdon.

The evidence as a whole tends to show that the visiting soldiers did not go to Colon with any intention to provoke a disturbance and that they at no time were the aggressors in the affrays which occurred. That they were not seeking trouble seems evidenced by their forbearance after several of their number had been wounded by clubs and guns and otherwise maltreated by the Panaman police, also by the fact of their prompt obedience to orders when efforts to quell the disturbance were begun. It requires no exercise of the imagination to picture the conditions which would have obtained had the disregard of life and limb, which was manifested by the Panaman policemen, extended to these twelve hundred or more soldiers.

While this Government would not desire to be understood as contending that all of its enlisted men who unhappily were involved in this unfortunate affair were entirely blameless, it does maintain that resort to firearms by the Panaman police, in wanton disregard for human life, was, under the circumstances, wholly unwarranted and without a semblance of justification or excuse.

This, however, is not the only phase of the case of which this Government feels impelled to remind the Government of Panama. It appears that notwithstanding the urgent requests of this Government and the repeated promises of the Panaman Government that those responsible for these outrages against American soldiers should be speedily brought to justice, only two persons were ever arrested on any charge and but one of these was placed on trial. This man, Carlos Nuñez, who, as the alleged murderer of Corporal Langdon, was arrested at the instance of an American Army officer, and whose detention during the interim of nearly two years between the date of the riot and that of his trial, was continued only at the urgent solicitation of American officials, was allowed liberties and freedom during the period of his so-called imprisonment that bespeak for those responsible therefore such indifference with regard to the proper enforcement of justice as, if it does not amount to a tacit approval of the lawless acts of the Panaman police, at least indicates a lack of any serious purpose to punish any of the perpetrators of such acts.

In support of these assertions may be cited the proposed release of Nuñez shortly after his arrest; and the fact that, subsequent to the agreement of the Panaman Government that he should be kept in confinement pending the results of further investigation, he was permitted to be at liberty in the city of Panama and, on one occasion, namely, June 20, 1915, became involved in an affray in the Cocoa Grove district at which time he is said to have attacked two other persons with a razor without being apprehended until the following day.

As further evidence of laxity in the administration of justice in this unfortunate affair may be mentioned the facts first, that no investigation of a prompt and vigorous character was ever made by the Panaman authorities; second, that a period of more than a year was permitted to elapse before any formal accusation was made or any steps were taken to identify the guilty parties, during which time many important witnesses had left Panama and the ability of others to identify with certainty the guilty parties was greatly minimized; third, that approximately a year after these occurrences and before any of the witnesses, who during the investigation had testified that they could identify the murderer of Corporal Langdon and other police participating in the riot, had been given opportunity to do so, the Panaman Government suggested that the case be considered as satisfactorily settled; fourth, that the identification proceedings, when eventually held, were conducted in a perfunctory and half-hearted manner and were little calculated to establish the facts. In view of these circumstances, it followed as natural consequences that only one person was brought to trial and that he was acquitted.

There appears to be no doubt that had the investigation and identification proceedings been vigorously prosecuted immediately following the riot, the apprehension and conviction of those responsible for the death of Corporal Langdon and the wounding of three other American soldiers could easily have been accomplished.

While this Government is loath to believe that responsible officials of the Panaman Government have deliberately contrived to prevent the administration of justice in this case, it is nevertheless impelled to the view that there was, on the part of those officials to whom was entrusted the duty of administering the law, a gross lack of appreciation of the respect and good will of a sincerely friendly foreign state and of the rights of its citizens, which has made it possible for persons violating these rights to go unpunished.

This Government has no disposition to be exacting with the Government of Panama. It nevertheless feels compelled most earnestly to register its keen disappointment at the apparent insincerity and laxity with which the Panaman authorities have dealt with this unfortunate situation. Whether the conditions complained of exist by reason of acts of commission or of omission, no self-respecting Government can properly consent that its citizens shall be maltreated and murdered in a foreign territory under circumstances analogous to those obtaining in this case without demanding that the Government whose agents have not only perpetrated the offense but have made it possible for the guilty to go unpunished shall make due reparation for the injuries sustained.

The claims here presented cover the cases of but three of the several victims of this riot, namely, Corporal Langdon, Private Richeson and Sergeant Day. While this Government considers that at least two other persons, namely, Privates Klimp and Deloughery, both of whom were shot by Panaman police, are entitled to remuneration, they do not appear to be American citizens and no demand in their behalf will be made by this Government.

You will bring this matter to the attention of the Foreign Office in the sense of the foregoing and say that in the view of this Government the indemnities specified in the memorials which are being submitted appear to be reasonable and just but that as a further demonstration of its desire to be as lenient with the Panaman Government as a proper regard for national dignity and the rights of its citizens will permit, this Government will accept in full satisfaction of these claims the sum of $6,500.00. You will explain to the Panaman Government, however, that in making this concession this Government confidently expects that the Panaman Government will avail itself of an early opportunity to make settlement of the claims without the necessity of incurring the additional expense of referring to an arbitrator the question as to the amounts to be awarded as was done in the Cocoa Grove cases, but that if such a course is favored by the Panaman Government, this Government is willing to follow the procedure adopted in those cases.

No. 1418

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, June 8, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to request of the Department further instruction with reference to the presentation of claims against the Government of Panama, resulting from the riot in the city of Colon on April 2, 1915, and respecting which I acknowledge the receipt of instruction No. 378 of May 2, 1917.

Before complying with said instruction I deemed it well to confer with the military authorities of the Canal Zone, including Brigadier General E. H. Plummer, Commanding General, and Major H. A. White, Judge Advocate on his staff, who had supervision, as our representative, of the investigation and of the prosecution of Carlos Nuñez, incidental to the riot. Practically all of the evidence in the matter which is in the files of the Legation and of the Department consists of that taken by our authorities. We have never been furnished by the Panaman authorities with copies of their testimony. I understood that we had the agreement with them that they would do this and I was laboring under the impression that our military authorities, who took charge of the conduct of the investigation for us and of the trial of Nuñez, had been given copies. I found, however, they had not been. The record of this testimony is in the archives of the Superior or Criminal Court of Panama and consists of between three hundred and three hundred and fifty pages. * * * If the Department cares for it, I shall have to ask authority to employ outside clerical help in copying and translating it, as it would be impracticable to handle it in addition to the large amount of current work of the Legation.

Major White states to me that the Department in its instruction has quite fully and plainly summarized the testimony and stated the case notwithstanding the failure to have before it the testimony referred to above.

Both General Plummer and Major White coincide with me in the opinion that it will be much better to present at first our demand for indemnities in the total amount claimed, and to carry on negotiations on this basis, as far as it may seem wise and, to withhold, for the time being, any expression to the Panaman Government of our willingness to arbitrate the claims or to accept the sum of $6,500.00 in settlement, as I am instructed to do at the beginning of the negotiations in the concluding paragraph of instruction No. 378. * * * General Plummer desires to seek the Department's consent through the War Department to reconsider the attitude taken in the next paragraph to the last of the instruction of refusal to present demands for Privates Klimp and Deloughery on the ground that they are not American citizens. He claims they had taken out their first or declaration of intention papers and by reason of that fact and of their being enlisted in the military service of our Government that the claims should be prosecuted for them.

I, therefore, respectfully submit the foregoing for the consideration of the Department and shall await its further expression herein before filing a formal note with the Panama Foreign Office.

No. 400

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 30, 1917.

SIR: The Department has received your No. 1418 of the 8th instant, marked confidential, in which you ask for further instruction regarding the presentation of claims against the Government of Panama growing out of the riot in the city of Colon on April 2, 1915.

The Department is of the opinion that it will not be necessary to obtain copies of the testimony taken by the Panaman authorities during their investigation of this case.

The Department approves your suggestion that it might be better first to demand of the Panaman Government indemnities in the full amount claimed and to defer, for the time being, any expression of willingness to arbitrate the claims.

As to General Plummer's suggestion regarding the case of Privates Klump and Deloughery, the Department regrets that as these persons are not, and were not at the time the injuries were sustained, American citizens, it could not properly press diplomatic claims in their behalf. However, you may point out to General Plummer that these soldiers may desire to take up with their respective Governments the matter of their claims against the Government of Panama. Should they decide to pursue this course the Department would, upon request, furnish them copies of the evidence in its possession bearing on their particular cases.

F. O. No. 447

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, August 20, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor now again to refer to the riot which took place in the City of Colon on the 2d day of April, 1915, and in compliance with instructions from the Department of State of my Government to present in the name of my Government claims for damages against the Government of your excellency on behalf of the heirs of Corporal James Langdon who was killed on that unfortunate occasion and on behalf of Messrs. Charlie R. Richeson and William A. Day who were wounded.

It seems unnecessary, in view of the correspondence which has passed between your excellency's office and this Legation, with reference to this matter, to give more than a brief narrative of what appear to be the principal facts in the case.

It appears that on the afternoon of April 2, 1915, a game of baseball was played at Colon between the 5th United States Infantry team and the Cristobal team, the latter being composed of enlisted men in the United States Coast Artillery Corps and of civilians, most, if not all, of whom were in the employ of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad. It is stated that a special train brought to Colon for the occasion about twelve hundred members of the garrison of Camp Otis and of the Camp at Empire; that a large majority of the visiting contingent of enlisted men attended the game and that two or three hundred were about the town, many of whom had viewed a part of the game. It appears that at about 4:30 p. m., near the corner of Cash and 11th Streets, trouble arose between American enlisted men and Panamanian police as a result of which two American soldiers were shot by the police.

As to the circumstances leading up to the incident, it appears that the first controversy, which, however, was quickly settled, arose between an American soldier and a negro (Jamaican), caused by an attempt of the latter to force his way through a group of perhaps a dozen soldiers who were standing on the sidewalk. It is stated that a few minutes later an enlisted man, Private Fritz, while twirling a "swagger stick", or while he and two or three others were perhaps carelessly playing with the stick, accidentally struck a Panamanian policeman. That this was an accident was apparently admitted even by the policeman himself. It appears, however, that the policeman expressed resentment; that a controversy arose and as a result two Panama policemen rushed in and attempted to arrest Private Fritz. In the mêlée which ensued, it appears that Private Fritz was felled with a club and that one or more Panamanian policemen began using firearms. Private George Klimp, of the hospital corps of the United States transport Beauford, who at that moment came out of a nearby building and who was entirely disconnected with the affray, was shot in the left arm. The soldiers being unarmed and consequently unable to defend themselves, scattered. The policemen fired several shots in the direction of the fleeing soldiers as a result of which Private Richeson, who was half a block away, was wounded in the arm.

It appears that immediately following this occurrence, Private McMillan, more than a block distant from the scene of the trouble, and who was in no way connected with it, was, without the slightest provocation, severely and brutally clubbed by the police. There is also evidence of other apparently less atrocious acts of violence on the part of the Panamanian police towards American soldiers at about that time, of which specific mention need not here be made. On being apprised of the trouble, the American military officers at the ball grounds immediately appeared on the scene. Armed American patrols were sent out over the town and as rapidly as possible the visiting soldiers were sent to the special train which was lying on the track on Broadway in the immediate vicinity of the ball park.

It also appears that at the conclusion of the baseball game, some fifteen or twenty minutes after the first disturbance, near the entrance to the ball ground where the soldiers were entraining, trouble arose between American soldiers and civilians of Colon which resulted in a general riot and in which Panaman police played no small part. Various versions as to the immediate cause of the trouble have been given. However, the preponderance of evidence seems to indicate that as the soldiers came from the ball grounds they were jeered at by a group of small boys, apparently negroes and Panamans; that the soldiers good-naturedly chased the boys who receded and began hurling stones at the soldiers; that this misconduct was joined in by other natives and led to a general riot in which the soldiers, Panaman police and the inhabitants of that section participated. It appears that when this disturbance was at its height certain Panaman policemen took refuge in passageways between buildings on the east side of Hudson Lane both to the north and south of Falmouth Street and began shooting indiscriminately into the crowd of soldiers and at the special train which not only contained a large number of unarmed American soldiers but also American women. It seems that at about this time the enlisted men and armed patrols began to arrive from the scene of the first trouble en route to the train; that as the leading patrol, under Lieutenant Sloane of the Coast Artillery Corps, which, under orders of its superior officer, was endeavoring to restore order, reached 11th Street between Hudson Lane and Broadway, three policemen who were in a passageway on the east side of Hudson Lane made a stand at the head of an alley and one of them, who, at the time, was firing in the direction of the train, turned and without the slightest provocation directed his fire at the patrol. It also appears that one member of the patrol, Private Wells, who was in the lead, seeing a Panaman policeman firing into the train rushed out into an open lot and implored him to stop firing, whereupon the policeman turned on Private Wells and fired one or two shots. While these shots missed the mark, one of them found lodgment in the chest of James Deloughery of Company I, 5th Infantry, who was standing on the rear platform of the last car of the train.

Practically simultaneously with this occurrence, Corporal Langdon, of the Coast Artillery Corps, who with two members of his patrol arrived at the corner of Hudson Lane and 11th Streets and while peaceably and orderly discharging the duty to which he had been assigned, namely, the bringing together of the American soldiers with a view to quelling the disturbance and preventing further trouble, was, without either warning or the slightest provocation, shot through the heart and instantly killed by a Panaman policeman who was secluded behind the corner of a building on the opposite side of the street.

It also appears that at about that time, at a point approximately seventy-five yards distant from the special train which he was approaching, Sergeant Day, a member of one of the patrols, was felled to the ground by a stone or other missile thrown by a Panaman, receiving a severe scalp wound which incapacitated him for active duty for a period of several days.

The salient facts of the whole disturbance appear to be that about thirty shots were fired by the police, which caused the death of one American soldier and the wounding of three others, whereas only five shots were fired by the Americans, all of which were fired by the members of the armed patrol and in self-defense, two of which shots were fired at the policeman who had already killed Corporal Langdon.

The evidence as a whole tends to show that the visiting soldiers did not go to Colon with any intention to provoke a disturbance and that they at no time were the aggressors in the affrays which occurred. That they were not seeking trouble seems evidenced by their forbearance after several of their number had been wounded by clubs and guns and otherwise maltreated by the Panaman police, also by the fact of their prompt obedience to orders when efforts to quell the disturbance were begun. It requires no effort of the imagination to picture the conditions which would have obtained had the disregard of life and limb, which was manifested by the Panaman policemen, extended to these twelve hundred or more soldiers.

While my Government would not desire to be understood as contending that all of its enlisted men who unhappily were involved in this unfortunate affair were entirely blameless, it does maintain that resort to firearms by the Panaman police, in wanton disregard for human life, was, under the circumstances, wholly unwarranted and without a semblance of justification or excuse.

This, however, is not the only phase of the case of which my Government feels impelled to remind the Government of Panama. It appears that notwithstanding the urgent requests of my Government and the repeated promises of the Panaman Government that those responsible for these outrages against American soldiers should be speedily brought to justice, only two persons were ever arrested on any charge and but one of these was placed on trial. This man, Carlos Nuñez, who, as the alleged murderer of Corporal Langdon, was arrested at the instance of an American Army officer, and whose detention during the interim of nearly two years between the date of the riot and that of his trial, was continued only at the urgent solicitation of American officials, was allowed liberties and freedom during the period of his so-called imprisonment that bespeak for those responsible therefor such indifference with regard to the proper enforcement of justice as, if it does not amount to a tacit approval of the lawless acts of the Panaman police, at least indicates a lack of any serious purpose to punish any of the perpetrators of such acts.

In support of these assertions may be cited the proposed release of Nuñez shortly after his arrest; and the fact that, subsequent to the agreement of the Panaman Government that he should be kept in confinement pending the results of further investigation, he was permitted to be at liberty in the city of Panama and, on one occasion, namely, June 20, 1915, became involved in an affray in the "Cocoa Grove" District at which time he is said to have attacked two other persons with a razor without being apprehended until the following day.

As further evidence of laxity in the administration of justice in this unfortunate affair may be mentioned the facts first, that no investigation of a prompt and vigorous character was ever made by the Panaman authorities; second, that a period of more than a year was permitted to elapse before any formal accusation was made or any steps were taken to identify the guilty parties, during which time many important witnesses had left Panama and the ability of others to identify with certainty the guilty parties was greatly minimized; third, that approximately a year after these occurrences and before any of the witnesses, who during the investigation had testified that they could identify the murderer of Corporal Langdon and other police participating in the riot, had been given opportunity to do so, the Panaman Government suggested that the case be considered as satisfactorily settled; fourth, that the identification proceedings, when eventually held, were conducted in a perfunctory and half-hearted manner and were little calculated to establish the facts. There appears to be no doubt that had the investigation and identification proceedings been vigorously prosecuted immediately following the riot, the apprehension and conviction of those responsible for the death of Corporal Langdon and the wounding of three other American soldiers could easily have been accomplished.

I am instructed to say that while my Government is loath to believe that responsible officials of the Panaman Government have deliberately contrived to prevent the administration of justice in this case, it is nevertheless impelled to the view that there was, on the part of those officials to whom was entrusted the duty of administering the law, a gross lack of appreciation of the respect and good will of a sincerely friendly foreign state and of the rights of its citizens, which has made it possible for persons violating these rights to go unpunished.

I am, therefore, further instructed by my Government to ask at the hands of your excellency's Government the payment of the sum of fifteen ($15,000) thousand dollars for the heirs of Corporal James Langdon and the sum of one ($1,000) thousand dollars each for Mr. C. E. Richeson and Mr. W. A. Day, and to express the hope that your excellency's Government will find itself disposed to do these acts of justice with promptness all the more because of the fact that the same can not serve other than as a partial reparation for such wrongs as were inflicted on this occasion.

SIR: I have the honor to submit for the further instruction of the Department herein a translation of a response from the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Panama to my note presenting claims for damages against the Government of Panama growing out of the Colon riot of April 2, 1915. The length of this response is such that it has required considerable time, in connection with the other work of the Legation, to complete a translation of it. It is my intention to send a copy of the Spanish text of same but there has not been the opportunity yet to have it completed.

I shall send duly a copy of the translation of said response to Colonel George F. Landers, the military commander of the Canal Zone.

[Inclosure—Translation]The Minister for Foreign Affairs to Minister Price

S. P. No. 2950

PANAMA, September 28, 1917.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to refer to your excellency's kind note F. O. No. 447, of August 20 last, received in this office on the 29th of that month, the receipt of which I acknowledged the following day by my note S. P. No. 2724.

I have delayed answering this note of your excellency because the matter to which it refers is extremely complex and because the dossiers, judicial, administrative and diplomatic, on this subject, which repose in the archives of this Department, are so voluminous that the reading and study of them have demanded of me considerable time. This matter was fully discussed by your excellency and my predecessor during the past administration, and I venture to hope that in now reviving this discussion, which is new to me, your excellency will excuse the delay which lack of preparation has compelled me to make.

Your excellency's note is divided into three principal parts. The first consists of a statement of events which took place in Colon on April 2, 1915, the results of which were: a corporal of the American Army dead, several American soldiers wounded or bruised, and also—although your excellency is silent as to this—several Panamanians and foreigners wounded and bruised, as well as some members of the Colon police. The second part of your excellency's note undertakes to throw the responsibility for those doings of blood on the authorities of the Panaman Government, and the third part fixes the amount of the pecuniary claim which in the opinion of your excellency the Republic of Panama should pay to the heirs of the deceased Corporal Langdon, to Day who was stoned and to Richeson who was wounded.

To be methodical, I shall follow as closely as possible the relation of the events as your excellency formulates them, analyzing them in the light of the data collected from the dossiers which I have just consulted.

Without stopping to transcribe textually the prolix narrative of your excellency, I will observe that in it no mention is made therein of an essential fact, the importance of which admits of no discussion. That is this: The ball game which was played in Colon on April 2, 1915, had been profusely advertised in the newspapers of the Isthmus, and so far ahead that the most elemental foresight and prudence required of the American authorities the adoption of certain necessary steps. In transporting to Colon from Camp Otis and Empire 1,200 soldiers, those authorities should have reinforced proportionately and adequately the preventive guard or patrol which, in accordance with the de facto agreement which has existed between the Panaman and American authorities since 1908, accompanies the American sea and land forces when they disembark in or travel through our territory, and which is charged with the arresting and punishing of soldiers and sailors in case of necessity in order thus to prevent any conflict with our public forces or with the civilian population. Notwithstanding this, the contrary took place. Not only did the patrol not appear in Colon that day, but the American military authorities notoriously failed to give heed to the requests concerning this made to them by the Governor of the Province, Mr. Ruben Arcia S., as stated by this official in his sworn declaration of July 18, 1916, made before the First Judge of the Circuit of Colon, which says:

"On April 2, 1915, I started at about 2.15 p. m. for the place where they play ball and, in passing through Boca Grande (in the red light district), I saw a crowd of American soldiers and sailors taking considerable spirits and noticed that neither soldiers nor sailors were watched by the usual patrol; I tried at once to get on the telephone Capt. Kennedy, Chief of Police of Cristobal, who was not there but at the ball game. I went on to the place where the game was being held and there met Capt. Kennedy and Sergt. Callaway, whom I asked to present me to one of the chiefs of the soldiers who had come from the Zone and were in the Boca Grande section, in a state of drunkenness, since I thought it necessary to send at once a patrol to avoid disorders. These police chiefs granted my request and presented me to Capt. Walker, one of the chiefs of the soldiers present that day. I asked this gentlemen to send a patrol and I told him my reasons for asking this and this chief told me with considerable haughtiness that he would look after the matter."

This version of Governor Arcia is corroborated by the testimony of Sergeant Callaway, of the Canal Zone police, who declares the following before the administrative authorities of Colon:

"Governor Arcia arrived and said to me: 'I wish you would go with me and find some officer who has authority over the soldiers who are in the city.' Then he told me that there were numerous soldiers in the red light district and that some of them were drinking, and that to avoid disorders he was going to ask that a patrol be sent to look after the soldiers; 'Very well, come with me,' I said, 'And I will find some officer who has authority to do what you wish.' Near the grand-stand I saw Capt. Davis of the 5th Company and presented him to Governor Arcia. The Governor then told Capt. Davis that a number of soldiers were in the red light district and that they were drinking; that as yet they were quiet but that he feared that some disorder might arise and that in order to avoid this he asked that a patrol of American soldiers be sent to the red light district to look after the sailors who were in that section and that he, Governor Arcia, would look after his people. Capt. Davis asked me if I had been in the red light district and if I had seen soldiers there. I answered that I had not been there. Together with the Governor, we returned to the place where we had left Capt. Kennedy, who asked me what had been done. I answered that I had presented the Governor to Capt. Davis and that the Governor had asked for a patrol to look after the sailors. Capt. Kennedy asked me if the patrol had been sent and I answered that I could not say, that I did not know. The Governor said that Capt. Davis did not seem to have attached much importance to his request. Governor Arcia remarked that Capt. Davis had not paid as much attention to the matter as he had hoped, that he had been very cold to him. When the Governor and I had returned to the place where we had left Capt. Kennedy, it was exactly 3 p. m. by my watch."

This occurred therefore an hour and a half before the deplorable events which we all know of took place.

Another circumstance concerning which your excellency is silent, and which likewise cannot be passed over completely if it is desired to penetrate the determining motive of the principal dispute and to establish in justice the responsibilities arising therefrom, is this. The ball game which attracted so many to Colon was played by a team of soldiers from the Canal Zone (5th Infantry) and another composed almost entirely of civilian employees of the same Zone (Cristobal). This fact caused, as is natural in every game, the formation of two bands or rival parties and therefore the sympathies of the spectators were divided. The British subjects born in the Antilles, who form the greater part of the Colon population, early made clear their preference for the Cristobal team, composed chiefly of civilian employees of the Canal and of the Panama Railroad. This sympathy is easily explained: the West Indians are also laborers and civilian employees of the Canal and of the Railroad and felt themselves bound to the Cristobal team by more or less remote ties of solidarity. That sentiment was given free expression due to the victory obtained by the Cristobal club over the 5th Infantry, composed exclusively of soldiers, and some sarcastic expression voiced by the subjects of His Britannic Majesty had the result of exasperating the conquered soldiers' pride and were the determining motive of the disturbances. Your excellency in referring to the first incident which took place at about 4.30 between American soldiers and Panaman police near the corner of 11th and Ricaurte (Cash) Streets, declares—to my great surprise—that on that occasion "two American soldiers were wounded by firearms by the police". As your excellency well knows, it has not been possible during years of incessant efforts and investigations to obtain the proof necessary to make this affirmation certain, although these efforts and investigations have been conducted by both the American military authorities and the Panaman authorities, seconded by the joint diplomatic action of your Legation and of this Chancellery.

Your excellency describes the cause of this incident thus:

"A few minutes later a soldier, Fritz, in playing with his walking-stick, or while he and two or three others were carelessly playing with a stick, struck a Panaman policeman. That this was an accident the policeman himself apparently admits."

Nevertheless, the declaration made by the policeman who was struck, Roman Herrera, before the investigating Judge in the presence of Lieut. Fechet d'Alary, disagrees essentially with the version of your excellency. Here is what Roman Herrera says, on p. 18 of the judicial dossier:

* * * "Yesterday at a quarter after four I was on post in Colunge Street and as I was walking my beat I saw or met two American soldiers who were striking two negroes; in accordance with the instructions I had received, I paid no attention to this and continued my walking; on returning, I saw another soldier standing in the middle of Santander Street calling to other soldiers to pick up, as I understood it, a stick which he held at his feet; I passed near this soldier, from in front, and he on seeing me, said to me: 'Ah, spiquiti! (spiggotty?)', and another who had picked up the stick struck me hard over the kidneys while others rained⁴ blows on me; what I then did was defend myself; at this point policemen 134 and 111 approached and told the soldier who had struck me that he was under arrest; this had hardly been said when, as if by enchantment some two hundred soldiers rushed at us and committed against us all kinds of outrages and insults. At this point the captain and policeman 13 arrived and put an end to the incident. I came out of this with a wound in the right cheek, from a (barillazo) which a soldier gave me."

Pedro Pablo Gaitán, policeman No. 134, declares on p. 2 of the judicial dossier that he found in 10th street many American soldiers drunk and that one of them seized a stick and attacked policeman No. 50, on post in that street, cutting open his eye. That he tried to arrest the soldier but in vain, because all the soldiers came on top of them.

"At once, in the performance of our duty, we tried to defend ourselves; at this moment policeman 59 came to our assistance and as we tried again to defend ourselves a soldier lifted him up and threw him on the ground, taking away his stick and hat; seeing this, I took the stick and tried to protect my comrade; the same soldier now seized me strongly and struck (dió de trompadas) me and threw away my hat; this soldier was armed with a stick. I tried to get my hat from him, but he struck me with his stick; at this point I heard two or three revolver shots from I do not know where; the soldier threw the hat on the ground and ran away. This ended the matter as far as we were concerned and I withdrew."

Policeman 59, José A. Martínez, declares on p. 5, that—

"Policeman 50, stationed in the Louvre, was passing and the gringos, when they saw him, made for him and struck him; I approached again and the gringos disarmed me, taking my stick, my hat and other things, and several lifted me up and let me drop to the ground, repeating this several times—three times—trampled on the ground, I drew my revolver and fired three shots in the air and then Sub-Lieut. Agustín Arias disarmed me and I withdrew again to my post. A (chomo) brought me my hat after a while."

⁴ Me tiraban trompadas—fell afool of us.

As your excellency might observe that the foregoing declarations, since they emanate from the very police who were attacked by the soldiers, might perhaps breathe passion or vengeance, I am going to cite testimony from an American source to show your excellency that the soldier Fritz was not joking with the police, but acting aggressively, under the influence of alcohol.

Soldier George W. Edman, on the back of p. 145, declares that—

“A man of the 5th Infantry had one of their sticks and was over there and two others were trying to get him along towards the train. This man was somewhat under the influence of liquor and they put the stick under his arm and insisted on taking it away with them. A Panaman policeman arrived and stopped them and when a soldier tried to get the stick from his friends he struck the policeman below the eye.”

I continue to cite to your excellency:—

“It appears nevertheless that the policemen showed resentment; that there arose a dispute and that two Panaman policemen came up and tried to arrest Fritz. It appears that, in the tumult that ensued, they knocked the soldier Fritz down with a stick and one or more Panaman policeman began to use their revolvers.”

Did not your excellency declare in another passage of your note that the Government of the United States was far from absolving from all blame all the soldiers of the American Army who took part in this fray, there might be presumed in the foregoing transcriptions a certain tendency to establish a contrast between the polite and respectful attitude there assigned to the American soldiers and the very aggressive one imputed to the Panaman police.

It is a proved fact that soldiers and sailors, not only those of the United States of America but of all the nations of the world, when they breathe freely outside of the military iron discipline, are given to expansiveness of a violent and dangerous character. To throw a numerous army on the city of Colon without providing the patrols necessary to preserve order in the town is a lack of prevision such that, if it were not a matter in this case of the Government which guarantees the independence of the Republic of Panama, on the one hand, and of that which has given its soil for the opening of the Inter-oceanic Canal, on the other, that fault would have provoked an international conflict of the gravest consequences.

Your excellency, after referring to the soldiers Klimp and Richeson being wounded in the arm and the soldier McMillan clubbed by the police, adds:

“There is also proof of other acts of violence, apparently less cruel, on the part of the Panaman police towards the American soldiers, at more or less the same hour of which it is not necessary to make special mention here.”

Setting aside all prejudice, prevention and passion, I venture to ask your excellency whether it is conceivable within the bounds of logic and reason, that such a small contingent of police as that which kept order in the streets of Colon and at the ball game, on the afternoon of Good Friday of 1915, would assume the more than rash attitude which your excellency attributes to it before 1,200 soldiers of Camp Otis and Corozal, to which should be added those of the Coast Artillery and the American civilian employees of the Panama Railroad and Canal? However much such prodigies of valor might flatter the self-conceit of Isthmians, the numerical disproportion in this case between the military element and civil element of the Americans on the one side and of the Panaman police on the other was so enormous that without stopping to study the affidavits of the inquiry common sense rejects the possibility of the provocative acts attributed to the police of Panama.

Your excellency in referring to the incident which took place later at the entrance to the ball grounds states that this disagreement arose “between American soldiers and persons from Colon”. This statement likewise disagrees with the testimony collected in the course of the investigation, from which it appears on the contrary, that the incident to which your excellency alludes occurred chiefly between American soldiers and West Indians, who constitute—as is well known to all—the majority of the population of Colon and are for the most part employees of the Canal and of the Railroad.

Your excellency adds that in this tumult “the Panaman police took no small part”, as if for this reason some blame attached to them. As a matter of fact, the police were sent to the ball game for the very purpose of ensuring order and of intervening in any tumult that might take place. These are the proper functions of police corps in all countries of the world, and this duty was all the more imperative for the police of Colon on the day I refer to owing to the very perceptible lack of military patrols for watching and restraining the soldiers.

Concerning the origin of this incident, your excellency says that the soldiers were jeered by "negro and Panaman" small boys. As to the color of the small boys, this Department has no remark to make; as to the nationality of same, it has. Mr. Luis F. Muñoz, at that time captain of the port of Colon, declares on the night of the very day of these happenings (p. 11 of the dossier) that on leaving the ball game which took place between the 5th Infantry and Cristobal, in 14th Street, there were some nineteen railroad cars and as he was trying to cross the cars to take the other street, in Broadway Avenue, two soldiers were throwing stones which they picked up in the street at a young Jamaican, some fourteen years old.

And the witness William Williams, American citizen, declares on p. 23:

"As I left the ball game I saw a group of negroes"—he does not mention Panamanians—"who were leaving by 11th Street jeering at the soldiers because they had lost the game."

Likewise your excellency opines—with extravagant optimism—that the soldiers fled good-naturedly from the mocking children, notwithstanding that the captain of the port of Colon, as well as other eyewitnesses of the events, declare the exact opposites and your excellency professes the opinion which is no less charitable as to the reception and treatment which the American soldiers reserved for the Panaman police when the latter, in the performance of their duty, intervened in the tumult; and in the next line your excellency mentions that when the tumult was at its apogee "certain Panaman policemen took refuge in the alleys which run between the buildings on the east side of Hudson Lane, to the north and south of Falmouth Street", although without saying why. Acknowledge then, that our warrior Cids and our grappling Horatios of a few minutes ago left on the run. The reason for such taking refuge is given us on p. 124 by the soldier Cyrus L. Rhone:

"We were on our way to the train and the Panaman police began to gather about there and the American soldiers began to chase them with stones."

But where your excellency can find a more vivid and complete picture of the incident referred to is in the declaration of the soldier Ivan F. Bourn, on the back of p. 127 of the dossier. This says:

"When I arrived there, there were in the place some three hundred soldiers and also some twenty-five or thirty negroes and Panaman. I found a soldier of the 5th Infantry and a negro quarreling. The soldier was saying 'If I can't play ball, at least I can beat you' and struck the negro. A group of soldiers then gathered there and began to hit the negro. The negro did not reply to the blows but covered with his hands in front of his face. Then a civilian (a white American) and some sergeants and corporals (some from the 5th Infantry, some from the 10th Infantry and the Coast Artillery) arrived for the purpose of making the soldiers who were beating the negro withdraw. One of the soldiers said to the white American civilian, who was very yellow and appeared dark: 'You negro bastard, what are you mixing in for?' The sergeants and corporals got the civilian out of the crowd. Then the soldiers went to the opposite side of the train and filled their hats with stones and approached the houses and threw stones at the Panamans and negroes who lived in them, who had been jeering at the soldiers because Cristobal had come out victor in the ball game. Those who lived in the houses replied to the stones with empty beer bottles and pieces of china, etc. As three Panaman policemen coming from the alley appeared at this moment, the soldiers when they saw them began against them. One of the soldiers picked up a folding chair and rushed at a policeman and hit him with it several times until he threw him to the ground and left him insensible. It appears that this soldier then threw this policeman into the alley and left him there stunned (tonto). The group of soldiers then threw stones at the other policemen and drove them towards an alley."

Both affidavits are of American origin.

Your excellency adds that the police began to shoot indiscriminately at the group of soldiers and at the special train, without taking into account at all that private persons also fired and that those private persons were almost all British West Indians. Regarding this Capt. Fred. M. Bugbee of the American Army declares, on the back of p. 138, of the dossier, as follows:

"To the best of my knowledge and belief, as well as I can remember, I think that one or two shots were fired from the houses, since two bullets passed close to me, but I cannot say whence they came; I also believe, although I am not very sure, that bottles and stones were thrown from the houses."

And the soldier Andrew McManus, on p. 139, declares:

"I was in 11th Street near the corner of Hudson Alley, and I saw a Panaman come out of an alley. He was a private person. He was firing towards the opposite corner.

Question. Can you say what he was firing at?

Answer. No sir, I did not see. There was a Panaman policeman about three paces from him who did not seem to try to stop him.

Q. The policeman saw him?

A. He must have seen him.

Q. Did the policeman fire at all?

A. No sir.

Q. What time was it then?

A. After the ball game.

Q. Will the witness say how he knows that the person that he saw come out of an alley and who, he says, was firing towards the corner in front of him was a native of this country?

A. I can say that he was a native because he was very dark.

Q. Will the witness say that he could not just as well have been a West Indian or Jamaican as a Panaman?

A. I cannot say where he came from as I was not near enough to him; the most I can say is that he was a resident of Colon and of the usual type."

With this declaration corresponds that of the soldier L. B. Burgess given on p. 104 of the dossier. Describing the entrance into action of the armed patrol, your excellency says that "A member of the patrol, soldier Wells, seeing a Panaman policeman firing at the train, went hurriedly to a yard and urged him to stop shooting, after which the policeman aimed at Wells and fired one or two shots at him. Although these bullets missed their target, one of them entered the chest of James Deloughery, of Co. I, 5th Infantry, who was standing on the back platform of the last car of the train."

Very well, this soldier Wells (the same who later induced Lieut. Goetz to ask for the arrest of Policeman No. 3, Carlos Nuñez, indicating him as responsible for the death of Corporal Langdon), in his declaration made before the military authorities of the Zone, ratified under oath before the Governor of Panama on January 11, 1916, confesses that he cannot identify the policeman who killed Corporal Langdon, but that he can identify the one who was firing at the cars, i. e. who wounded the soldier Deloughery. Unfortunately, when the Panaman authorities shortly afterwards asked that Wells identify the man who wounded Deloughery, the military authorities of the Zone reported that he had already ceased to belong to the Army and that they did not know his whereabouts. But the soldier Deloughery was called to identify his alleged assailant and, on April 16, 1916, in the presence of 30 uniformed police, among whom was Carlos Nuñez, did not indicate him as his assailant, but indicated Lucas Garcés. The Superior Judge, Dr. D. Cervera, therefore, by an order dated June 17, 1917 ordered a confrontation of Deloughery and Garcés, which took place July 27 following, the former there declaring—under oath and over his signature—that although it seemed to him that the person who was present was the man who had fired at him he could not say so positively.

Almost at the same moment as this took place, Corporal Langdon was wounded by firearms and instantly killed "by a Panaman policeman", says your excellency. Such a categorical declaration, although it is fathered by the distinguished representative of the Government of the United States of America here, has the insuperable defect that it is not accompanied by the proof or proofs which the judge of the case, the prosecuting attorney and the jury rejected for arresting, accusing and condemning Nuñez at his trial. This is a matter more-over of hearsay testimony and, consequently, of no juridical value as to establishing thereby alone the culpability of an alleged homicide. The same reason that exists for saying that Corporal Langdon was killed by the Colon police exists for saying that he was killed by the members of the armed patrols who were at that time considerably excited and making fire wildly and crazily. I reproduce below the declaration of Mr. Frederick Brid, p. 42 of the dossier:

"Question. Was there any firing?

Answer. I heard firing by the gringos, some three shots in succession at the police of this place.

Q. Was anybody wounded by these shots?

A. One American was wounded and died from this wound afterwards. I believe that this wound was inflicted by the bullets of his own American comrades.

Q. You then presume that the wounded man, who later died, was the victim of his own comrades?

A. Yes, sir, that is my opinion.

Q. You saw this American fall wounded?

A. I did not see him fall, I only saw him wounded.

Q. You saw him where he was before he was hit?

A. Yes, sir, I saw him and he was exactly towards the point whence his comrades were firing."

Another equally legitimate hypothesis is that Langdon was killed by shots fired by West Indians hidden in some neighboring house, as can be seen from the declarations already transcribed of the soldiers Cyrus L. Rhone and Leonard Burgess and of Capt. Bugbee. Since it cannot be affirmed with certainty who fired the shots which caused the death and the wounds inflicted that day on Americans and Panamanians, they may be attributed equally well to policemen, to private individuals or to soldiers. As exercise for the imagination, these three hypotheses are equally reasonable.

Your excellency alleges that seventy-five yards away from the special train "Sergeant Day was knocked down by a stone thrown by a Panaman." This assertion suffers from the same defect as the preceding one. If the proof that the aggressor of Sergeant Day was a Panaman had been produced during the trial, the judge would have taken note of the fact and would have taken steps for the trial of the responsible party. Nevertheless, the name of Sergeant Day is not mentioned a single time in the dossier, although fifty-eight officers and soldiers of the American Army made declarations before the Governor of this Province; and if nobody speaks of Sergeant Day, and nobody knew his assailant, how can it be known positively that the latter was a Panaman? But even supposing that it had been proved to satiety that Sergeant Day had been maimed in reality by a Panaman citizen, your excellency is not ignorant of the fact that in as bad or worse condition than the sergeant were many policemen, many Panaman private parties and West Indians, some of whom were wounded and bruised and incapacitated for work: Climaco Murillo, Miguel Navas, Miguel Panán, Luis Burat, José A. Martínez, Román Herrera, Carlos Nuñez, Rodolfo Beiberach, Siebert Evans, etc., not to mention the damage done to private property by the American soldiers, especially to the house of Mr. Benigno Palma, as stated in the official note of the Department to your Legation dated April 30, 1915, No. S-6496.

Your excellency calculates that the Panaman police fired thirty shots and the American soldiers five. A shot more or less, the quantity makes little difference to the case; what is important is the origin of the shots which caused personal damages and this is exactly what the judicial process and collateral administrative examinations have failed to reveal. Notwithstanding this, your excellency affirms, without the slightest reservation, that all the shots were fired by the Panaman police, all that killed an American soldier and wounded three others; and your excellency says it in a dogmatic tone which appears to show profound conviction. Nevertheless, it is not as your excellency thinks; and if it were, it is clear that there would be more than enough reason to censure the Panaman judicial authorities for manifest injustice. I will prove this.

The American soldier James Harrington, on p. 131, reverse side, of the dossier says:

"We heard some shots; we went where those sentinels were. There were three of them there. I went some five steps past the sentinel and somebody began to fire. I could see a part of the man who was firing. During this shooting the sentinel and I heard him say to somebody that this man was wounded; I returned and we took him again to the alley. The corporal was killed at the corner of 11th Street and Hudson Alley.

Question. Where was the private person whom you saw firing?

Answer. That man I saw firing at that moment was a private person standing in an alley, to the northeast of Hudson Alley, just north of 11th Street.

Q. Let the witness state what persons were throwing the stones that he saw?

A. I could not swear exactly to the persons who were throwing stones as I was some distance away, but I think that they were American soldiers, Panamanian private persons, and also Jamaicans.

Q. Did the witness see any firing at the soldiers?

A. Yes, sir, I saw a private person shooting, I do not know whether it was a Panamanian, a West Indian or a Jamaican.

Q. Was it at this time that the sentinel fell wounded by a gun-shot?

A. I am not sure, but it might have been from the shots which I saw this man fire, for he fired three times; I cannot say with certainty."

This declaration coincides with that of the soldier McManus already transcribed elsewhere, which says that, being near the corner of 11th Street and Hudson Alley, he saw a private person come out of an alley and fire.

And the soldier, L. B. Burgess, in his declaration, on p. 104, says: "There was someone firing from the upper part of one of the buildings near the train, he was on the north side of 11th Street. I could not say who he was because I did not see him." Asked by the investigating official "He who is asking questions knows that some shots were fired from balconies of houses near the place of the incident?" he answered: "A little below Hudson Alley I saw some firing from a balcony of a house."

This office does not wish to maintain that the American soldiers went to Colon with the premeditated intention of provoking conflicts and attacking private persons and police of the city, no; but it is undeniable that they provoked those conflicts, sometimes under the influence of liquor, as in the case of the soldier Fritz, and sometimes impelled thereto by wounded pride, as in the case of the blows, taunts and stone-throwing given to the small boys and Jamaican negroes leaving the ball game. And it appears to be demonstrated by the unanimous opinion of all the witnesses that the disturbances ceased as a result of the energetic action of the military officers and not owing to the spontaneous will of the soldiers, as your excellency insinuates. The officers compelled them against their will to withdraw from the field of operations and empty their pockets which were full of stones.

Yielding to the imperative voice of your conscience, your excellency recognizes that your Government is far from considering that all its soldiers were free from blame in those unfortunate events, but your excellency attempts in the next line to detract from the high moral value of this confession by adding that, in spite of everything, the use of firearms by the Panamanian police was absolutely unjustifiable. Although the shots of the policeman beaten in the incident in 10th Street, José A. Martínez, were fired in the air, as the American citizen Walter L. Smith declares on p. 163, and although the four shots of the police who were in the vacant lot at Broadway and 11th Street were likewise fired in the air, or at least "wounded nobody" as the American citizen Henry Sears of Cristobal declares on p. 24, still, if the matter is considered with serene mind, setting aside all national and racial prejudice, in the light of sane reason and of law, it is from all points of view impossible to condemn an agent of the public safety for firing in the air to put to flight the rioting crowds, or even for firing directly on them should the first remedy prove inefficacious and the life of the agent be in peril. This act has double justification: that of the individual who fights in his own defense and that of the representative of public authority who does not permit this to be mocked or attacked in his person.

The first part, as it might be called, of your excellency's note, devoted entirely to the story of the events according to reports collected by your Legation, being finished, there commences that which I venture to call the second part, dedicated to accusations against the judicial and administrative authorities of the Republic for the manner, conceived by your excellency to be imperfect, in which the investigation was carried out and the further steps of the trial taken up to the acquittal by the jury of the only man accused of the crime of homicide. And this second part, excuse me, your excellency, for saying it without circumlocution, is even more unjust than the first, for if any charge can be made against the Government of the Republic in this connection it can be only that of having carried to the last extreme condescension for the wishes, suggestions and intimations of your Legation and of the military authorities of the Canal Zone. It is correct to say that the Executive Power placed itself unconditionally at the service of your excellency's Government for the purposes of this investigation, and this is the profound conviction which one acquires from reading the record of the proceedings. This direct intervention dates from the very day of the events, when Lieut. Goetz, aide to General Edwards, asked the police captain in Colon to arrest Policeman No. 3, Carlos Nuñez, simply because the soldier Wells had told him that this was the man who had killed Corporal Langdon.

Your excellency will remember that the soldier Wells could not be had when he was called to identify from a number the man who fired the shot which killed Langdon, and that of the fifty-eight military witnesses called to testify under oath before the Governor of Panama, only the pretended eyewitness, C. L. Wells, failed to answer the call of our authorities to make a personal identification. Moreover, the testimony of Wells on this point is particularly open to suspicion because he was the same soldier your excellency referred to previously who, on seeing a Panaman policeman firing at the train, hurriedly went to a yard and implored him to stop shooting, at which the policeman aimed at the soldier Wells and fired one or two shots, and although these missed their mark, one of them wounded the soldier James Deloughery of Company I, 5th Infantry, in the chest as he was standing on the rear platform of the last car of the train. It is very difficult to prove that one and the same man was at one and the same time the cause of the shots against the soldier Wells, of the wounds to soldier Deloughery and of the death of Corporal Langdon. Policeman No. 3 seems to have been chosen by the soldier Wells as the propitiatory victim for the unfortunate events of that day, and the judicial officials who took part in the cognizance of this matter could not follow blindly his passionate inspirations without verifying them minutely by submitting them to a severe analysis. They do not wish to dispose of the liberty and the honor of a man with the same lightness and carelessness with which, if we are to credit the American version, the Colon police disposed of the lives of others.

Lack of proof prevented the judicial authorities for ordering the legal detention of Policeman C. Nuñez, as requested by Lieut. F. C. Goetz, until owing to the vehement steps of your excellency my predecessor ordered his detention as an administrative measure, as a sign of deference and good-will toward the American Government. That detention was an act of pure gratification which under other circumstances would have caused the gravest consequences to the responsible official, since it was a step which should have been ordered only by the judge of the case if he found cause to act.

On April 5, 1915, three days after the events, your excellency proposed to our Government that the American and Panaman authorities take separately the declarations of the witnesses and communicate to each other the results of their proceedings; that a Panaman representative be present at the taking of testimony by the American military and an American representative be present at that by the Panaman Government. All this was agreed to and fulfilled. Mr. Inocencio Galindo, Jr., acted as the representative of our authorities and Capt. Fulton as representative of the American Government. But this was merely an administrative investigation which in nothing obligated the Panaman Judicial Power, which, according to our Constitution, acts independently of the Executive Power. The judicial officials had timely knowledge both of the investigation which the Subsecretary of Government and Justice, by order of the Executive Power, carried out in Colon, and of that which the military authorities of the Zone conducted, and took advantage of all the details thereof which could throw light on the investigation made by the 1st Judge of Colon. At the end of June 1915, it was already known that the investigations did not disclose sufficient proof for proceeding against any one and a suspension was momentarily expected when the first protests of your excellency against the deficiencies of the judicial investigations and against the mere possibility that Policeman Nuñez would be set at liberty, led the Government to use its influence with the judges to get them to broaden their investigations and give to those interested an opportunity to introduce the testimony they had missed. For this purpose my predecessor assembled in the yellow room of the Government Palace the most prominent members of the Judicial Power of the Republic, and steps were studied for reconciling the provisions of our laws with the desires which animated our Executive to conform to those of your excellency. According to our judicial code every dossier is secret and only the judge in the case and the prosecutor can examine it. Notwithstanding this, the Superior Judge of the Republic, as a matter of courtesy and in order to satisfy the written request of your excellency, offered to furnish to the American Legation the greatest possible quantity of information, and even invited it, through this office, to name a representative as a private prosecutor in the judicial proceedings which were being held. (See the note of this Secretaryship to your excellency of September 30, 1915.)

On October 7, 1915, the prosecutor is of the opinion that no proof whatsoever has been obtained from the investigation made, nor even any strong indication as to the persons who caused the death of Langdon, the wounds of the American soldiers and of the Panaman private persons and police, or the damage done to private property, and that under these circumstances, unless a broadening of the investigation should be ordered and give better results, an order of suspension would be imperative.

As your excellency complained at about the same time—groundlessly, it seems to me—that the voluminous testimony taken by the Zone authorities for the purpose of throwing light on these bloody events had been disregarded, the judicial authorities ordered that the investigation be broadened as recommended by the prosecutor along the lines suggested by your excellency. On December 6, your excellency informs this office that Capt. Oliver Edwards is appointed to represent the military authorities of the Zone and to attend at the broadened investigation which has been ordered, but without authority to take part in the proceedings; that your Legation names no representative and that the American Government declines to take any responsibility for the results of the proceedings. Nevertheless, it is undeniable that from the very beginning the Legation orientates, causes and inspires all this judicial action.

On December 11, 1915, there was held in this office a conference between my predecessor Mr. Lefevre, the Superior Judge of the Republic, the prosecutor of the case and Capt. Oliver Edwards, at which it was agreed that more than fifty American soldiers, whose testimony, in the opinion of the captain, might be of some value, should testify before the Panaman judicial authorities. The Superior Judge designated the Governor of the Province of Panama to take the testimony, he to act as an investigating official.

In March 1916 the fiscal issues a new opinion. In this he says that in the broadened investigation made no qualified witness had been found, nor any grave indications for accusing Nuñez, and that, the investigation having been exhausted, he asks that an order of suspension be issued.

During this same month your excellency complains to this Secretaryship (F. O. No. 285) that Lieut. Goetz has not been allowed to try a second time to identify from a number of others the presumed author of the death of Langdon and that only four soldiers were called to identify Nuñez. On account of this the Executive Power intervenes again with the prosecutor of the Superior Court and gets the judicial authorities not only to permit Lieut. Goetz to repeat his trial as often as he may choose, but also to extend this permission to as many soldiers as may wish to do so. Lieut. Goetz did not avail himself of the opportunity offered him, though it is not known why, but thirty-eight soldiers came to recognize the presumed assassin of Langdon, with the following result: thirty-three soldiers refused to even try to recognize him; the other five proceeded as follows: L. Burgess indicated Ernesto Bergatino; Harry Stacey indicated Isidoro Blanco; Earl Chaplon and Edward C. Foster indicated Agustín Arias P.; and only one, James Robinson indicated Carlos Nuñez, but stated that he was not sure that the person indicated by him was the same that Lieut. Goetz arrested in the belief that he had killed Corporal Langdon.

At the end of May the prosecutor reports that the broadened investigation has been unfruitful as regards the discovery of those guilty of the criminal acts and suggests that further steps be taken, which was done.

On October 1 following, the undersigned took charge of the Secretaryship for Foreign Affairs, and shortly afterwards received notice of the irregular position in which the ex-policeman Carlos Nuñez was held. This position was not long in taking shape. The Superior Judge, by an order of the 31st of the same month, called C. Nuñez to judgment and formally sent him to prison a year and a half after he had been illegally incarcerated, and on February 16 last the jury announced a verdict of acquittal.

The proceedings have lasted nearly two years, it is true, but not because there has been any desire on the part of our authorities to disturb the administration of justice by any dilatory proceedings, but rather in order to satisfy the repeated desires of your excellency, freely offering you opportunities to introduce new evidence. Each time that the judge or the prosecutor declared that the matter was ripe for decision, the investigation was broadened and everything possible was done to ascertain the truth and to be able to reach the conclusion which your excellency desired. For this reason no decision was rendered in October of 1915, nor in March of 1916, since each time your excellency intervened actively, rebelling against the probability of a suspension and suggesting new steps and confrontations to establish the proofs of guilt which from the very first moment it was impossible to obtain.

It is not possible for me to agree with your excellency that "whenever by chance any steps for identification were taken, they were taken in a superficial and uninterested way, as if without any purpose of throwing light on the facts." Lieut. Goetz, called to identify C. Nuñez in a crowd of prisoners, indicated Luis Vázquez; then, aware of his error, wished to repeat the trial, contrary to the legal provisions concerning the matter, and—naturally—the investigating official did not permit it. Your excellency complained of this prohibition to this Secretaryship by note No. F. O. 285, and I have already said that, out of personal deference to your excellency, the judicial authority then permitted not only that Lieut. Goetz repeat the attempt as often as he might choose, but that this be done also by the 58 soldiers whose testimony your excellency considered conclusive to establish with certainty who were responsible for the bloody happenings in Colon.

If all these circumstances are remembered, your excellency will yourself acknowledge the injustice of your remark that "if the action in the investigation and identification had been conducted energetically from the beginning, the apprehension and conviction of those responsible for the death of Corporal Langdon and the wounding of the three American soldiers would have been easily obtainable." The Panaman Judicial Power used all the elements of investigation at its own disposal, of those placed at its disposal by the Executive Power and of those copiously offered to it by the military authorities of the Canal Zone, whose administrative investigation in the Washington Hotel was in its essentials accepted, ratified and complemented by the Governor of the Province of Panama, acting as an investigating official, and incorporated in the dossier; and if the result of all this has been the acquittal of the only man brought to trial, it is not the fault of the Executive nor of the Judicial Power, any more than it is that of the American Legation in this capital, or of the military authorities of the Zone, whose patriotic zeal merits my greatest respect; all depends on the difficulty of establishing individual responsibilities in cases of rioting, crowds or tumults, and on the fact that the judicial officials and the Panaman citizens who composed the jury could not conscientiously condemn without proof, on merely the vague indications of no juridical value. It is a legal axiom familiar to your excellency that all doubt is in favor of the accused, and the honorable citizens chosen by lot to try Carlos Nuñez were not insensible to their moral duty to absolve the accused rather than condemn an innocent man.

After the favors showered by my Government on your excellency as to everything referring to the judicial investigation of the case in question, which I have related above, the satisfaction is very paltry which can be procured from the following declaration of your excellency:

"I am instructed to say that my Government does not believe that the competent authorities of the Panaman Government have deliberately hindered the administration of justice in this case."

This office, in its amazement, can do no more than take note of the injustice of the procedure of your excellency's Government in refusing to recognize the good offices which, with so great good-will, this Government lent it towards giving it complete satisfaction of its desires for justice as expressed through the medium of your Legation.

The "lack of sincerity and of activity" which your excellency twists against this Government as to the judicial performance which we are discussing, is likewise indefensible in the light of the facts, for your excellency must remember that if Americans were wounded in the affray in Colon, Panamans also were, and in greater number; and, nevertheless, the investigations of justice have been impotent to reveal a single one of the authors of those acts of violence. If such were the case, it would result that the Panaman Government had been deliberately indolent to the prejudice of its own citizens, and this hypothesis alone is enough to render any refutation superfluous. If it were an undoubted fact that the police of Colon committed without provocation all kinds of misbehavior and attacks against American citizens on April 2, 1915, and if the Judicial Power of the Republic had shown partiality or predisposition in investigating the case referred to, this Government would have anticipated other action by offering spontaneously to your excellency the reparation due; but neither is it proved that the Panaman police were the authors of the wounds of the American soldiers, nor were they the promoters of the disturbance; on the contrary, it is clear that they were the attacked and the outraged and that when they fired they fired in the air, in their own defense and out of respect for the public authority they represented. As to the action of the judiciary branch, nothing more could be wished for in the way of impartiality and purpose to throw light on the matter; and if it can be stigmatized for anything it is for not having followed from the beginning its own information and inspirations but yielded to the lesser suggestions of your excellency, to the manifest detriment of its internal jurisdiction, but with the patriotic purpose of saving the country the onerous consequences of a diplomatic claim.

If the Panaman judiciary had acted with complete independence, free from all pressure from your Legation and from the military authorities of the Canal Zone; and if there had been noted in the verdict of the jury or in the proceedings which led up to it sufficient grounds to doubting its validity or correctness, your excellency's claim would be perfectly explained. But, as diplomatic action was forestalled by making itself felt from the beginning in the judicial action in the form described above, the Government of the Republic considers inexplicable the disagreement which your excellency shows to-day with the results of a procedure whose course was so many times delayed, altered and modified for the sole purpose of satisfying as far as humanly possible the desires of your Legation; and as regards Sergeants Day and Richeson, for whom your excellency in the name of your Government claims indemnization of a thousand dollars each, the high spirit of justice and equity which is traditional in the Government of your excellency would require that, in claiming indemnization of considerable size from our public treasury for its maimed soldiers, it should likewise manifest its readiness to indemnify in the same way and in like proportion the Panamans who were victims of the American soldiers on that day.

The undersigned does not doubt that a careful and serene analysis of the facts will bring to the mind of your excellency the conviction that in the present case there has been no refusal of justice on the part of the Panaman authorities, that the verdict of the jury was preferred with all regularity and within the rules of law, that there have been incurred no exaggerated delays for which no plausible explanation can be given and that likewise no case has arisen of odious distinction to the prejudice of the American citizens interested in the case. Under these circumstances, and taking into account the repeated acts of friendship and of good-will performed by the Panaman Government towards that of the United States of America in this deplorable matter, it is hoped that your excellency will reconsider the bases of your claim and recognize the correctness with which justice has proceeded in this country in everything regarding the search for the persons responsible for the events of April 2, 1915, giving thus a beautiful example of respect for the rights of a small and weak nation on the part of the largest and the most powerful one of our continent.

LEGATION OF PANAMA,
Washington, July 28, 1916.

EXCELLENCY: Referring to several conferences had by me with Mr. J. Butler Wright, Chief of the Latin-American Division of the Department of State, at which we discussed the Chiriqui Railway built by the Government of Panama and the necessity of and advantage in extending that line to the point where a colony of American citizens under the direction of Mr. E. W. Staton started a settlement, I have the honor to inform your excellency that my Government, considering the interest shown by your excellency's Government through

Mr. Wright in the extension of the railway and convinced of the unquestionable utility of such an extension, has decided to undertake the work, provided it may in this count upon the effective cooperation of the Government of the United States.

The Chiriqui Railway undertaking, now carried to a successful end, could only be achieved with the moral and financial support extended to the Republic of Panama by your excellency's Government, and my Government hopes that in this matter of extending the line and bearing in mind the results already achieved, that support will be even more decided and efficacious than in the case of the building of the main road.

According to the arrangements made for the construction of the railway which are on file in the Department of State, the Republic of Panama contracted a loan of three million dollars redeemable in thirty years bearing five per cent interest per annum and secured, with the assent of the Government of the United States by the $250,000 annuity belonging to the Republic under the Canal Treaty. The bonds were to be issued in instalments to pay for the work as it was progressing and there were accordingly three issues of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars each, aggregating $2,250,000. For the service of the interests and amortization of the loan, the Government of Panama assigned to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York a part of the Canal annuity amounting to $190,258.61 and your excellency's Government agreed to the assignment and punctually paid the said sum to the assignees.

As the constructing engineer of the railway estimates the extension of the road by 18 miles will cost between $400,000 and $450,000, my Government wishes to know whether your excellency's Government is disposed to agree to an assignment of so much of the annuity as may be needed to meet the interests and amortization of the new issue for the extension of the railway.

With sentiments of the highest consideration, I am [etc.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 22, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Legation's note of July 28, 1916, in which reference is made to verbal conversations which were held by Minister Morales with Mr. J. Butler Wright, then Acting Chief of the Latin-American Division of the Department of State, in reference to the construction of an extension of the Chiriqui Railroad for a distance of eighteen miles from the town of David in the direction of Charco Azul.

The Department has noted the statement that the cost of the construction of this line will be between $400,000 and $450,000 and that your Government desires to know the position of the Government of the United States as to the setting aside of a part of the annuity to be necessary to pay the interest and amortization of the new emission of bonds the proceeds of which would be used for the construction of the extension of the railroad.

After careful consideration of the question the Department is of the opinion that an extension, such as outlined, would be of great benefit to the Republic of Panama and is disposed to approve an issue by your Government of 5% bonds to the amount of $400,000, provided that adequate provision be made for the retirement of these bonds within thirty years of the date of their issue and provided that $200,000 of that amount shall be delivered at the present time at a price not less than 97% par value, and that the delivery of the remainder of the issue shall be made with the approval of the Government of the United States when the money is required. The Department will approve the hypothecation of a sufficient amount of the income of the six million dollars belonging to the Government of Panama, permanently invested in New York, in order to secure the payment of the interest and amortization of this bond issue upon the condition that your Government will assure this Government that the sum realized will be expended only upon the eighteen miles of Chiriqui Railroad extension.

LEGATION OF PANAMA,
Washington, December 26, 1916.

MR. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your excellency's note No. 7 dated the 22d instant, and in reply beg leave to express my satisfaction at finding therein the Department of State's opinion of the projected construction of an 18-mile extension of the Chiriqui Railway which will prove of great benefit to the Republic of Panama and at knowing that the Department of State is disposed to approve an issue of 5% bonds by my Government aggregating $400,000 provided that adequate provision be made for the redemption of those bonds within thirty years after the date of issue, that $200,000 of the issue be delivered at not less than 97% of the face value and that the remainder will be delivered, when needed, with the approval of the Government of the United States.

This very important matter will, on this very day, be communicated to the Government of my country for its further action; but, in the meanwhile I will take the liberty of calling to your excellency's attention two probable errors in which your excellency's Government seems to me to have fallen in this case. The first is the idea that the railway is to be extended eighteen miles in the direction of Charco Azul from the city of David. I must say to your excellency that the eighteen miles from the city of David in that direction have already been built, that being one of the branches built in Chiriqui with the three previous issues of the loan. The projected extension is to be eighteen miles more or less and in the direction of Charco Azul but not from David; it is from the city of Concepcion which is the terminal of the railway branch under consideration.

The other probable error is that which deals with the hypothecation required as a security for the issue. Your excellency speaks of the sum of the six millions belonging to the Republic of Panama and invested in mortgages in the city of New York by order of the Panaman Government. Your excellency will remember that my Government negotiated a three million dollar loan with the National City Bank and the Farmers' Trust Co. of New York City for the construction of railways in the Republic of Panama, giving as security the annuity of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars which your excellency's Government pays to my country under the Canal Treaty. Of that loan there have been but three issues of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and now it is proposed to make a fourth issue of four hundred thousand only, so that the surety for this last does not bear on the six millions above mentioned, but is the same surety pledged for the loan and the three issues already made which form part of it.

I trust that, if your excellency concurs in this view, you will be so good as to let me know in order that my Government be fully aware of the obligations it is about to assume.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of December 26, 1916, in which further reference is made to the proposed extension of 18 miles, more or less, of the Chiriqui Railroad, to be built from the city of Concepcion in the direction of Charco Azul, and in which is set forth the method by which it is proposed to finance such contemplated extension.

Your attention is directed to the Department's note of December 22, 1916, in which it was stated that the Government of the United States is disposed to approve an issue by your Government of 5% bonds to the amount of $400,000.00, provided that adequate provision be made for the retirement of these bonds within thirty years of the date of their issue and provided that $200,000.00 of such amount shall be delivered at the present time at a price not less than 97% par value, and that the delivery of the remainder of the issue shall be made with the approval of the Government of the United States when the money is required.

In order to secure the payment of interest on this proposed bond issue and to provide for the amortization of the same, the Department will approve the hypothecation of a sufficient amount of the $250,000.00 annuity which is to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Panama under Article XIV of the Convention of November 18, 1903, with Panama for the construction of a ship canal. This approval of the hypothecation of this fund is made upon the condition that your Government will assure this Government that the sum realized will be expended only upon the project of the eighteen miles of the Chiriqui Railroad extension.

II. RAILWAY CONCESSION TO BASIL BURNS DUNCAN

File No. 819.77/265

Minister Price to the Secretary of State

No. 1207

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, December 21, 1916.

SIR: I have the honor to report that Mr. Basil Burns Duncan of this city visited the Legation to-day and stated that it was his desire to present, as soon as possible, to the National Assembly, his application for a concession to construct a railroad along the Atlantic coast of Panama between the mouth of the Chagres River and Chiriqui Lagoon, and that he desired to advise me of his intention so that the Department of State might have due notice of it.

It will be remembered that this concession has been asked for by Mr. Duncan several times in the past and has been refused pursuant to objections lodged, as I understand, by our military authorities.

It seems that Mr. Duncan took this matter up direct with the Departments of State and War in the early part of this session of the National Assembly. He showed me a letter from the Department of State under date of October 17 last, stating that his letter of October 2, relative to a projected railroad in the Province of Chiriqui, had been referred to the War Department for appropriate comment. As I understand from Mr. Duncan his letter, to which the Department's communication was an answer, was with reference to the projected railroad mentioned above, and that his plans do not comprehend any railroad building in the Province of Chiriqui, and that this reference has likely resulted from the fact that one terminus of the road is intended to be near the Chiriqui Lagoon, which, though bearing the name Chiriqui, lies on the Atlantic side in the Province of Bocas del Toro.

He showed me letters, also, from the Washington office of the Panama Canal, under date of December 2, from the Acting Governor of the Panama Canal, under date of December 5, and from the Adjutant General of the War Department, under date of November 27, respectively, all to the same effect, and the text of the last one mentioned being as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 27, 1916.

Mr. B. B. DUNCAN, Box 383, Ancon, Canal Zone.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of September 30, 1916, relative to the construction of a projected railroad near the Atlantic coast in Panama, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that there is no objection from a military point of view to a concession for the construction of such a railroad from near the mouth of the Chagres River to the Chiriqui Lagoon, but that the construction of a branch line to Penonomé, or anywhere in that vicinity, is not favorably considered. The military authorities, and the authorities in charge of the Panama Canal have been informed accordingly.

Very respectfully,

(Signed)

WM. M. CRUIKSHANK,
Adjutant General

Inasmuch as the present session of the National Assembly is supposed now to adjourn the latter part of January (though the session may again be extended) Mr. Duncan is anxious for as prompt an expression as possible from the Department.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 26, 1917.

I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 18, 1917,² enclosing a copy of a despatch from the American Minister at Panama, referring to Mr. B. B. Duncan's desire to present to the National Assembly of Panama his application for a concession to construct a railroad along the Atlantic coast of Panama between the mouth of the Chagres River and the Chiriqui Lagoon. As shown by the letter to Mr. Duncan, quoted in the American Minister's despatch, this subject has heretofore been considered by the War Department, having been brought to its attention by the Governor of the Panama Canal. The concession which Mr. Duncan then desired included the construction of a main line of railroad from near the mouth of the Chagres River to the Chiriqui Lagoon and of a branch line to Penonomé. It is believed that such a branch line might prove detrimental to the defense of the Canal, and for that reason a concession for its construction was not favorably considered by the War Department. If the construction of this branch line, or any other branch line, in the same vicinity, is eliminated from the application for a concession, there is no objection, from a military point of view, to the concession being granted.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, March 9, 1917, 5 p. m.

Your March 8, 4 p. m. The National Assembly has given Duncan the railway concession, but the provision for specific branch line was not included, however the following provision appears which Duncan claims is for the purpose of affording the opportunity to construct short side lines to banana and other plantations:

The contractor is authorized to construct branch railroads at any time, and to any length, and in any direction that he may think convenient, and which he considers necessary for the development of the enterprise, being guided always by the stipulations of this contract; but in order that the contractor take advantage of the privileges granted in this article he shall be obliged, when he thinks the construction of a branch line necessary, first to solicit by writing the authorization of the executive power in order to begin the work of surveying and construction.

The concession, which is seventy-five years, cannot be transferred to any foreign Power, nor without approval of Panaman Government to anyone else. The National Assembly is due to adjourn on March 15.

of a railway on the Atlantic side of Panama extending from the mouth of the Chagres River in the direction of Chiriqui Lagoon. This became a law on last Monday.

The concession is, with the exception of a few changes, the same as was evidenced by what was known as Contract No. 70, of December 30, 1912, and which was an enclosure with despatch No. 281 of this Legation of the date of January 8, 1913.⁵

Article 2 of said concession, which was quoted in my cablegram of yesterday 5 p. m., relating to the construction of branch lines will be found included in said original contract.

The Department's instruction No. 346 of February 14 was not received by this Legation until the 28th day of February, which was after the law mentioned had passed the National Assembly in all three debates. I made inquiry again and was again assured that the law contained no authorization for the construction of the branch line mentioned, to which the Department was not favorable.

The Article 2, referred to above, would seem broad enough to authorize the building of a branch line to Penonomé or constructing them anywhere else. Mr. Duncan, with whom I have conferred again since the receipt of the Department's cable of March 8, 4 p. m., declares to me that said article was inserted in the original contract and retained for the purpose of authorizing the construction of short side lines to banana plantations or lumber camps and that he expressly left out any authorization for a specific branch to Penonomé or its vicinity. I reminded him of his assurances to me that the bill contained no provision authorizing a branch line to Penonomé or its vicinity and I expressed the opinion that this article left in the bill was quite broad enough to cover such a construction. He declared that such was not the intention and that he was willing to enter into any satisfactory arrangement with our Government by writing or otherwise which would prevent the concession being construed as authorizing the branch line referred to and as would limit the branch lines authorized to short side lines for the purposes set out above.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 27, 1917.

1. I am in receipt of a letter from your Department inclosing a paraphrase of a telegram from the American Minister to Panama, reporting the passage by the National Assembly of Panama, of a concession to Mr. B. B. Duncan, for railroad construction in that Republic, and quoting a provision relating to the construction of branch lines.

2. As stated in my letter to you, dated January 26, 1917, the War Department believes that the construction of branch lines in certain localities might prove detrimental to the defense of the Canal. The provision quoted in the telegram of March 9, 1917, from the American Minister, grants to the contractor a much more liberal and comprehensive authority for the construction of branch lines than has heretofore come to the notice of this Department.

Under it, the contractor may build such lines at any time, to any length, and in any direction, subject only to the restriction that each line must first be authorized by the Executive Power. This concession would permit, unless forbidden by the Executive Power, branch lines which might afford approach from the coast toward the Canal Zone, or even a line across the Isthmus in direct violation of our treaty with Panama.

3. It is manifest that to safeguard the interests of the United States, some agreement should be made with the President of Panama, to the effect that no authorization for the construction of a branch line should be given until the United States Government has been consulted and assented thereto. There will doubtless be many branch lines desired which from their location would not affect the defense of the Canal, and action under such an agreement would be facilitated if certain officers stationed in Panama were designated with plenary power to act for our Government. I believe the interests of the United States would be safeguarded if the American Minister to Panama, the Governor of the Panama Canal, and the Commanding General, United States troops, Canal Zone, were so designated. I suggest, therefore, that the American Minister to Panama be instructed to endeavor to make an agreement with the President of Panama under which no authorization for a branch line under the Duncan concession shall be granted until the United States Government, through its Minister, has assented thereto; that if such agreement is made, the Minister be further instructed, when any such concession is submitted to him, to consult with the other two officers above named; that when their opinion is unanimous, the President of Panama be informed of the views of this Government in accordance with their decision, and if there is any disagreement the question be referred to the State and War Departments for final action.

Should you succeed in making such agreement, you are further instructed that when any concession is submitted to you you should consult with the Governor of the Panama Canal and the Commanding General of the United States forces in the Canal Zone. Should your opinion be unanimous, you may advise the President of Panama in accordance with your decision. Should there be any disagreement, the question should be referred to this Department and the War Department for final action.

SIR: Supplementing my despatch No. 1290, of March 10, relative to the concession awarded Mr. Basil B. Duncan, by the National Assembly of Panama, for the construction of a railway on the Atlantic side of Panama, I have the honor to enclose copy of a letter from Mr. Duncan, declaring that there was eliminated from the concession the authorization for a branch line to Penonomé; that the branch lines permitted to be constructed under Article No. 2 of the concession are understood to be incidental short lines for the purpose of reaching banana, sugar and other plantations, and will be extended only to such distances as are necessary to reach such plantation grounds, and giving the assurance that it will be his aim and pleasure to work in harmony with the Government of the United States and its representatives on the Isthmus, and that such will be the spirit of the company which he hopes to form to build the railway referred to.

PANAMA, April 11, 1917.

SIR: Referring to our conversation at the American Legation relative to my railroad concession from the Panama Government, I beg to confirm my statement to you regarding any possible branch roads referred to in said contract.

I here repeat that the suggestion of a branch line to Penonomé as originally anticipated, was at once eliminated on receipt of information from the War Department to the effect that such branch road would not be favorably considered by said Department.

The branch lines admitted as per Article 2 of contract, refer to working branches, with the view of developing banana, sugar or other planting industries and would only be extended to a distance necessary to reach such plantation grounds.

As you will note in the copy of contract (Art. 2) which I furnished you, no branch road can be constructed by the concessioner without the consent and approval of the Chief Executive (President) of the Republic, who undoubtedly would not give his approval to any additional extension of road contrary to the wishes of the American Government, which you represent.

Furthermore, I desire to assure you that it would be my aim and pleasure to work in harmony with my country's Government (The United States) and its representatives on the Isthmus, and such will be the spirit of the company which I shall form to build the railroad under consideration.

The Secretary of War to the Secretary of State

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 30, 1917.

1. I am in receipt of a letter from the Counselor of your Department dated April 4, 1917,² inclosing a despatch from the American Minister at Panama, with which he forwards a copy of a translation of a concession awarded by the Republic of Panama to Mr. Basil Burns Duncan for the construction of a railroad on the Atlantic side of Panama, extending from the mouth of the Chagres River in the direction of Chiriqui Lagoon.

2. The concession includes the privilege of constructing branch lines of any length and in any direction; also the privilege of establishing ports, wharves and landing places.

3. As stated in my letter to you dated January 26, 1917, the War Department believes that the construction of branch lines in certain localities might prove detrimental to the defenses of the Canal.

4. The copy of the concession granted to Mr. Duncan, forwarded with the American Minister's despatch, grants to the contractor a much more liberal and comprehensive authority for the construction of branch lines, ports, wharves and landing places, than has heretofore come to the notice of this Department.

Under it, the contractor may build such lines at any time, of any length, and in any direction, subject only to the restriction that each line must first be authorized by the Executive Power of the Republic of Panama.

He may establish ports, wharves and landing places in connection with the railroads and branch lines of which the contract treats, subject to the restriction that authority to establish same shall be granted by the Panama Government to the contractor by means of a special contract, in accordance with the stipulations of Law 82 of 1904.

5. In my letter to you on this subject dated March 27, 1917, I suggested that an agreement be made, if practicable, with the President of Panama, whereby the American Minister to Panama, the Governor of the Canal Zone, and the Commanding General, U. S. troops, Canal Zone, acting together in the interest of the Government of the United States on these matters, should be permitted to pass on all projects for the construction of branch lines, before the President of the Republic should grant authority, under the terms of the concession for such branch lines.

6. At the time of writing the above-mentioned letter, the full text of the concession was not at hand.

It is therefore now suggested that the agreement heretofore proposed be made to include not only questions concerning the construction of branch lines, but also questions concerning the establishment of ports, wharves and landing places, and such other questions as may arise, from time to time, in the development of the project under the terms of the concession, the character of which, in the opinion of the officers named to represent the United States, assume aspects prejudicial to the interests of the United States.

²Not printed.

7. The War Department believes that the agreement proposed is essential to the proper protection of this Government's interests and to the future amicable relations between our Government and the Republic of Panama.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
Panama, June 2, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: Adverting to our conversation upon the same subject, I have the honor to refer again to the matter of the authorization contained in the concession granted to Mr. Basil Burns Duncan by the last National Assembly for the construction of a railway along the Atlantic side of the Isthmus and in the section of Panama lying between the Panama Canal and Costa Rica.

It will be remembered that considerable negotiation and correspondence have taken place in the past between our respective Governments relative to this concession, and that one quite similar was withdrawn on two occasions from the National Assembly in past years, as the result of the same being then considered by my Government inimical to the proper defense of the Canal and contrary to our treaty rights.

In a correspondence between Mr. Duncan and my Government last year objection was waived to the granting of the concession conditional upon there being eliminated the authorization to construct branch lines in a manner, which might be objectionable from the standpoints mentioned above. It would seem that Mr. Duncan refrained from asking to have incorporated in the concession the right specifically to construct a branch to Penonomé, but there was included in the concession, as will be seen from Article 2 thereof, an authorization for the building of branch lines of such a general character that the construction of same "at any time and of any length and in any direction" is permitted, a solicitation of the authorization of the Executive Power of Panama in writing being first made.

My Government feels that the provisions of Article 2 under the recognition of its interest and rights in this matter, already heretofore accorded by your excellency's Government, entitles it to request that there may be formally noted, as was done for instance in the note from the Foreign Office of Panama No. S 5556 of January 30, 1915, relative to the use of certain funds authorized by the National Assembly of 1914-1915, that the use of the authorization embodied in said Duncan concession for the construction of branch railway lines will not be permitted by His Excellency, the President of Panama, without the consent of my Government through this Legation being first obtained. There, of course, can be no objection to such short branch lines as may be known as working branches for reaching banana, sugar and other plantations in the general neighborhood of the railway.

I enclose a copy of a letter from Mr. Duncan expressing his willingness and his good intentions with reference to this matter.

I am instructed to say, therefore, that it will be most pleasing to my Government if His Excellency, the President of Panama, may find it agreeable to have your excellency make reply that the use of the prerogative accorded him by Article 2 of said concession will be exercised only in accordance with a joint concurring action on the part of my Government.

MR. MINISTER: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your kind note F. O. No. 427, of the 2d instant, in which your excellency again refers to the concession granted by the last National Assembly to Mr. Basil Burns Duncan, authorizing him to construct a railroad along the Atlantic coast of the Isthmus, crossing the section of Panama situated between the Panama Canal and Costa Rica.

Your excellency declares that in the correspondence which took place last year between Mr. Duncan and the Government of the United States, the latter agreed not to oppose the making of this contract, to which it had objected on two previous occasions, on condition that there be eliminated therefrom the authorization to construct branches which might be undesirable from a certain point of view; and your excellency calls attention to the fact that, although nothing was discussed as to the building of a branch to Penonomé, the right to carry this out appears in Article 2 of the concession granted to Mr. Duncan, mentioning later that you do not wish by this remark to indicate that the Legation does not agree to the general sense of the concession which permits the construction of branches at whatever time, and in whatever direction for whatever length, provided that a written request be made to the Executive Power of Panama.

Your excellency ends by stating that your Government understands that the provisions of Article 2, bearing in mind the recognition made by this Government on previous occasions of the interest of the United States of America in this matter, give it the right to ask for a formal declaration that the use of the authorization incorporated in said concession for the construction of branches will not be permitted by His Excellency the President of Panama, without his having come to an agreement with the Government of the United States.

In reply, I have the honor to inform your excellency formally, complying with instructions of the Most Excellent President of the Republic, that the Executive Power will not make use of the prerogative which appears in Article 2 of the concession under discussion, without having first come to an agreement with the Government of your excellency.

I have consulted with the officials of the Panama Canal with reference to the desirability of taking advantage of the offer of Panama for cooperation in the construction of wagon roads and railroads and am advised that while the construction of highways and railroads in the Republic of Panama would obviously be of much assistance in the development of that country under proper circumstances, it does not appear essential that the United States should make any considerable expenditure for those purposes at the present time except such as might be found desirable from a military point of view. The formulation of a scheme for the land defense of the Isthmus is now under consideration and I have no doubt that such roads and railroads as may be considered by the military authorities as essential to the land defense of the Canal will be recommended and estimated for in their final report.

I am of the opinion that it would neither be proper nor desirable that the Republic of Panama should cooperate with the United States in the construction of such roads as may be found desirable for military purposes. Such roads in my opinion should be constructed and paid for wholly by the United States. Any lines of communication that are not essential for the defense of the Canal but which are advisable for the developments of the Republic of Panama should, in my judgment, be constructed and maintained wholly at the expense of Panama.

The Panaman Commission to the Department of State

[Memorandum—Translation]

LEGATION OF PANAMA,
Washington, not dated [April 27, 1917?].

The present European war and its spreading to the American continent by involving the United States has brought into evidence the pressing necessity for Panama to develop her agricultural production in order not only to free her from dependence on some other distant country for the food of her people but also to turn her into a safe reservoir of provisions of all kinds for the armies that defend the Canal.

Panama is a tropical country where land may be found fit for the most varied cultivation, as plants of the temperate zones may be acclimated at various altitudes. Its soil also permits of cattle raising on a large scale. (As to these points, see Appendix A.²)

Notwithstanding these favorable conditions of climate and geographical situation, Panama produces but very little and her population is not growing at the rate that was to be expected from the proximity of the Canal, because of the lack of ways of communication.

Some American authorities who do not know the country and whose opinions are based on what they see on the map insist that the sea must be Panama's best and cheapest way of communication. That opinion is in a large measure erroneous. Along the whole of the Pacific Coast the country has but three or four small sea ports of little consequence. All the other ports so called are but channels of sounds or rivers which no vessel can enter except at high tide which on the Panaman coast is eighteen feet higher than the low tide.

On account of this lack of harbors and the hampering effect of the tides, navigation in Panama cannot be as easy and cheap as in other countries. If, for instance, a steamer had to call at the ports of Pedregal, Horconceitos and Remedios, but a few miles distant from one another in the province of Chiriquí, it would have to leave the first port at high tide on any day, cast anchor in the open sea, and proceed on her way so as to arrive at Horconceitos with the first high tide of the next day; if she has to land or take cargo there she will be compelled to wait for the next high tide in order to leave and again lie at anchor in the open off the entrance to the port of Remedios until the next high tide brings her the opportunity to arrive at destination. To leave that port she has again to wait for the high tide. Thus the distance between those ports which on land could be traveled in a few hours by rail means a long delayed trip by sea, and the delay adds to the cost, dangers and uncertainties of the traffic.

The result of this peculiar condition of the Panaman coast is that certain regions of the country are entirely cut off from one another. A resident of Chepo, a town lying near the Bayano River, never has the facility or opportunity to visit the town of Puebla, near the Costa Rican border, and on account of this absence of contact the useful beneficent interchange of commodities between those regions is never created.

Now what the country needs is not the intermittent and uncertain contact afforded by vessels occasionally calling at certain ports; what it needs is the daily contact with the great center of consumption and exportation furnished by the cities of Panama and Colon and such a daily contact can only be brought into being by a railroad laid in the Isthmus along the Pacific slope. Of course there must also be built cart roads converging on the railway line which they are to feed, and also another highway lengthwise so as to reach the final result of establishing a dual system of transportation by rail and automobiles connecting all the sections of the country.

In considering these remarks the Government of the United States might inquire: Of what interest is it to the United States whether or no Panama has railways and cart roads? Why does not the Republic of Panama try and solve for itself those questions in which it is directly concerned?

Panama's answer is easy and in our judgment conclusive.

The United States of America has assumed the solemn obligation to maintain and guarantee the sovereignty and independence of the Republic of Panama upon which lies the corresponding duty to provide for its own defense so as to lighten the fulfilment of the duty to protect assumed by the United States, and to cooperate with all its resources in the defense of the Panama Canal so as to maintain intact that great highway of commerce in the service of the world.

But how can the two countries perform their reciprocal obligations of protection, common defense and cooperation if Panama lacks ways of communication over which troops and implements of war may be safely and speedily carried to any threatened point? How could the country and the canal be defended and protected if the country has not at its disposal public highways on land which would foster its industrial and agricultural output with the result that a large store of foodstuffs of all kinds would be at hand within the country.

The United States may contend that it is easy and practicable for it to send victuals over to Panama but it must not dismiss the contingency of a war with one maritime Power or more which would at least involve the provisioning of the Canal Zone in doubt and danger, nor from a human standpoint can it leave out of consideration the fate that may befall the Panamans left isolated in the interior and exposed to starve to death or to being overpowered and annihilated by an invader whose sole aim would be possession of the Canal.

The most elemental notions of the theory of defense for the Panaman territory and the Panama Canal coincide in establishing for the two countries an absolute and complete unity of interest and purpose. The United States can have no other interest in respect to Panama than that of seeing our country turned into a producing center of food products and into a prosperous and strong nation which its population and own resources would make an appreciable element in the defense of the Canal. To the Republic of Panama it is of vital interest that the nation which protects its sovereignty and independence should possess effective means of reaching any point of the national territory that may be threatened, and its ambition cannot be gratified as long as the country lacks railways and cart roads.

Inspired by these ideas and actuated by what it deems to be the harmonious interest of both countries the National Assembly of Panama enacted Law 44 of 1916 (Appendix B) which authorizes the Executive Power to conclude with the Government of the United States an agreement under which the railways and cart roads that the two countries need for economic, industrial and strategic purposes may be built.

Having made this brief statement, the Panaman Commission separately submits to the Government of the United States the propositions which in its judgment meet the situation in which the two countries are placed. If these propositions are accepted they will tend to producing between Panama and the United States a sentiment of fraternity stronger and firmer than that which now happily prevails.

APPENDIX B

Art. I. The Republic of Panama and the United States of America declare it to be in the common interest of both countries to build railways and certain cart roads in the Panaman territory and therefore agree to contribute in equal shares to the cost of building the said works, under the terms of this convention.

Art. II. Immediately upon ratification and the exchange of ratifications of this Convention, the Government of the United States will appoint from its service a commission of military engineers who shall decide upon the best route for a railroad running lengthwise over all the Panaman territory on the Pacific slope from the Costa Rican frontier to the Colombian frontier.

The same commission will also survey for cart roads connecting the capital of Panama with the other provinces of the country that may have strategical importance for the defense of the Canal.

The Government of Panama will deliver to the said military commission all the surveys, plans and estimates of the Panama-David Railroad made in 1910 by the Panama Railway Company.

Art. III. The commission of engineers referred to in the foregoing article will, when the best route for the longitudinal railroad shall have been determined and adopted and the cart roads to be built shall have been surveyed, report its conclusions to the Government of Panama with which it will perfect the arrangements requisite for the earliest possible start.

Art. IV. The Government of Panama will place at the service of the commission, with suitable guard and safeties, all the prisoners and convicts that may be put on public works, Panama assuming exclusive charge of the feeding, outfitting, quartering and transportation of the said prisoners and convicts and their guards.

Art. V. The commission of military engineers shall give employment on such construction work as may be undertaken to the Panaman engineers recommended by the Panaman Government so that they may gain experience in that class of work.

Art. VI. In order to enable the Republic of Panama to meet the payment of its share in the work contemplated by this Convention, the High Contracting Parties agree that the United States of America will advance to the Republic of Panama forty of the $250,000 annuities which Panama is receiving under Article [XIV] of the Treaty of November 18, 1903, for the construction of the Canal. The said sum shall be considered as deposited in the Treasury of the United States of America from the date of the ratification of the Convention and, under the deduction hereinbelow stated, shall be payable to the order of the commission of military engineers in charge of the construction works, in the manner which will be agreed upon by the two Governments through an exchange of notes as to the method of payment.

As the Republic of Panama has pledged the said annuity of $250,000 to secure a loan of $3,000,000 out of which bonds for $2,250,000 only have been issued, the High Contracting Parties agree that out of the aggregate of the annuities advanced as provided by this Article there shall be held in reserve in the Treasury of the United States the amount required for the amortization of and interest on the loan in the manner agreed on in the contract signed by the Republic of Panama and the Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., under date of November [2], 1914.

Art. VII. The United States of America undertakes to contribute to the building of the longitudinal railroad of Panama and cart roads recommended by the commission of military engineers in the amount of one-half of the cost of the said work, for which purpose it will appropriate a sum equal to that which may be left available of the advance to Panama of the annuities referred to in the foregoing Article. If upon completion of the work there should remain a surplus out of the half contributed by the Republic of Panama still in deposit in the Treasury of the United States, the said surplus shall be delivered to Panama.

Art. VIII. The railway when built shall be the property of the Republic of Panama but will be managed by the High Contracting Parties through a board composed of four members, the Presidents of the two countries each appointing two. The board shall appoint a manager who may or may not be one of its members.

In the event of an international war in which the United States of America or the Republic of Panama is a belligerent, the United States of America will be at liberty to take military possession of the railroad in order to facilitate the defense and protection of the Panaman territory and Canal of Panama. As soon as peace is restored, the railroad will revert to civilian management.

In the event of military occupation, the United States will be responsible for any damages done to the road by reason of such occupation and will cause all needed repairs to be made at its expense and without any delay.

Art. IX. The cart roads built out of the common fund which the two Governments may agree to create in accordance with Articles * * * shall be the exclusive property of the Republic of Panama, but the United States shall have free use thereof at all times.

The Panaman Commission to the Department of State

[Additional Memorandum—Translation]

LEGATION OF PANAMA,
Washington, May 5, 1917.

In addition to the arguments advanced in the memorandum of April 27 last of the Panaman Mission to the Department of State to demonstrate the necessity and propriety of building railways and cart roads in Panama, the Panaman Mission wishes to draw the attention of the Government of the United States to the special advantage of building the railway from the city of Panama to the border of Costa Rica as one of the links of the great Pan American Railway and as the sole way of communication by land between the United States and the Panama Canal.

At the last Pan American Financial Conference held at Buenos Aires in April 1916 and attended by the Honorable William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, the matter of the construction of the Pan American Railway was made the subject of a special recommendation to the American Governments and the Panaman Mission believes that this offers the opportunity to act upon that recommendation in so far as it concerns the Panama section.

Panama has completed the surveys of the road, and all that is needed to start work is that some arrangement be arrived at by the two countries in regard to providing the funds required for its execution.

By way of presenting a more concrete statement of its Government's wishes, the Panaman Mission supplements its previous memorandum as follows:

The Mission holds that the roads from Panama to the Chepo District, as far as the bank of the Bayano River, from Panama to Agua Dulce and from Panama to Puertobelo are strategic roads necessary to the defense of the Canal.

The Mission likewise holds the Panama-David Railway to be also indispensable for the defense of the Canal and Panaman territory.

Those roads while being strategic further tend to stimulate and increase on a large scale the production of food products in the Panaman territory and thus to expand the public wealth and economic power of Panama.

The Panaman Mission has proposed to divide equally between Panama and the United States the cost of building those roads and that arrangement it considers to be the most equitable.

In order to contribute toward carrying out the plan, Panama needs to receive from the United States an advance of forty annuities of the Canal Treaty, viz., a sum of ten million dollars from which there shall be deducted the unredeemed part of the loan of 1914, secured by the said annuities under the contract made with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York.

This advance may be made by the Government of the United States under the Act which empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to make loans to countries at war with the German Empire.

The Secretary of War to the Secretary of State

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 11, 1917.

Receipt is acknowledged of letter of April 21, 1917,² from the Counselor, State Department, informing this Department that the Government of the Republic of Panama had enacted a bill authorizing the President of Panama to construct railroads and wagon roads throughout the Republic, by means of a special understanding with the United States, and that a commission consisting of Mr. Eusebio Morales and Mr. Julio Arjona had sailed for the United States for the purpose of conferring with officials of this Government regarding road building in Panama pursuant to the law that has been enacted by their Government.

This matter, having received careful consideration, the War Department takes the view that such road building as our Government may decide upon in Panama, should be undertaken solely as the question affects the defenses of the Canal, and that this Government should bear the entire expense of such work.

The War Department's plans contemplate considerable road construction beyond the limits of the Canal Zone, and into the Republic of Panama as protective measures in the defense of the Canal. Undoubtedly these roads, when constructed, will lend themselves to the development of the industries of the Republic of Panama, and it is hoped that arrangements may be made, in the future, with the Panaman Government whereby the citizens of the Republic may enjoy the free use of the roads constructed under an agreement that will provide for the upkeep of such roads, in part, at the expense of the Panaman Government.

It is requested that the commissioners from Panama, who are, it is understood, now in Washington, be informed that the War Department desires to defer consideration of the cooperation they offer now, until such time, in the future, after road construction has commenced when the drawing of an agreement, such as is proposed above, may be a proper subject for consideration.

Lateral road from Capira to Protrero—2 miles.

Northeast Area: Radial road from the present Mount Hope-Fort Randolph road, near Majagual, to Porto Real—8 miles. Lateral and intercommunicating roads along and in rear of the Santa Reta position—6 miles.

Northwest Area: Radial road from Gatun Dam to Cano Saddle—8 miles. Roads paralleling the Lagarto and Indio positions—12 miles.

In accordance with the request from the War Department I am forwarding the papers in the matter to the Governor of the Panama Canal with request that he prepare estimates of the cost of the construction of these roads with a view to having such estimates presented for the action of Congress at an early date, and I will advise you when same is received.

EARL I. BROWN,
Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., Chief of Office.

P. S.—You will probably recall that Mr. Morales suggested that in addition to the above the United States extend the road from Panama to Pacora as far as Chepo on the Bayamo River. I am requesting the Governor to include this extension in his estimate of cost and if the expense is not too great, the extension will probably be granted. I would suggest that for the present you inform the Commission that this extension is under consideration and the decision will not be arrived at until estimates of cost have been prepared.

LEGATION OF PANAMA,
Washington, July 27, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: Upon receipt of your excellency's memorandum⁹ answering, after conscientious expert study of and mature reflection on the subject, the memoranda of April 27 and May 15 last of the Panama War Commission of which I had the honor to be president, I hastened to forward a copy of it to the Secretary of State of my country and I have just now received his instructions directing me to say to your excellency how highly my Government values the reception accorded to the Commission by your excellency and the final decision of the Government of the United States to build, without cost to Panama, the roads needed for the defense of the Canal, some of which, laid without the Zone, must prove positively beneficial to Panama.

The outcome of the discussion of the road question in the Commission being that the roads are to be built by engineers, foremen and laborers chosen by your excellency's Government, that is to say, under your Government's direction and paid out of funds of the Treasury of the United States, it is clear that the setting of the date on which the work is to begin lies in the discretion of your excellency's Government, and it is also clear that it is for its officials and agents in the Canal Zone or those it may send from this country to decide as to the direction, kind or quality, and other particulars of the mode of construction. Yet owing to the beneficial consequences to my country, my Government wishes to know, if possible, when the roads are to be begun, whether it shall be at an early date, and whether Panama may indulge the hope to see in the near future a realization of what has heretofore been but a dream on account of her scanty resources. The circumstance that those roads which my country needs, so much more now than ever, by reason of the World War, for the unbroken and speedy transportation of all the commodities for which there is such a demand in Panama and Colon and in the Canal Zone itself which are grown outside of the Zone and far from those cities in our territory, enhances our desire that the work on the roads be started at once, without any delay. Can your excellency tell me whether it is going to be done now or in the near future? If you can, you will give me great satisfaction and the news will fulfill the highest hopes not only of my Government but also of all in my country.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Petrograd, March 17, 1917.

Revolutionary movement actuated by bread riots and factory strikes broke out in Petrograd on the 12th after several preliminary disturbances during the previous weeks. Disorders accentuated by street fighting between mutinous regiments and loyal troops, the latter of which soon joined the popular movement as did all regiments sent to Petrograd. Demonstration then became general against former Imperial Government and particularly against the police, army officers and officials who declined to acknowledge the new authorities. Street fighting from Monday until Wednesday with comparatively light casualties but instances of atrocious murders of former officials. No Americans reported injured.

Strong committee of Duma under leadership president of that body immediately assumed control and arraigned before it all except two of former Imperial Ministry and many other officials. Official committee of twelve divided between the Duma members and social democrats now apparently forming Provisional Government and have appointed a new Cabinet of which Minister for Foreign Affairs is now exercising functions. City is now quiet and situation apparently under control, only menace being possible socialistic demonstrations by minority socialist group. The movement is understood to be general throughout the Empire and known to be practically unanimous in Moscow. The papers of to-day authoritatively publish abdication of Czar on behalf of himself and his son in favor of his brother, Grand Duke Michael, who is credibly reported to have stated that he will accept the power if the people so desire.

Milioukov is recognized by the Foreign Office staff. High member of staff tells me Emperor's brother replied would accept Imperial Office if Russia so desired and would exercise its functions under direction of representatives of the people. Workingmen's committee still inveighing against monarchy and demanding social republic. Orderly quiet prevails to-day, no dissensions reported throughout all Russia. [Inclosure—Translation]

The Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Russian Ambassador

The news sent forth by the telegraphic agency of Petrograd has already apprized you of the late events and fall of the former political régime in Russia which lamentably collapsed before the popular indignation aroused by its shiftlessness, abuses and criminal improvidence. The unanimity of resentment created among all the sound elements of the Nation by the order of things now removed perceptibly lightened and shortened the crisis. All these elements having with admirable enthusiasm rallied under the flag of the revolution and the army having given it speedy and effective support, the national movement has in not more than eight days gained a decisive victory. This quick achievement happily made it possible to reduce the number of victims to proportions unknown in the annals of so far reaching and momentous upheavals. By an act dated in Tskov March 2/15, 1917, Emperor Nicholas II renounced the throne for himself and the heir Grand Duke Alexis Nicolaevitch in favor of Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch. Upon being notified of that act, Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch by an Act dated in Petrograd March 3/16, 1917, in turn declined to exercise the Supreme Power until a Constituent Assembly created on the basis of universal suffrage shall have established the form of Government and the new fundamental law of Russia. By the same Act Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch bade the Russian citizens, pending the final manifestation of the will of the Nation, to bow to the authority of the Provisional Government constituted on the initiative of the Duma of the State and wielding full power. The composition of the Provisional Government and its political program have been published and forwarded to foreign lands. That Government which assumes power during the gravest foreign and domestic crisis experienced by Russia in her history is fully conscious of the immense responsibility that rests upon it. It will give its very first attention to remedying the grievous shortcomings it inherited from the past, to insuring order and tranquility in the country, to preparing in fine the requisite conditions for a free expression of the sovereign will of the Nation as to its future fate. In the field of foreign policies, the Cabinet in which I have taken the portfolio of Minister for Foreign Affairs will continue to respect the international undertakings made by the fallen régime and will redeem Russia's word. We shall carefully cultivate the relations which bind us to the other friendly and allied nations and we are confident that those relations will grow more intimate and stronger under the new régime established in Russia, which has determined to be guided by the democratic principles of respect due to people, whether small or great, the freedom of their development and the good understanding among nations.

File No. 861.00/284

Ambassador Francis to the Secretary of State

[Telegram]

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Petrograd, March 18, 1917, 8 p. m.

1107. The six days between last Sunday and this have witnessed the most amazing revolution. A Nation of two hundred million people who have lived under absolute monarchy for more than one thousand years and who are now engaged in the greatest war ever waged have forced their Emperor to abdicate for himself and his heir and have induced his brother to whom he transferred the Imperial Authority to accept it on condition that a constituent assembly of the people so request and when so accepted to exercise its functions under authority of the Government framed by that assembly. This is official information obtained by my personal unofficial calls to-day on Rodzianko at his residence and Milioukov, Minister for Foreign Affairs, at his office. No opposition to Provisional Government which is Council of Ministers appointed by committee of twelve named by the Duma. Absolute quiet prevails here and throughout Russia so far as known. Rodzianko and Milioukov both assure me that the entire army accepts the authority of Provisional Government and all appearances and advices confirm same. Plan of provisional Government is to call a constituent assembly or convention whose members will be elected by the whole people and empowered to organize a good government. Whether that will be republic or constitutional monarchy is not decided but the conclusions of the assembly will be accepted universally and enforced by the army and navy. No concerted action in diplomatic conference; no meeting held or called. It has been customary for British, French and Italian Ambassadors to call daily together at the Foreign Office and they called upon Milioukov Friday, yesterday and to-day but have not formally recognized the Provisional Government. Milioukov tells me confidentially that Buchanan has authority from his Government for recognition but is waiting till Italian and French Ambassadors are likewise authorized. I request respectfully that you promptly give me authority to recognize Provisional Government as first recognition is desirable from every viewpoint. This revolution is the practical realization of that principle of government which we have championed and advocated, I mean government by consent of the governed. Our recognition will have a stupendous moral effect especially if given first. Rodzianko and Milioukov both assure me that provisional Government will vigorously prosecute the war; furthermore upon Russia's success against the Central Empires absolutely depends the salvation of the revolution and the perpetuity of the government it establishes. The third of the eight principles in the manifesto issued announcing the new Ministry and signed by the President of the Duma and all of the ministers is, "abolition all class, religious and national limitations".

Consul Winship to the Secretary of State

[Extract]

No. 274

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Petrograd, March 20, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report that as a result of serious economic political and military disturbances, the government of this city and district has been completely assumed by an Executive Committee of the Imperial Duma, at least for the time being.

On the beginning of the week of March 4, a shortage of black bread was noticeable. This at once caused unrest among the laboring classes. All other prime necessities within the means of the working classes had already gradually disappeared as the winter advanced: meat, sugar, white flour, buckwheat, potatoes. Fish, fowls, eggs, milk, cheese and butter had for a long time been so expensive that they were only within the means of the very well-to-do classes. The unrest first took visible form in the outskirts and factory districts of the city Wednesday, March 7, when the workmen struck after the dinner hour and met in groups to discuss the situation.

The next day, Thursday, March 8, there were spontaneous and isolated demonstrations. In many places, a few of the working class, mostly women, tired of waiting in bread lines in the severe cold began to cry "Give us bread". These groups were immediately dispersed by large detachments of mounted police and cossacks.

March 9, large crowds of women marched to the Kazan Cathedral (opposite the Consulate) with bared heads, still crying for bread and shouting to the police "Give us bread and we will go to work". This crowd was peaceable and was dispersed.

Saturday morning the crowds, composed of working men and students, visibly with a serious purpose, came from all districts to the center of the city. Besides calling for bread, these crowds shouted "Down with the Government", "Down with the Romanoffs", and occasionally "Down with the War". The mounted police endeavored to drive the mobs from the Nevsky, the main street, but resistance was made and barricades built on the side streets. The police withdrew after firing on and charging the crowds with whips without success. Their place was taken by infantry who fraternized with the people. Announcement was made by the police that after 6 o'clock that day, all groups of persons would be fired upon. The crowds did not disperse, and street battles took place, especially on the Nevsky, resulting in great loss of life.

At this time the infantry and cossacks refused to fire on the crowds or to charge them. Towards evening a detachment of cossacks actually charged and dispersed a body of mounted police.

Sunday, when it became known that the Emperor had prorogued the Duma and that it had refused to recognize this order, there was disorganized and sporadic fighting all over the city, with heavy loss of life. The unmounted police were withdrawn from the streets. Many regiments which had been locked in their barracks mutinied during the night, killed some of their officers, and marched to defend the Duma, which was still sitting.

By Monday the disorganized riots developed into a systematic revolutionary movement on the part of the working men and the constantly growing numbers of mutinied troops, to capture the city of Petrograd. The fighting moved rapidly across the city from the Duma as a center, so that by Monday night, only isolated houses and public buildings, upon which machine guns were mounted, were held by the police and the few remaining loyal troops. At midnight the Duma had announced that it had taken the Government into its own hands and had formed an Executive Committee to be the head of the temporary Government.

Tuesday and Wednesday the fighting was confined to volleys from machine guns fired by the police from the isolated housetops, public buildings and churches, and the return fire by the soldiers, such fighting continuing until all police were taken. Violence necessary in arresting Government, army and police officials, took place at this time.

I shall make only a limited number of observations on the political situation leading up to the economic situation in this district, it being supposed that the Embassy has already cabled a report in the matter.

Immediately following the assumption of national authority by the Executive Committee of the Duma, the Council of Workmans' Deputies challenged its exclusive authority. This council is a body which existed secretly during the old régime and represented the revolutionary workmen. Spontaneously a third authority appeared in the Council of Soldiers' Deputies which soon merged with the workmans' council under the name of the Council of Workmens' and Soldiers' Deputies.

Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, (the 13th, 14th and 15th,) were, up to the present, the most critical times of the revolution, when there was immediate danger of civil war in Petrograd between the Duma and the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies. This crisis passed however, when, late on Thursday afternoon, a provisional agreement was reached. This agreement was based on a temporary Ministry chosen from the members of the Duma with a political program of eight points:

1. Immediate political amnesty.
2. Immediate freedom of press, speech, meeting, the right to strike; these rights to be extended to soldiers in so far as compatible with military organization.
3. Immediate abolition of all caste, religious and race disabilities.
4. Immediate preparation for a constitutional convention to determine the permanent form of National Government.
5. Immediate substitution of militia with elective officers, under control of local self-governing bodies in place of the old police system.
6. Election to local self-governing bodies by universal direct, equal and secret suffrage.
7. Retention of arms by the revolutionary soldiery, the soldiery not to be removed from Petrograd.
8. Retention of strict military discipline during actual service with full civil freedom to soldiers when not on duty.

On the 2d of March the Emperor abdicated for himself and for his son in favor of his brother, the Grand Duke Michael. On the 3d the Grand Duke Michael declined the throne unless it should be offered him by the Constitutional Convention. This again averted further civil war as it put all parties in agreement to await the Constitutional Convention.

The old police which was maintained by the National Government as a part of the Ministry of the Interior, has been replaced by the City Militia, a volunteer organization under the auspices of the National Duma and the Board of Aldermen. It is now maintaining order throughout the city and cooperating with the Commissariats in the various wards. The Commissariats are under the control of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies, which still sits in conjunction with the National Duma.

Passport regulations for foreigners have not been changed and are controlled by a new Gradonatchalnik (Chief of City or Chief of Police) who is now, as formerly, dependent on the Ministry of the Interior.

A new Mayor has been chosen by the Aldermen. He is attempting to control and improve the local food supply which is again the danger point as at the beginning of the revolution. All necessities have to be brought to Petrograd from the provinces and a serious food shortage now exists. If it is not relieved at once it will cause further serious disorders capable of developing into new revolutionary movements with greater socialistic tendencies than heretofore.

To-day, March 20, for the first time in ten days, a very few electric street cars are running but not enough to constitute a resumption of the service. The workmen have not returned to the factories as was hoped.

I have [etc.]

BOAZ W. LONG

[Inclosure—Translation—Extract]

This is what happened with the sister Republic of Nicaragua. Salvador, in view of the negotiations made by the Nicaraguan Government with the United States in concluding the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty, with which we are all acquainted, raised a voice of protest because it considered that its rights had been injured and its security and sovereignty threatened, and for this purpose a note of protest was sent to the Nicaraguan Government through two Cabinet mails.

Similarly, my Government being ever jealous of the high mission with which it is entrusted, namely, that of looking after the interests of the Nation and being desirous of defending its injured rights, filed a formal suit against the Nicaraguan Government before the Court of Central American Justice through Mr. Gregorio Martin, our diplomatic representative in Costa Rica, this suit being amplified later on according to instructions given to said official.

Recently, under date of November 20, Mr. Alonso Reyes Guerra was appointed attorney for Salvador before said Court in order to appear in this matter, which is of such transcendent importance because it involves the vindication of the rights which we claim.

As eloquently testified to by the history of our country, Salvador has at all times contributed toward defending the integrity of Central America whenever an attempt was made to occupy the coastal waters thereof for the purpose of establishing naval bases of powerful nations and this very Gulf of Fonseca is a witness of the consistency with which the most patriotic Salvadoran Governments of the past century endeavored to save its waters from British occupation.

It would therefore have betrayed the national spirit and traditions this time if it had looked with indifference upon the alienation of this maritime domain, which is the common patrimony of the three Central American nations that have peacefully possessed it from time immemorial.

The bonds of friendship which unite us with the Republic of North America have remained inalterable, whereby one of the points of my Government's program has been fulfilled, that is, the constant maintenance of a spirit of the most frank international cordiality.

¹Not printed.

To this end I take satisfaction in noting that Mr. Rafael Zaldívar, our Minister at Washington, is faithfully performing the delicate duties of his important mission with tact and ability, having contributed toward the successful bringing together of the two countries, which effort is being seconded here with so much skill by his excellency Mr. Boaz Long in his exalted capacity as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the great and prosperous North American Nation.

About 6.55 this evening seven earthquakes began and continued until about 8.45 with varying degrees of intensity when the volcano of San Salvador seemed to erupt and belch forth fire and smoke apparently on the side toward Quetzaltepeque. Since then one terrible shock has occurred but the tremors of the earth still continue with decreasing violence, meanwhile a steady shower of dry ash falls over this city. The damage done to the Legation building will render it uninhabitable, but all records and ciphers were safe a few moments ago when I entered the chancellery. All other city property appears [to] be practically untenable. One important central business section has been destroyed by fire which seems now to be under control. No deaths known to me at present. AMERICAN LEGATION,

San Salvador, June 11, 1917, 2 p. m.

Your telegram of ninth received this morning; immediately interviewed President Melendez who says Quetzaltepeque, Armenia, Santa Tecla and this city are centers of sections most affected by recent earthquakes; that sufficient food from other parts of Republic are being rushed to these places to satisfy present needs; that on account of damages to railway lines from Sitio del Nino to this capital, Government is opening cart road to connect with La Ceiba branch in order to establish communications with Acajutla and San Sonate where stores of necessities belonging to local merchants are waiting transportation here. He thinks there may be shortages of building lumber and corrugated iron roofing, stocks of both are being inventoried so as to gauge supply. Will advise later Government need for food, lumber, roofing. All vegetation looks scorched undoubtedly due to effect sulphurous acid fumes volcanic eruptions combining with moisture. Some fear this will make short crops, others that there will be no crops from sections affected.

President very grateful for telegrams from President Wilson and Red Cross, he tells me he answered both and referred our Red Cross offer to local organization.

Conference with President of Red Cross reveals necessity for general relief including money and materials with which to provide shelter; clothing, food and medicines are also needed from States. About twenty thousand destitute this city, now living streets and parks without adequate shelter. Rainy season just begun will last six months making conditions worse.

Corrugated iron is roofign best suited to this country but local stocks of this and all other roofings are practically exhausted. There should be sent from San Francisco on first ship leaving for La Libertad (Grace Line direct sailings are quickest, Pacific Mail has ship leaving San Francisco in a few days) two thousand sheets light gauge corrugated roofing nine feet long or equivalent in other lengths, nails for same and some sheets of thin tin for coping.

Lumber, six thousand two by four twelve feet long, three thousand narrow strips one inch by four approximately by sixteen feet long, three thousand ditto eight feet long, sufficient small and medium nails to construct shelters from above material.

Clothing, two thousand pairs blue drill overalls medium and small sizes, latter for undersized working men and youths, two hundred pieces American prints for tropical use destitute women, assorted thread and needles for two thousand sewing girls.

Food, poor people use mostly beans, corn, rice, flour and lard; any contributions these commodities very welcome especially tinned lard.

Medicines, quantities of quinine in tablets, also bismuth tincture, iodine, ipecac, aspirin, peramidon, castor oil, bichloride of mercury, magnesium sulphate, carbolic acid are much needed. More to follow.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
San Salvador, June 11, 1917, 3 p. m.

Continuation June 11, 2 p. m. Unprecedented demands have been made upon the Salvadorean Government due to earthquakes. Presumably much has been provided to relieve suffering but it is believed that reserves are disposed of as Government day before yesterday accepted fifteen thousand pesos from Salvador Red Cross leaving organization practically without funds.

I think it would be preferable to do initial relief work through natives or foreigners in good standing with the Salvadorean Government and propose upon your approval to tender Salvadorean Red Cross five to ten thousand dollars offered in your telegram under acknowledgment and such supplies as can be donated. Suggest that the American Red Cross place ten thousand dollars subject to my draft with Bloom Brothers, New York, or others so that same may be available immediately upon receipt of reply to this despatch. I will make it my duty to see that this amount along with supplies will go where they will do most good. Upon receipt favorable reply work can be commenced with local lumber which can be replaced by that to come from States in cases where local product cannot be bought. In addition to articles requested above quantities of double width canvas would serve as wall coverings for shelters.

Rain all last night and several hard tremors during this Tuesday morning keep populace under tension.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
San Salvador, June 13, 1917, 6 p. m.

Several hours after sending latter part my June 11, 2 p. m. member of Government told me there has been commission appointed to receive relief funds from whatever source derived, including Salvadorean Red Cross (which would probably limit its labors to medical attention, etc.) and that new commission would be pleased to receive contributions from the American Red Cross.

June 10 Government organized commissions to attend food, sanitation and construction. Present indications are that all these will work harmoniously.

Think that ten thousand dollars should be provided immediately. As this amount will be clearly inadequate strongly recommend that philanthropist fund of at least five thousand dollars and the supplies listed in my telegram of June 11, 2 p. m. be placed at my discretion. Dr. Spinden and a Mr. Morley will assist in administering same. This is to safeguard against possible inefficiency or partiality in native management. If the Department concurs moving [movable?] barracks will be constructed immediately upon receipt of favorable reply. As one unit of this would like one hundred wall tents with tarpaulins [tarpaulins?] from Nicaragua, Panama or quickest available source.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
San Salvador, June 16, 1917, 11 a. m.

So complete is the damage to structures in this city that owners now begin to realize the impossibility of makeshift repairs. Lumber is mostly hewn or whipsawn and commands high prices. Walls are constructed lattice-like with uprights of poles or scantlings and horizontal members of canes are used for lathing. They are then filled with mud and covered with adobe and plaster. The termites, or white ants, bore through the wooden frames, especially near the ground. The adobe and plaster are shaken out of the lattice by the earthquakes and the rotten supports give way, and let the heavy tile roofs come crashing to earth. Rebuilding is thus a necessity in most cases but large amount of money can alone make this possible. Local banks have their capital employed. The wealthy natives are hit by the loss of city property and coffee crops. The Government voted this week a million pesos partially to relieve the pressure.

[Extract]

No. 211

AMERICAN LEGATION,
San Salvador, July 7, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to report, in continuation of my despatch No. 208¹ which describes conditions following the earthquake of June 7, that comparatively little progress has been made toward the rehabilitation of destroyed portions of this city.

Limited indeed is the number of shelters finished, and given over to the needy. The slowness in providing adequate shelters for the poor now on the ground naturally serves as a discouragement to those others who fled the city following the recent seismic disturbances. There seems to be small chance that adequate shelters will be provided to accomodate all the homeless for a long time to come. The arrival of the roofing, lumber and supplies now on the way will ameliorate present conditions. But the problem of temporary quarters for those laborers whose presence is necessary for the rebuilding of the city probably will continue to be dealt with in haphazard fashion. Those who have no option but to remain will endure their hardships as best they may until the return of the dry season. In the interim many makeshift repairs are being made and minor building operations being undertaken but these follow the lines proven by the recent earthquake to be faulty.

¹Not printed.

Meanwhile the larger problem, that of permanently rebuilding the city is receiving scant consideration from the Government because it has no funds, and cannot count upon any in the near future.

The danger of epidemic is apparent. Malaria is rampant at the present time. Flies and mosquitos are much more common than usual and among the latter are stygomiæ, the carriers of yellow fever. Although no yellow fever is known to exist here it may be brought in by coastwise traffic and under the conditions might gain great headway before it could be checked. Fortunately in these matters of public sanitation I am able to rely upon the advice and assistance of Dr. Bailey of the Rockefeller Foundation. Leading local physicians who may be said to be somewhat predisposed to ignore such signs concur that precautionary measures should be taken. We may rest assured that anything done in this direction to reduce the dangers of epidemic would not lessen that effectiveness of present local Red Cross work.

A temporary and partial relief will no doubt come with the advent of ample material for building emergency quarters, but even so, far more money than that now in sight will be necessary to pay for the construction of such quarters and to give effective form and distribution to the materials being contributed by donors including the American Red Cross.

In addition there should come quickly from some source an amount of cash sufficient to drain the vast number of pest holes, mosquito breeding centers, and to place a film of oil over such as cannot be drained.

I have [etc.]

BOAZ W. LONG.

AMERICAN LEGATION,
San Salvador July 13, 1917, 8 p. m.

Your cable July 6, 3 p. m. In earlier telegrams bearing on relief of Salvador I suggested that a supplementary sum be placed at my discretion. It has now become apparent that such a fund of five to ten thousand dollars will alone make possible the immediate and effective use of these supplies. It is needed to cover cost of hauling from Acajutla to San Salvador part of which must be done by oxcart and will be very costly; expenses of labor and material in the putting up of tents and shelter houses and specially in providing floors, kitchens and other sanitary necessities that can hardly be left to the discretion of the natives, and also to give assistance to indigent American citizens.

Even the best drained tents are unsafe for habitation without some sort of flooring during the season of torrential rains. Very little lumber can be secured here for such flooring. I suggest therefore that the following be rushed here:

Three thousand boards, one by twelve by twelve for flooring and siding, 1,000 one by four by twelve for door and window frames, 1,000 feet tongue and groove four inch ceiling, two by fours necessary for placing these boards, all planed one side, 1,000 cheap cotton blankets, 10 fifty pound kegs white lead, boiled linseed oil sufficient to mix, and brushes to apply same, 20 rolls fine mesh narrow width screen cloth, 600 yards sail cloth for cots, 10 barrels chloride lime or other disinfectant, 3 cases Lifebuoy soap, 6 galvanized iron sinks, 12 water faucets half-inch. If tents sent have no tarpaulins the cotton cloth is needed to make same.

In granting free entry for the first supplies which arrived Acajutla day before yesterday President of the Republic expressed in name of the Government and people of Salvador most cordial thanks. Deep appreciation seems to be greatly felt.
